Crown Prince of Kingdom Acts as Explorer's Escort in Landing.

Thousands Struggle in Rain to Catch Glimpse of Famous American—Governments, Geographical and Scientific Societies the World Over Officially Recognize Achievement by Messages of Congratulation.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 4.—Dr. Frederick A. Cook stepped from the steamer Hans Egede in Copenhagen harbor on the arm of the Crown Prince of Denmark at 10 o'clock this morning, unshorn and looking like a sailor before the mast. He sat down to dinner at 8 o'clock this evening in the City Hall, the guest of a brilliant company of the capital's most distinguished men and women, arrayed in evening dress, provided by the King's tailor.

The hours between these events were the busiest of his life. Polar explorations never afforded anything half so crowded with variety and excitement. There were hours of speech-making, handshaking, bowing to clamoring crowds and then, after addressing the people, who almost tore him to pieces in their eagerness to see the discoverer of the pole, Dr. Cook was the recipient of formal welcomes at the hotel, where he is the government's guest.

There he passed through the hands of tailors, outfitters and barbers. Later he lunched with Dr. Maurice F. Egan, the American Minister, being plied incessantly for an hour with questions. He went through hundreds of telegrams, including congratulations from geographical societies of several nations, from explorers and from friends, offers of exploitation ranging from books to music hall entertainments, and then hurried to the palace and gave the King and other members of the royal family a long account of his adventures.

ANSWERS ALL QUESTIONS.

Returning to his hotel, he received a battalion of correspondents, who subjected him for an hour to a merciless cross-examination, demanding explanations of all criticisms that have been made against his claims. These questions Dr. Cook answered frankly and fully.

Whatever may be thought of Dr. Cook elsewhere, he has impressed all who talked with him here as a modest, straightforward and able man.

Danish explorers—and Denmark is the home of Arctic pioneers—were the first to indorse Cook's claims to the discovery of the pole, and his methods of getting to the goal. Their opinions were based primarily on personal knowledge of Dr. Cook's character and former achievements. Only after consulting them confidentially and receiving the fullest pronouncement of their belief in the genuineness of his feat, did the Danish government, by today's reception, give its official seal to Dr. Cook's good faith.

The banquet this evening was held in the magnificent municipal buildings. Four hundred persons, many of them Americans, attended, while thousands congregated in the streets in a drenching rainstorm to catch sight of the explorer when he entered.

There was a preliminary reception in the lofty and spacious entrance hall. The company marched upstairs to the air of the "Star Spangled Banner." After all had been seated, the Minister of Commerce, Johan Hansen, escorted Dr. Cook to the chair of honor, amid a demonstration which caused the explorer to color deeply.

Minister Egan sat at Dr. Cook's right side, with the Mayor of Copenhagen and Miss Egan beyond. Mrs. Gamel, a wealthy Copenhagen lady, who has contributed extensively to Arctic exploration, and has been closely identified with it, was at the chairman's left. The menu was an example of enterprise, with a lithograph of the Crown Prince greeting Dr. Cook and a map of the Arctic circle giving Dr. Cook's route and a facsimile of his autograph, with the date. This was a reproduction of a souvenir he gave Miss Egan.

MANY COMPLIMENTS.

The speeches teemed with compliments to Dr. Cook. The Mayor of Copenhagen said that a name was once more enrolled among the great explorers.

Minister Egan briefly proposed a toast to the King of Denmark, and the Corporation President, in proposing a toast to the President of the United States, spoke of the pride that must be felt by the nation that could boast that it was her son who first placed her flag where no human being had ever before set foot.

The Minister of Commerce, in proposing the health of Dr. Cook, paid a warm tribute to "his noble deed." He thanked him for spending a little time in Denmark, and said that the privations of the explorer were appreciated most by the men of Denmark there tonight whose names are written with honor on the icy rocks of Denmark's northern colony.

When the nation was first thrilled by the news of Cook's exploit, he said, he must confess there was some skepticism, but afterward it was confirmed and he hoped that Dr. Cook would try for the South Pole with the same success.

When the minister raised his glass to "our noblest," there were nine hurrahs.

Commodore Hovgaard spoke from the standpoint of an expert explorer, and commended Dr. Cook's methods.

Dr. Cook replied briefly:

DR. COOK'S TALK.

"I thank you very much for the warm and eloquent words, but I am unable to express myself properly. It was a rather hard day for me, but I never enjoyed a day better. The Danes have taken no active part in Polar explorations, but they have been of much importance as silent partners in almost all Arctic expeditions in recent years. The most important factor in my expedition was the Eskimo

STEAD GOT A LOOK AT HIM.

Hearst Star Reporter Says Cook Is All Right, That's All.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] William T. Stead, who was sent by the Hearst papers to interview Dr. Frederick Cook, seems to have had some trouble getting through the crowds. He devotes much space to descriptions of the crowds, and to his former experiences as an interviewer, but finally gets down to the work in hand, in the following sentence:

"You sent me to Copenhagen to meet Dr. Cook, I have obeyed instructions and met him on the door-step of Europe. This is my report:

"Cook is all right. You can bank upon that—right physically and right geographically. He has been to the North Pole and will prove it. Those casting doubt upon his veracity will look pretty mean when his records are published."

Then follows many, many words about the crowds, which appear to have separated the interviewer from his quarry.

MONTEREY FLOOD MAY PROVE A BLESSING.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MONTEREY (Mexico) Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Although the flood cost many hundreds of lives in Monterey and adjacent villages, it is believed here that it will prove a blessing in disguise, in that it will tend to allay whatever feeling of political unrest there has been in Northern Mexico. In casting up accounts with the big flood, and debating a big loss, it should be borne in mind that the rains which caused the floods have been of inestimable benefit to Northern Mexico as a whole. The preceding drouth was of long duration, and the people were discouraged. The rains have given them a new chance with the only kind of prosperity the average Mexican knows.

Indifferent as many of the inhabitants seem to be regarding the loss of lives in the inundated territory, they are mellowed in thought by the disaster. Their minds have been drawn away from any idea of making trouble. Thousands of men will go back from the industrial centers to the haciendas confident now that the soaking of the soil will enable them to coax a living therefrom. It takes a very little prosperity, measured by the standard of the American States, to bring contentment to the Mexican tiller of the soil.

One of the surprises which have followed the flood was the prompt and generous help which has been extended by the Mexicans to their own suffering fellowmen. Saltillo, Tampico, Mexico City, Guadalajara and other cities have sent liberal contributions in money, and have asked how else they can be of service. The whole spirit of the thing shows that there is a community of interest and sym-

Commander of Danish Royal Yachts Sees Cook's Journal and Is Satisfied.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 4.—Commodore Hovgaard, the commander of the royal yachts, and one of the foremost of Denmark's Arctic explorers, had an opportunity today of examining Dr. Cook's journals.

Later he said to the Associated Press: "I noticed certain inaccuracies in the newspaper reports of the expedition, but a long conversation with Dr. Cook has convinced me that his statements are absolutely reliable. His replies to my questions were clear and precise, and left no doubt in my mind.

"I did not have sufficient time to read the diary, but from my brief inspection thereof, I obtained the firm impression that the doctor's claim of having reached the North Pole is correct. Naturally, I cannot place the official seal of acceptance on Dr. Cook's achievement; that is for the head of his country to do. Cook has cabled the President of the United States. We are now awaiting Mr. Taft's reply, and we hope it will express official recognition."

REAL BOOZE FROM SAWDUST.

SCIENTIST GETS DRINKABLE ALCOHOL FROM WOOD.

After Five Years Experimenting Process Found That Bids Fair to Drive Gasoline Out of Use for Automobiles and Compete With Grain Spirits.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Drinkable alcohol from sawdust.

This is the latest triumph in chemistry, according to a statement made public today by John M. Ewen, Chicago Harbor Commissioner and widely known as an engineer. After five years of almost incessant experimenting a process for making an alcohol said to be as pure as that obtained from grain has been patented in Washington by Malcom F. Ewen, brother of Mr. Ewen, and George H. Tomlinson, formerly one of the engineers for F. H. Clergue at Sault Ste. Marie.

The Ewens and Mr. Tomlinson are of the belief that their process will revolutionize fuel and illuminating conditions in several aspects. They declare that sawdust alcohol will not only become a competitor of grain alcohol for beverage and industrial purposes, but that it will drive gasoline out of use for automobiles, motor boats and lighting. They also believe that sawdust alcohol will be largely used instead of coal for engines and that it will keep kerosene off the market as an illuminant.

The reason that the owners of the sawdust alcohol process think their alcohol is to come into such general use is that the cost of production is so cheap. They state that the sawdust alcohol can be produced for about 7 cents a gallon, as against a cost for grain alcohol of approximately 35 cents per gallon.

SPIRITUALISTS ELECT.

Resolution Criticises Manner in Which State Administers Its Charity Funds.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN JOSE, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The big feature of this morning's session of the annual meeting of the California State Spiritualists' Association, the election of officers, was postponed until tonight on account of the large amount of other work that forced itself upon the meeting.

The following officers were elected tonight:

President, C. A. Buss of San Diego; vice-president, Mrs. Mary Wells of San Francisco; secretary, Mrs. Mary E. Vlasek of Los Angeles; treasurer, Mrs. Nettie Howell of Los Angeles; directors, George H. Brooks of Los Angeles, A. W. Belden of San Diego, Mrs. Secor of San Francisco, A. McDonald of San José and A. S. Howe of San José. Delegates to the annual national convention of spiritualists to be held the first week in October at Rochester, N. Y., were elected as follows: Jesse L. Hunt of Escondido, Mrs. M. E. Howe, San José; Mrs. R. S. Lillie, Santa Barbara; Ezra Foster, Escondido; Mrs. R. S. Cowell, Oakland; Miss Agnes Newman, Pasadena; Mrs. Mary Wells, San Francisco; George H. Brooks, Los Angeles, and A. L. Belden, San Diego.

Resolutions were passed by the body. One of these resolutions was a criticism of the way in which the State carries on its eleemosynary institutions. It was stated that California used annually $420,000 for the care of the poor, the homeless and the sick and that if this money was properly expended it would do a vast amount of good. Another resolution denounced the saloon as the greatest evil of the day.

KNOCKS.

MRS. FISH TOO BUSY.

Not Interested In Suffrage.

"Woman Who Dares Be Natural" Denies Reports of Her Allegiance.

Work and Ideals of Suffragettes Matter of no Consequence.

Admires Mrs. Julia Howe, But Does Not Care to Be Converted.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEWPORT (R. I.) Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, one of the wittiest and wealthiest of the "400" with the sobriquet of "the woman who dares to be natural," peremptorily declares: "I take absolutely no interest in the question of women's suffrage." She is much too busy as it is, she says.

Mrs. Fish has attended both of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont's meetings at Marble House. Moreover, it was recently reported that she had offered to give a luncheon at her own magnificent residence, during which the cause of women's suffrage would be specially discussed.

"Nonsense," she exclaimed, when asked as to the date of that interesting luncheon party. "I cannot imagine how such a report came to be circulated. I certainly have no such plan in mind, for the work and ideals of the suffragists are matters of no consequence to me.

"I went to Mrs. Belmont's house because she is a friend and asked me to come. I did not go because I have any leaning toward the cause which she is at present championing.

ADMIRES MRS. HOWE.

"I think that Rev. Anna H. Shaw is a very clever and able woman. And of course all Americans admire and revere Mrs. Howe. But intellectual admiration for the sincerity and skill of captains of a crusade does not necessarily infer immediate enrollment for a march against the infidels.

"One may even be an infidel and feel not the slightest desire for conversion.

"That certainly is my attitude at present in the matter of women's suffrage. I am not a suffragist and I don't in the least want to be one.

"And that seems to me to be the attitude of a great many women. Certainly it is the most logical explanation of the widespread indifference of the majority of women toward the struggle some few earnest souls are waging in their behalf. For the average woman doesn't even make suffrage enough of an issue to formally declare herself an 'anti,' she simply doesn't care, because she does care about so many other things, which seem to her much more important and vital.

WIVES AND MOTHERS.

"We women are wives and mothers, most of us. And the day is not long enough for us to fulfill completely the requirements of these positions. Why, then, should we even desire to be politicians likewise?

"When I speak of women as wives and mothers I do not mean to use the terms in their merely physical significance. That, possibly, was once the implication. But now such a narrow limited meaning is impossible.

"I should be the last to deny the American wife and mother the possession and the use of brains. The more she has the better for her family, because the more intensely and ably devoted to the interests of her husband and children she'll inevitably become.

"Woman owes a duty to her fellow-women, the suffragettes argue. Yes, but she owes a duty to her home, and most women seem to consider that duty paramount.

"A woman's first duty is to her home, and her second duty is to her home, and likewise her third and fourth duties, and several others. And if she performs them all faithfully, I do not think she'll have any time to devote to the duties of the suffragist."

SUES HIS CREDITOR.

Debtor Says Agents for Money Lender Drove Wife Insane—Asks Heavy Damages.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS (Mo.) Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Edward Norris filed suit in the Circuit Court for $50,000 against John H. Vette, a money lender, alleging that agents of the latter had caused his wife to go insane in their attempts to collect a debt which Norris owed. Mrs. Norris, the petition states, has completely lost her reason as result of an invasion of her home last June, when a man representing Vette went there and tried to move the furniture from the house to satisfy a debt of $55.

Agents for Vette called at the Nor- of three notes, the instrument relates, of three notes, the instrument relates, and when the plaintiff said he could not settle, the men declared their intention to levy on the furniture at once. Mrs. Norris was thrown into a high nervous state by the actions of the men. Their visit has had a lasting effect on her and she exhibits moments of extreme irritation.

CONFIDENT.

COOK ANSWERS ALL QUESTIONS.

Meets Doubting Englishman With Proofs.

Brings Back Same Evidence as Other Explorers.

Explains How He Succeeded in Reaching Pole.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 5, 1 a.m.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The special correspondent of Lloyd's London weekly, this morning wired his paper the following interview with Dr. Frederick A. Cook, discoverer of the North Pole: After explaining how he reached Copenhagen and got to Dr. Cook through the crowds, the correspondent says he approached the explorer and said:

"Cook, I believe."

He smiled and said: "Guess you're the first Englishman to give me greeting."

"Yes," I said, "and England will give you an enthusiastic welcome and hail you as one of the great heroes, if you will just answer a few questions to satisfy us on some difficult points."

"Ah," he said, "I thought you would begin to ask questions, but I'm ready to answer them."

"What evidence can you bring," I said, "to show that you have actually reached the North Pole? Where are your proofs?"

"I bring," he answered, "the same proofs as every other explorer. I bring my story. Do you doubt that when Shackleton and Peary came home you believed what they told you? Why then should you disbelieve me?"

"Oh, pardon me," I said, "I don't disbelieve. I merely want to inquire what scientific evidence you have as well as your story."

"I can prove my story bona fide," replied the doctor quietly.

SERIES OF OBSERVATIONS.

He had taken a series of consecutive observations, he explained, from 88 degrees to the pole in order to determine his position. He had not gone out unprepared, and was provided with all the usual instruments for the purpose. These observations, taken day by day, were sufficient in themselves to prove his claims, he said. He had only made fifteen miles a day, drifting very slowly, and any navigating officer, he said, would understand that there was no difficulty in ascertaining a very accurate position.

"That is very good," I said. "Then doubtless you have these records with you. You have not lost them?"

"Oh, no," Dr. Cook replied. He had not lost any of them but he had sent off most of his books to America from Greenland.

"Why did Francke return in 1908?"

"I sent him a message telling him to go back. It was sent from [illegible], 300 miles away. I realized that there might be considerable danger in returning the same way, and I expected to be carried by the ice drift to East Greenland. Francke was waiting for me in West Greenland, and that is why I told him to return."

"How did you know the exact date on which you say you reached the pole? It must have been rather difficult, as you had lost touch with time?"

"We fixed the date by carrying it with us, and by my daily calculations."

"Where is this land in the neighborhood of the pole, which you describe as a happy hunting ground for sportsmen?"

"It came as a great surprise to most Arctic explorers, naturally," answered Dr. Cook, "but it is not in the neighborhood of the pole, and I haven't said so. I discovered an unknown land between 84 and 85 deg., 300 miles from the pole, and here and there were musk oxen, bears and birds, which we shot at, but there was no trace of life at all in the air, on the ice, or below the ice, beyond 85 deg. There was nothing at all living," said Dr. Cook, "at the North Pole."

SPEAKS ESKIMO TONGUE.

"One paper," I said, "makes the impertinent suggestion that you do not speak the Eskimo language, and that in any case the evidence of the Eskimo is utterly worthless."

"It is not true," said Dr. Cook. "I speak Eskimo as well as I speak German. That is pretty well, and enough to carry on a conversation in the ordinary way. I also regard the Eskimos as an intelligent and cultured people."

"It is, of course, impossible," I said, "that you could have covered thirty thousand square miles. That must have been wrongly put in your first message?"

"What I did," he said, "was to strike a straight line to the pole, and come back down another straight line."

"Prodigious!" I exclaimed. "Tell me, Dr. Cook, how did you manage to travel over ice lands at a rate which beats all previous records, taking only three months for your final dash to the pole, whereas it took you nine months to come back over the same distance. There is something very strange about that."

"Not at all," he said calmly. "I traveled toward the pole at an average rate of fifteen miles a day. I could have done thirty, and did do such on some days, but on others I was retarded. Ask any Danish explorers and they will tell you there is nothing unusual about that."

In answering the objections of scientists, explorers and others, Dr. Cook said, to the charge that it is not possible for a sledge to make fifteen miles a day, "I have done it."

"There was no game above Hyberg Island," the doctor continued, "but we found bear and seal tracks some distance beyond it."

"I am absolutely certain that our astronomical and other observations were right," said Dr. Cook in answer to another question, "for we had every known scientific instrument, all modern—three chronometers and a watch. Moreover, many observations were made during the two days we remained at the pole."

"Then you are sure you found the pole?" he was asked.

ABSOLUTELY SURE.

"Absolutely. While there was no land, only floating ice, I am confident that I was not a gunshot out of the way of what the Eskimos call the 'Big Nail.' Why should I come here to Scandinavia with a monumental fake. I have nothing to gain and everything to lose. I am not doing this thing for money or for sport, but because I have always been interested in Arctic and Antarctic explorations."

"How did you place the Stars and Stripes there, Dr. Cook?"

"In a tin tube, which was embedded in the ice."

SOME NEW WORLD'S RECORDS RECORDED IN LAST TEN DAYS.

IN THE air, on the ocean, under the waters and on top of land, some important world's records have been established during the last ten days. Some of the chief exploits are as follows:

Aug. 27—Henri Farman breaks long distance flying record in heavier than air machine, being up 3 hours, 14 minutes, 26 2-5 seconds, and flying a distance of 118.06 miles.

Aug. 28—Glenn H. Curtiss flies 12 2-5 miles in 15 minutes, 50 3-5 seconds.

Aug. 30—United States submarine boat Narwhal breaks submarine speed records.

Sept. 1—Dr. Frederick Albert Cook of Brooklyn, N. Y., announces discovery of the North Pole on April 21, 1908.

Sept. 2—Cunard liner steamship, the Lusitania, breaks trans-Atlantic record, covering distance between Daunt's Rock out of Queenstown and Ambrose Channel lightship in 4 days, 11 hours and 42 minutes, an average speed of 25.85 knots an hour.

DANES WELCOME COOK.

and dog world, and I cannot be too thankful to the Danes for their care of the Eskimo, and know they also have instituted a mission at Cape York. Had I not met with the right Eskimos and the right dogs and the right provisions, I could never have reached the pole. I owe much to the Danish nation for my success."

A telegram was read conveying the congratulations of the King of Sweden "for a brilliant deed of which American people may be rightfully proud."

Toasts to Dr. Cook and to the Eskimos of the party were drunk. Two hundred students in uniform marched in when the company returned to the grand hall, and gave Dr. Cook a rousing cheer. They insisted upon a speech and sang songs. A noteworthy feature of the banquet, after Dr. Cook's acceptance in the morning, was that the applications for seats ran into the thousands.

TALKS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The most detailed account of his polar journey as yet given by Dr. Cook was gained from him by a large body of newspaper correspondents this evening at the Hotel Phoenix. Dr. Cook, at the request of the correspondents, consented to answer all questions.

First, he was asked whether or not the first account of his discovery of the pole could be accepted as entirely his own work. He replied in the affirmative except for the obvious errors in transmission. He then explained the doubt about the 30,000 square miles discovered, saying that he meant that they were able to see fifteen miles on each side during their journey to the pole, and that, therefore, a hitherto unknown territory of 30,000 square miles was now discovered.

Dr. Cook proceeded to show that he was fully competent to take all observations, saying that on previous exploring expeditions he did very little observation work, which usually was divided among the members of the party.

"This time," he continued, "we had started out to reach the pole, and everything else was of secondary consideration. It was not possible to carry certain apparatus, and it was impossible, also, to study the deep sea or the soundings.

HAD NEEDED INSTRUMENTS.

"We carried all necessary simple instruments for astronomical observations, and we were very lucky to obtain observations virtually every day. The positions noted must have been nearly correct. We had three chronometers, one watch, compasses and pedometers. All were carefully controlled by each other from time to time. The watch, however, got out of order.

"We had all the modern instruments which other explorers have had, including thermometers, barometers and sextants of the latest models. It is possible that our observations were better than those of early days, but I do not assert that I am perfectly familiar with making astronomical observations, especially in the polar regions. I think that all explorers will be satisfied with my data.

"Why should I sit down and invent observations?" he exclaimed. "I did not do this thing for anything but sport, and because I take a real interest in the problem. It would not do me any good to invent these things. The only witnesses I had were two Eskimos, certainly, but in all polar expeditions observations have been made by one man. I regard the Eskimo as much more intelligent in finding positions than the white man in the Arctic. These people, as a rule, are not absolutely ignorant. They know that the earth is round. They have a name for the pole which they call the 'big nail.' They appreciate the work of explorers when participating therein.

"I think Rasmussen has obtained some information regarding my expedition from the Eskimos, who have learned it from the two with me. Rasmussen was there much later and his information will be published shortly, possibly tomorrow.

"Concerning the ice around the pole, so far as I could see, it was slightly more active there than at one or two degrees south. It drifted somewhat more to the south and east. Its general character is not very different from that at other places. We stayed around the pole for two days making observations.

"I don't claim to have put my finger on the exact spot; I do not claim to have put my foot on it, but personally I think we have been at the spot. When the observations have been figured out again it is possible that there will be found slight errors and differences, but I am certain that a gun shot fired from where we were would have passed over the pole.

PLANTS STARS AND STRIPES.

"We planted the Stars and Stripes at what we believed to be the pole, but did not leave the flag with a staff. Instead I placed a small silk flag in a cylinder with my card and record of the journey with the date. The drift ice may carry the flag away, but to me that is a matter of indifference. I should have been very glad to have found land there.

"I am quite prepared to place my observations before any geographical society in the world. I think there is no doubt about my obtaining authoritative recognition. I have already received telegrams from the geographical societies of Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Belgium and other countries, which congratulate me, while Amundsen, Nordenskjold, Cagni and Lecointe have acknowledged my work. I offer my observations to science the same as other men have done, and I accept the responsibility.

PHOTOGRAPHS "POLE."

"As to the temperature at the pole. It was minus thirty-eight. I took about 400 photographs, one of which shows the American flag flying. These as yet have not been developed."

Questioned regarding his great speed, Dr. Cook said:

"The daily distance covered on the northward trip was slightly less than fifteen miles; on the southward trip it was ten miles. This is not abnormal distance for Eskimos on the ice. They often travel fifty or sixty miles with dogs. One of the greatest advantages of our trip was that I did not take a famine route. We had game for a long time, perhaps for 100 miles. We fed our dogs well throughout the winter in Greenland and ran them 400 miles, giving them fresh meat every day. Thus we brought them to the polar sea fat and well. We had the best men and the best dogs.

"We lived entirely on dried meat and beef tallow, reducing the problem to its simplest form. The last trace of animals we saw was a bear track at 83 deg. Afterward we did not even see life in the water, except algae. The drift of the ice during the entire southern trip was slightly south of east; the direction of the wind was generally south of west. We found several of Sverdrup's old camps. The reason we utilized silk tents on some occasions was that we were so exhausted that we had not strength to build a snow shed. We had carefully figured and planned everything so that there was no surplus weight to carry.

"We did not run short except when we went astray.

HAS HAD ENOUGH.

"We brought ten dogs back with us, the others being eaten by their companions. We used the lasso, traps and bows and arrows to catch game. It took two months to learn how to trap a moose. One of the men shot an elder duck with arrows."

Dr. Cook concluded his observations with a reference to the kind way he had been treated by the King, who was greatly interested in his adventures. He stated that he is going to New York as soon as possible. He will remain here for a few days and then will proceed to Brussels, where he is a member of the Polar Club. He assured his hearers that he did not want to go to the pole again, either north or south.

Speaking to the representative of the Associated Press, Dr. Cook said he left at the North Pole an American flag and a box containing documents, including a brief account of his trip and certain observations, and the data to bear out his claim. Capt. Larsen of the Hans Egede said he had examined Dr. Cook's records, and believed them to be perfectly correct.

In the course of the interview with the Associated Press representative on board the Hans Egede, Dr. Cook declared with great emphasis:

"I have been to the North Pole, and I have brought back the most exact observations absolutely proving my statement. I have kept a diary throughout my entire expedition, in which I recorded the most minute details."

The moment the anchor was dropped the Crown Prince sprang up the gangway.

CHEERED BY CROWDS.

Dr. Cook at the same time appeared at the head of the ladder. The people in the surrounding boats, who had expected from the newspaper pictures to see a bearded man, recognized the explorer for the first time, and sent up a loud cheer.

Prince Christian, who is a tall and handsome young man, wore a silk hat and frock coat. He grasped the hand of the shabby explorer, and congratulated him on his achievement, and welcomed him warmly in the name of the Danish nation, and the Geographical Society, of which the Prince is president.

Prince Valdemar, brother of King Frederick, in an admiral's uniform, accompanied by a party of naval officials, city officials, delegates from societies, and the Minister of Commerce, followed the Crown Prince up the side of the steamer, and the explorer was almost smothered in the friendly group of uniforms and officials in black coats and silk hats.

"Did you reach the North Pole, Dr. Cook?" asked the correspondent of the Associated Press.

"Yes, I did," replied Dr. Cook.

After much hand shaking, Crown Prince Christian said to the explorer.

"Come ashore with me, please; the people are waiting to see you."

Dr. Cook said something about his baggage.

"My people will look after your baggage," the Crown Prince said, and then took Dr. Cook to the royal launch.

When the launch approached the pier with Prince Christian and Dr. Cook by his side, a tremendous roar of cheers burst out from the people on shore, and from the assemblage of small craft, including yachts, motor boats, landing boats from the Russian warship in the harbor and racing shells, clustered thickly about the pier.

WORSE THAN FOOTBALL.

Dr. Cook stepped ashore and in an instant the police were powerless to make a way for the party. Dr. Cook and those about him were engulfed and swept along by a clamorous crowd. Maurice Egan, the American Minister, and the Danish officials literally clung to Dr. Cook. Together the party fought its way desperately to a point near the meteorological building. Dr. Cook was bruised and capless, and part of the sleeve of his coat was torn off.

"I used to be a football player but this is the worst I ever saw," he pented.

Dr. Cook and Mr. Egan finally succeeded in reaching a balcony of the institute. The people crowding the streets and the adjoining park yelled frantically when they appeared. Mr. Egan waved his hand toward Dr. Cook as an introduction, whereupon the explorer made a brief address in English.

"My friends," he said. "I have had too hard a time getting here to make a speech. I can only say that I consider it an honor to be able to put my foot first on Danish soil."

After more cheers, Commodore Hovgaard took Dr. Cook in a carriage and drove with him through the crowded streets to the Phoenix Hotel, where he will be the guest of the Geographical Society.

The hallways of the hotel were decorated with American flags and masses of flowers. Johan Hansen, the Minister of Commerce and a committee of the Geographical Society gave a reception to Dr. Cook at the hotel. The Minister made a speech of welcome in which he said:

"Before retiring to your much-needed rest, Dr. Cook, I hope you will give us an opportunity of bidding you welcome to Denmark. I thank you on behalf of my countrymen for the noble deeds which you so successfully have performed."

HONORED GUEST.

The Minister then invited Dr. Cook, on behalf of the government, the municipality and the Geographical Society, "as our honored guest" to a banquet tonight at the town hall. Dr. Cook thanked the Minister briefly, "for the very kind reception you already have granted in Denmark and with which I feel most delighted."

Minister Hansen, over a bottle of champagne, then led in "three cheers and a long life for Dr. Cook."

The members of the Reception Committee withdrew and were succeeded by a numerous delegation of tailors, bootmakers and barbers. The explorer placed himself in their hands and several tradesmen were at work on him at the same time.

At the end of an hour Dr. Cook emerged with his hair neatly trimmed, his mustache cropped close and in a new suit, hat and boots. He then went to the American legation and had luncheon with Minister Egan.

Dr. Cook will stay in Copenhagen for a few days as the guest of the government, awaiting the arrival of his wife. He will then go to Belgium.

Minister Hansen talked freely with the representative of the Associated Press regarding the authenticity of Dr. Cook's exploit. He said:

HIS RIVALS BELIEVE.

"Our two foremost Danish Arctic explorers, Amundsen and Rasmussen, know Dr. Cook personally, and they have assured us that they believe explicitly every word he says about his achievement. Their word is as good as gold with us on such questions."

Daugaard Jensen, the Danish inspector of North Greenland, and the highest official in that region, who spent two months in the company of Dr. Cook, is satisfied regarding the reliability of Dr. Cook's statement that he reached the North Pole.

Apart from his own observations, Inspector Jensen conferred with the Danish polar explorer, Knud Rasmussen, who obtained from the Cape York Eskimos a description of Dr. Cook's journey. Rasmussen is the only European who fully understands the language of the Cape York Eskimos, from among whom Dr. Cook's companions were selected.

Rasmussen told Jensen that the stories of these Eskimos confirmed Dr. Cook in all the external details of his narrative. They corroborated the statement that the journey ended quite voluntarily, no ice or other obstacles preventing its continuance.

REPLY TO CRITICS.

Dr. Cook's reply to his critics is as follows: He has the records of his expedition together with certain scientific data and proofs which he will submit to the world of science for its judgment. He is confident the verdict will be a substantiation of his claims.

Questioned on the skepticism regarding his story arising from the fact that he was the only white man to take bearings and observations as well as

NAUTICAL EXPERT EXPLAINS HOW TO LOCATE THE POLE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] How Dr. Frederick A. Cook could have discovered the North Pole with two small instruments was explained today by J. A. McAleer, nautical expert in the United States Hydrographic office in Chicago, who declared that these two instruments would be absolutely necessary if the region about the pole is covered with mountainous ice. Although chronometers and a compass would be of aid to the North Pole explorer, Mr. McAleer said these instruments are not necessary and that the calculations required to determine the point where the pole is situated can be obtained by use of a sextant and an artificial horizon.

"The sextant and artificial horizon would be necessary to make such a discovery as is claimed for Dr. Cook," said Mr. McAleer.

"It is understood that the explorer had no artificial horizon," was suggested.

"Well," said Mr. McAleer, "I should not think an explorer would go in search of the pole without one. Of course if the ice were bald ice—smooth like a lake or ocean surface, so as to make a natural horizon—the artificial horizon would not be required.

"The sextant is used in measuring the altitude of the sun and in determining the location of the axis pole. The artificial horizon, a small affair eight inches in length, would be used with the sextant. With these instruments could be determined the rising and setting of the sun and as soon as the explorer reached the point where the instruments registered no rising or lowering of the sun he would know he had reached the axis pole. The sun would register as going evenly around the horizon."

WAR PRACTICE.

CRUISERS OFF ON LONG TRIP.

Warlike Squadron Sails for Far East Today.

Eight of Fastest Fighting Ships in Navy.

Will Engage in Battle in Philippine Waters.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—Stripped of every vestige of coastwise comfort and attired in full war paint, dull gray, the first squadron of the Pacific fleet, comprising eight of the fastest fighting ships in the American navy, will steam through the Golden Gate at 3 p.m., Sunday on the first leg of an eight months' cruise to the Far East.

Each of the ships is an armored cruiser and with two exceptions each is equipped with eighteen guns, in the main battery, and each is of over 13,600 tons burden.

Two, the Tennessee and Washington, have twenty guns each in the main battery, and are of 14,500 tons burden. Every ship has 23,000 horsepower.

The object of the voyage is to test the efficiency of the vessels in the work for which they were constructed—to make cruises of any length at the highest possible speed while maintaining a maximum of fighting strength.

According to Rear-Admiral Uriel Sebree, who will command the squadron, the cruisers will steam to Honolulu at 18 knots an hour. After remaining at the islands for three weeks they will proceed to the Admiralty Islands at 12½ knots, take on 12,000 tons of coal and resume the 18-knot speed to Manila.

They are due in the Philippines November 1, when they will begin a month's battle practice. The third squadron of five protected cruisers and seven gunboats, in command of Rear-Admiral Giles B. Harber, will join them there.

December 1 the first squadron will be separated into four parts. The Tennessee, flagship, and the Washington will go to Shanghai and two each to Kobe, Hongkong and Yokohama. At the end of two weeks the vessels will exchange positions, remaining in Chinese and Japanese waters until January, when they will reassemble at Manila for the return trip.

Great care has been taken since the arrival of the ships from Seattle, August 31, to equip them for the cruise, as an effort will be made to establish new long-distance sailing records, and the squadron will be tested from every naval standpoint.

Excluding the North Carolina, Montana and the Brooklyn, the squadron under Sebree's command, represents the entire armored cruiser strength of the navy, and is the fleet that would be assembled for a swift service cruise in case of war. Consequently its achievements on the coming voyage will be watched with great interest by the naval experts.

The vessels are the Tennessee, Washington, California, South Dakota, West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania and Colorado.

PICTURESQUE SCENE.

JAPANESE DAY AT SEATTLE BRINGS HOST OF ORIENTALS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SEATTLE (Wash. Sept. 4.—Never outside of Asia have so many Japanese been assembled as were gathered in the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition grounds today to celebrate Japanese Day. Seven thousand of the Emperor's subjects live in and near Seattle, and nearly all of them visited the fair at some time during the day.

In the two parades, through the city streets and the national pageant through the fair grounds, the mixing of old and new Japan was somewhat incongruous, but everything was picturesque.

The city parade was led by a mounted Samurai warrior in a suit of mail and a white bandage about his head, looking like a picture from the Middle Ages. Close upon his heels came dozens of automobiles carrying dignified brown men wearing frock coats and high hats. The young women in automobiles that followed the commissioners were dressed and acted like American girls.

The Japanese are as fond of making and listening to speeches as the Americans, and the commercial commissioners spent nearly half the afternoon in the expositio auditorium exchanging expressions of good will with their American hosts. Every speech, English or Japanese, was translated.

Baron Shibusawa, the principal speaker for the Japanese today, said:

"Japan in the last fifty years has sent to America two important diplomatic missions. The first, in 1860, a large party or more than fifty, met with a grand reception which is still remembered in Japan. The other, in 1871, had more than fifty members, and also was warmly welcomed. These missions did much to promote good feeling and trade between the countries, but the present occasion is the first when Japan has sent a strictly commercial delegation to America. Whereas, the two important missions just mentioned were sent by the government of Japan, the present one is sent by the people, and its object is to complete and consolidate for all time the relations of good neighbors and friendship, so well promoted by the two political missions. Its object, to be more precise, is to lay the foundations of friendly relations between the two countries on the sure basis of commerce and mutual interest.

"Only four days have passed since our party arrived in Seattle, but we have received such undeniable marks of good will and courtesy toward us and our country on the part of Americans of all classes, that it seems the whole people of the United States had formed themselves into a committee of reception. This convinces us that the success of the mission is desired not only by the Japanese people, but by the whole people of America."

At 5 o'clock there was a spectacular display of daylight fireworks. Later the commissioners were entertained at dinner in the New York building by citizens of Seattle. Afterwards they were guests of honor at a reception in the Washington State building, and at 10 o'clock an elaborate fireworks display began, the most gorgeous feature of which depicted the fall of Port Arthur.

The commissioners are anxious to get into their special train. Some of them complain of too much entertainment and too little sleep.

TWELVE GIRLS ON TRIP.

VOTED MOST POPULAR.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—Twelve young women of this city, winners in a voting contest conducted by a committee in charge of the Portola festival to be held October 19-23, were passengers on the steamer Governor, which sailed today for Seattle.

They will be the guests of the committee on a trip through the Northwest, including the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition.

The members of the party are employés of leading firms selected by a popular voting contest conducted through the columns of local newspapers.

After luncheon at a downtown hotel, the party was driven to the dock in a tallyho. The Governor was gaily decorated from stem to stern in red and yellow, the Portola colors.

The young women will occupy the choicest staterooms, including the bridal suite.

During the voyage up the coast another voting contest will be held among the passengers to determine the three most popular girls on board.

MATRIMONIAL BUREAUS BAD.

EVIDENCE IN PORTLAND.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PORTLAND, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Matrimonial agencies in Portland are to be closed by law if a campaign started by the Women's Auxiliary of the Police Department is successful. The war on these institutions, four of which are now run openly, is the result of sensational disclosures of cases in which harm has come to young girls through their operations. An ordinance against the bureaus has been prepared and is expected to pass.

Mrs. Lola G. Baldwin of the Police Department has thoroughly investigated the agencies and declares that they are a constant menace to young women, many of whom have been brought to their downfall by becoming interested in their literature.

TEAR DOWN CHURCH.

TO BUILD NEW THEATER.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The erection of a fine modern theater of small dimensions, to be used for motion pictures and vaudeville shows, will commence next week, at the same time that the destruction of the historic old Presbyterian Church at Fourth and Broadway begins.

The theater will be built on the church lot and will be constructed of brick taken from the walls of the church. It will have a seating capacity of 750 people. The church that is to be demolished was sold recently, and the congregation has awarded a contract for the erection of a $50,000 edifice on another site.

ABIDE BY LAW.

JAPANESE COURT CRITICISM.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Matsuzo Nagai, Japanese Consul at San Francisco, denied today that any special mission brought him here, claiming his visit was informal and simply to get acquainted with his countrymen. He invited free criticism of his countrymen if they fail to abide by the law, and should such criticism be justly made, he declared the Japanese would endeavor to correct their mode of living.

Nagai claims the Japanese are more numerous in Southern than Northern California; that there are a greater number in Sacramento than in Fresno; that the majority of the Japanese in the State follow agricultural pursuits, and that statistics prove more Japanese are leaving the country than are entering.

FATE'S LAST BLOW WORST.

Leases His Hop Yard for One Dollar—Tenants Clear Thousands.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NORTH YAKIMA, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Disgusted with low hop prices prevailing for several years, George Kerr early this spring leased his hop yard one year for $1, to Frank Jackson and Walter Camp. On their investment the two men will clear up approximately $5300, due to the rise in prices and the heavy yield. This amount will be a net profit after all the expenses of cultivating the yard are deducted.

AGED ACTRESS VERY ILL.

Mrs. Elizabeth Saunders, Cousin of Joseph Jefferson, in Critical Condition.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Mrs. Elizabeth Saunders, cousin of Joseph Jefferson and well-known actress of the last generation, is critically ill from an acute attack of bronchitis at her home in this city. She has been in bed for over a year, but during the whole time a delightful hostess for the visiting actors and actresses. Tyrone Powers, who played with "A Servant in the House," is the grandson of one of her old friends with whom she played many times, and visited her on his recent western tour.

Mrs. Saunders is 90 years old and still retains the brightness of mind which won her so many friends. At the age of 60 she played a part in "The Two Orphans" in this city. She retired from the stage only about twenty years ago. Her sister, Mrs. Germon, who was three years younger and a favorite at the Boston Museum, died two months ago at Baltimore.

RECEIVER FOR BRICK COMPANY.

Bank of Mountainview Brings Action Under Mortgage on All Property.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN JOSE, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Bank of Mountainview brought an action some time ago against the Wheeland Brick Company on a note for $9000, which was secured by a mortgage on all of the property of this company, which includes about ten acres of land near Mountainview, and all of the machinery necessary for the carrying on of the business of making brick.

An affidavit was filed today by A. H. Hubbard, president of the bank, that the management of the brick company had been making disposition of a large amount of their property, the principal item of which is 900,000 brick. This, Hubbard declares, has so reduced his security that he is in great danger of loss. He estimated the plant and stock on hand at not more than $5000.

Upon the presentation of this affidavit to Judge Welch, he appointed a receiver in the person of H. F. Plummer, to take charge of the plant until the case can be heard.

FIND REMAINS PETRIFIED.

FEATURES PRESERVED.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

PORTLAND, Sept. 4.—When the body of Paul Limerick, who died ten years ago, was disinterred at Mt. Calvary Cemetery yesterday, preparatory to removal and reburial, it was discovered the remains had become petrified.

The features, with the exception of the nose and eyes, were perfectly preserved, and the hair and moustache were as natural as in life. The petrified remains had assumed a dark-brown color. This is the sixth case of petrification found in Mt. Calvary in recent years, but the other bodies were not nearly as well preserved as that of Limerick. It required five men to remove the body.

BANNERS FOR CALIFORNIA.

PRESENT OF NATIVE SONS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—On behalf of the Native Sons of the Golden West, Fairfax Wheelan presented today to the officers and crew of the cruiser California of the Pacific fleet two silken banners, a "bear flag" and a State flag. A large number of members of the order, including officers of the Grand Parlor, assembled aboard the vessel in the bay, and the flags were received by Lieutenant-Commander Newton A. McCully, who placed them in the custody of the ship's color-bearer.

MACHINE PICKS HOPS.

WORKS PERFECTLY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Again it is claimed that hop picking by machine is a success. Last year, before the picking had progressed far, a similar announcement was made, but when the season ended the machines were found to have failed to make good. E. Clemens Horst and George E. Miller, since last season, have been improving on the defective features of their machine and have given it a thorough test this season. Yesterday they made a demonstration before many leading hop men and professors of the Coast at the E. Clemens Horst Company's yards near Perkins, this county.

Hop vines were cut off near the ground, fed into this machine, and came out stripped of hops and leaves. At one side of the machine the hops were fed out and at the other side the leaves and bits of vine were dumped. Experts and people who were skeptical on the subject now believe how picking by machine is practicable, which will mean vast saving in the expense of harvesting the hops of the Sacramento Valley.

AN ELOQUENT STORY IN PLAIN FIGURES.

A TOTAL of 4300 columns of advertising, 3942 columns of reading matter, and a gain of 517 columns of paid matter over August, 1908, is the record of The Times for last month. The figures show an average of 138 columns of advertising per day, and 127 columns of reading matter. The 38 pages (news and advertising) which The Times has averaged to serve its subscribers each day of the month of August, 1909, is unequaled in volume by any other American newspaper.

To the thinking advertiser, who is practiced in the art of analyzing business statements, the telling figures above are an eloquent story which calls fo. no comment from the publishers.

ONE MORE CHANCE.

Los Angeles County Is Given Until Next Wednesday to Prove Assessments Are Too High.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Los Angeles county was given permission today to file additional briefs with the State Board of Equalization. The briefs must be submitted on next Wednesday. By Friday the new State tax levy will be ready.

The public hearings ended today with the third consideration of the Pullman car assessments. Attorney T. C. Coogan filed a last brief with the board and made a short statement, saying that he hoped the equalizers would see their way clear to adopt the valuations placed on the company's property as embraced in its report on file.

The brief stated that the company is dissatisfied with the assessment of its property made by the board on August 2 last, when $1,695,792 was the valuation set. This is an increase of $53,675 over the 1908 assessment.

The document also made application to have the action of the board corrected because the assessment was held to be excessive and obtained illegally, from the company's standpoint. The company also made the statement that it is not waiving, but, on the contrary, repeating, its objections to the jurisdiction of the board in the matter.

Attorney Coogan told the board that the company he represents occupies the same position as before. The company had made the code requirement in the application for a correction of assessment. He said the matter has been thoroughly considered by the board, so there was nothing more he could add, except that it was the wish and hope of his client to have the assessment made along the lines of the company's own figures.

In closing, Coogan declared that it is his sincere hope that the differences between the company and the board will be judicially set at rest by this time next year.

STATE FAIR CLOSES.

Los Angeles and Sacramento Vie With Each Other in Doing Honors.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] This was Los Angeles and Sacramento day at the State Fair, and each county vied with the other in doing the honors. The fair came to a conclusion tonight with a record of the largest attendance of any year in its history. In other ways it also was the most successful. From Sacramento most of the exhibits will be taken to Oakland for a sort of a post exhibition.

The feature of the fair week of course has been the squabble between the wine people and the W.C.T.U. The wine pavilion was closed this afternoon and the cold-water contingent claimed a victory.

An exciting incident today was the riding of a bucking bull by Jim Baillard, a horseman from Louis Pierce's ranch at Suisun. During the week others had tried it without success. Jim locked his spurs in the saddle girth and hung on until the bull became disgusted. Pierce bet $475 on his man and won.

TRAMP HOLDS CLEW.

Lodi Officers Are Searching for Hobo Who Took Men's Clothes Found by Boys.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LODI, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] A tramp who took a complete outfit of men's clothing from several boys, who had fished the wearing apparel out of the Mokelumne River, is badly wanted by the authorities to explain a mystery of a supposed missing man. The boys were going swimming when they saw the clothing floating by and hauled the garments out of the water.

Every portion of the clothing was a good grade and had been worn only a short time. The theory advanced is that the man was drowned or murdered. In a coat pocket was a receipt for $4 given to Joe Powell in Chico, for payment on some harness.

The tramp forced the boys to turn over the clothes to him. The boys were badly frightened.

CONSTABLE KILLS MAN.

MAKES HIS ESCAPE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

RENO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Early this morning Constable R. J. Davidson of Montello shot and killed Charles Schwendler, a young man from Milwaukee, and then escaped. It is stated that Constable Davidson saw Schwendler and another man near a freight train in the Montello yard and told them to get out and that they were obeying his command when he shot Schwendler.

Following the shooting Davidson went to the Spencer Johnson Mercantile Store where he had some money on deposit, drew this and left. Montello railroad men here state that the killing was without provocation. Officers are searching for him.

FIGHTING NEW FOREST FIRE.

FIFTY MEN ENGAGED.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

STOCKTON, Sept. 4.—Maj. Forsythe, commanding troops in the Yosemite Valley, called on the Sierra Railway people at Jamestown yesterday to send a force of men to fight a forest fire that is working north from the Merced River toward the thirty thousand acres of timber lands owned by the Standard Lumber Company of Tuolumne county, of which T. H. Bulleck of the Sierra Railway is the head. Yesterday the railroad company sent a force of fifty men to the scene, and they left Chinese Camp in stages to be rushed to Crockers Station on the big oak flat road to Yosemite. The men were sent out in charge of Anthony Arnold, an experienced mountaineer, and will stay in the mountains until danger is past. Most of the men were taken from section crews along the railroad. It is believed by the railroad men that the fire has swept northward from the Yosemite Railroad line, where it started ten days ago.

Constables Operating Speed Trap at Newbury Catch Bigger Game Than Expected.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

The President was driving from Beverly to Haverhill to see Associate Justice Moody. The constables did not recognize the occupants at first.

President Taft expressed regret that his car had been traveling at a speed above the limit, and instructed his chauffeur to drive slower.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—Wilbur Glenn Voliva, who succeeded the late John Alexander Dowie as the head of Zion City, and who has begun serving a six months' jail sentence for failure to pay a $10,000 judgment, was denied his freedom on a writ of habeas corpus here today.

BIG TOBACCO WAR.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

LAWYERS IN KIDNAPING.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

TOPEKA (Kan.) Sept. 4.—David T. Gregg, the lawyer arrested for complicity in the kidnaping of Marian Bleakely, the incubator baby, has been identified as the man who held the horse while the kidnapers were after the child. F. H. Tillotson, the Kansas City attorney, was identified as the second man. Mrs. Bleakely, mother of the baby, has returned to Kansas City. She said that she doubted the sincerity of the pledge made by Mrs. Barclay to dismiss the habeas corpus proceeding.

BRYAN'S NARROW ESCAPE.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

SPRINGFIELD (Mo.) Sept. 4.—W. J. Bryan narrowly escaped injury last night when a motor car in which he was being taken to Doling Park to make an address, got beyond control going down a steep hill in the park. The brakes broke, but the car was stopped just on the edge of an embankment.

BIG BAKING OF "SPUDS."

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

GREELEY (Colo.) Sept. 4.—Two tons of potatoes believed to be the largest amount cooked at one time in one oven, were pulled off the coals here today in the celebration of "Potato Day." The ovens had to be especially prepared in a great field and several hundred attendants were kept busy serving the hot "spuds" to thousands of visitors, who thronged here on excursion trains. The object of the potato banquet was to demonstrate the adaptability of this section of the State to potato growing.

GAS IN GROUND RUINS PLANTS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—That thousands of dollars' worth of plants in greenhouses are being ruined each month from gas leaking underground is the conclusion of Prof. William Crocker of the University of Chicago, and Prof Lee I. Knight of Clemson College, South Carolina, after years of experimenting. It long has been believed, according to Prof. Crocker, that illuminating gas has a poisonous effect upon flowers, but he and Prof. Knight are the first to demonstrate the fact scientifically. As yet they have been unable to secure an antidote for destructive work. "The only remedy we have been able to suggest is for the gas company to be careful to repair its mains," said Prof. Crocker. "Our experiments were carried on with the carnation, and we found that the petals of this flower go to sleep, while those not yet in bloom never open."

FROST KILL CRANBERRIES.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) Sept. 4.—Twenty cents a quart is the probable price for Thanksgiving cranberries. Warrens, Wis., and the surrounding country is the great cranberry producing center of Wisconsin. On the night of September 1, a blighting frost settled down upon the great marshes and ruined half of the tender berries. Should this early information be borne otu by later findings, the price of the much-used delicacy would go soaring.

PENSIONED BY JOHN D.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CLEVELAND (O.) Sept. 4.—John Hotters, the old French gardener employed at the East Fortieth-street home of John D. Rockefeller, has been retired on a pension. He is 78 years old, and has been in the employ of the oil king for twenty-eight years. Last Saturday his hands began to tremble so that he could hardly hold the pruning shears, and finally he collapsed. Then came a message from Mr. Rockefeller that he need not worry, as his pay would go on just the same as long as he lived.

DANES WELCOME COOK.

being the only white man in the party, he answered that with other well authenticated expeditions one scientific man of the party took all the observations.

COOK MISTAKEN FOR SEA LION.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—Dr. Gustav Staats, head of the National Medical College and Hospital, who accompanied the Peary relief expedition of which Dr. Frederick A. Cook was a member, told yesterday of some incidents that happened during his acquaintance with the discoverer of the North Pole

Dr. Staats told of one close escape from death of Dr. Cook. He said:

"Dr. Cook had a habit of sleeping on the ice in the summer time. It was in July of 1901 that our vessel was imprisoned in the ice near the Arctic circle. Dr. Cook had been making his bed upon the ice near the ship for several days, although this fact was unknown to several in the party. One morning some members of the scientific staff started on a hunting trip. One of them saw Cook, wrapped up in his fur blankets asleep on the ice. In the dim light of that season he was taken for a sea lion and one of the men prepared to shoot.

"The men approached the supposed beast but recognized the sleeping physician before it was too late."

ENGLAND JEALOUS OF COOK'S VICTORY.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Certain English newspapers, notably Lord Northcliffe's Daily Mail, and certain English explorers who quit before they got to the North Pole, notably Admiral Sir George S. Nares, are working overtime against Dr. Cook.

"Decidedly American," is their favorite characterization of his story.

"Jealousy seems to be at the bottom of much of the British comment on Dr. Cook's claim as well as on many other things American," said Judge Holdom of Chicago today, just before taking the express to Liverpool to sail for home, with his wife and son on the Mauretania.

"If Dr. Cook were an Englishman," continued the judge, "the London press would regard him as innocent until proved guilty. Being an American, he is slated as guilty as a matter of course. Fair-minded people, in view of what Dr. Cook has done in the past and in view of his scientific temper and zeal, are likely to believe his story until a much stronger argument than we have yet seen has been produced against it."

ARCTIC CLUB GETS DIRECT REPORT.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—Ralph L. Shainwald, formerly treasurer of the Arctic Club of America, cabled to the club from Copenhagen today, declaring the North Pole had been reached.

Mr. Shainwald went from Paris to Copenhagen to represent the Arctic Club in welcoming Dr. Cook. The message from Mr. Shainwald follows:

"Cook sends greetings to Arctic Club of America. Pole has been reached without doubt. Wonderful demonstration here."

The Arctic Club also received a message from Rear Admiral George W. Melville today, reading as follows:

"Do not give credence to reports that Cook has discovered pole. (Signed) "MELVILLE."

Confidence in the truth of Dr. Cook's statements was expressed by Langdon Gibson of Schenectady, an explorer and a brother of Charles Dana Gibson, the artist. He said:

"I have known Dr. Cook for a great many years, and have put in a whole year in the Arctic regions with him, and have never in all my experience observed anything in him other than to make me feel absolutely sure as to his integrity and earnestness of purpose."

ITALIANS JOIN IN CONGRATULATIONS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

ROME, Sept. 4.—The entire Italian press is extending an enthusiastic welcome to Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the American explorer who reached Copenhagen today.

Even Capt. Umberto Cagni, who accompanied the Duke of the Abruzzi to the polar regions in 1900, now that fuller reports have been received of the time it took Dr. Cook to travel from the 82nd parallel to the pole, admits that Dr. Cook is the first person the reach the North Pole.

GEOLOGIST IS SKEPTIC.

Prof. Chamberlain of Chicago University Doubts Dr. Cook's Story.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Are the American people an intelligent nation, or can they be gulled? Will they accept Dr. Cook's statement that he has found the pole, unhesitatingly, or will they demand proof?"

This, according to Prof. Thomas C. Chamberlin, head of the department of geology at the University of Chicago, is what the discussion of the explorer's feat will narrow down to upon his return to America. In an interview today Prof. Chamberlin reiterated his own skepticism on the subject, and declared that there was every reason to doubt the statement attributed to Dr. Cook. It is a most suspicious document, according to Prof. Chamberlin, and does not advance one point tending to prove to a scientific reader that the Brooklyn explorer ever reached the top of the world.

"Isn't it up to the skeptics to prove Dr. Cook's statement rather than to Dr. Cook to prove it?" Prof. Chamberlin was asked.

"Not at all," responded the professor with energy. "That is not right. Every story or statement bears on its face the ear-marks of truth or falsehood. When the statement is such a statement as that made by Mr. Cook, one must of necessity doubt. There is nothing in it to prove that he ever reached the pole."

LOOKS LIKE A FIGHT.

DOUBT SPREADS OVER EUROPE.

SCIENTISTS MAINTAIN THAT DR. COOK HAS PROVED NOTHING.

Comes Out Noticeably When King Frederick of Denmark Reconsiders His Determination to Decorate Explorer With Gold Medal of Merit. London Hotbed of Skepticism.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 5.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The tide of skepticism in regard to Dr. Cook's reliability is rising throughout Europe. Editorial comments in newspapers arriving here; interviews with German, Italian, Russian, French and Scandinavian scientists telegraphed here, prove it.

This skepticism was shown most significantly today when King Frederick of Denmark reconsidered his determination to decorate Dr. Cook with the Gold Medal of Merit, a highly-prized decoration, founded by King Christian VIII, in 1845, and given only to those who have rendered to mankind the most distinguished services in any direction.

The interviews with geographers and explorers show they maintain that Dr. Cook has proved nothing and that their opinion, almost unanimous, is that such details of his journey as he has revealed are the reverse of being convincing, inherently.

Naturally, the geographers and explorers are jealous of the triumph which Dr. Cook has achieved. But Europe waits for Dr. Cook to submit his evidence that he reached the North Pole to a scientific tribunal of whose learning and disinterestedness there can be not the shadow of a doubt.

One of the most eminent Arctic explorers said today:

"Dr. Cook will never prove his claim. It is impossible for him to prove it even if it is sound.

"His friends will claim always that he has proved it; that he reached the North Pole. So the inevitable result will be a controversy that can never be determined one way or the other."

BRADLEY FITTED FOR POLAR TRIP.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

GLOUCESTER (Mass.) Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Benjamin A. Smith of this city today told some facts concerning the outfitting of the fishing schooner renamed John R. Bradley, when the latter purchased her for Dr. Cook's Arctic trip. Mr. Smith says that when Mr. Bradley and Dr. Cook came here in the spring of 1907 they had in mind the penetration to the pole, if circumstances permitted. In any event, an effort was to be made, if conditions were favorable. If they were not favorable, Mr. Bradley intended to spend a winter in the far north, frozen in, and pursuing hunting for big game in the Arctic zone.

They had resolved to keep their plans secret. Dr. Cook sent to Brigus, N. F., for Capt. Moses Bartlett and his crew of expert Arctic seamen, but to none of these did he confide his plans.

It was only at the very last moment that Capt. Bartlett began to "smell a rat." That was when a large supply of pemmican was received from Chicago.

"Pemmican, pemmican," sniffed the captain. "That means a trip for the pole," he said, as he helped pass along the boxes to the hatchway. This was confirmed in his mind when a bundle of long hickory sled runners, some twenty-five feet in length, was received from Michigan. The captain said nothing but looked wise.

Finally all was ready and the entire equipment was aboard. The price of the supplies alone was $25,000, and before the expedition sailed a check for that amount was handed over to the outfitting company by Mr. Bradley.

HAMBURG SOCIETY CONGRATULATES COOK.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

HAMBURG, Sept. 4.—The managing board of the Hamburg Geographical Society has telegraphed the congratulations of the society to Dr. Cook, inviting him at the same time to be the guest of the society on his way from Copenhagen to New York.

In case of acceptance, the board will invite distinguished geographers and scientists from all parts of Germany to take part in the reception to the American explorer.

FRESH WATER FOUND AT THE NORTH POLE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] In answer to a question today, Dr. Cook said the surface ice was practically all fresh water, especially from the higher hummocks. They got fresh water without difficulty. When asked how his training had fitted him to work with picked Eskimos such as his, he said: "I was always in the lead with the compass. We did not ride in the sledges. We had a team of thirteen dogs, when the sledges were lightened and the dogs were not all needed. The disabled dogs and the dogs that were not of much use made food for the other dogs."

PRESIDENT IS MUCH INTERESTED.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

BEVERLY (Mass.) Sept. 4.—President Taft today made his first official comment upon the reported discovery of the North Pole by Dr. Frederick A. Cook.

In answering a cablegram sent to him, by Dr. Cook, reporting that he had reached the coveted point, Mr. Taft cabled his warmest congratulations, declaring that the pride of all Americans had been stirred by the news, and the report that the baffling feat had been accomplished by an American citizen

President Taft has taken the keenest interest in the news regarding the discovery ever since the brief bulletin was received on Wednesday afternoon. Always a great newspaper reader, he has taken a deep interest in the controversy which Dr. Cook's feat has aroused among the Arctic experts.

Minister Egan's cablegram of last Thursday to the State Department announcing that Dr. Cook's accomplishment had been confirmed by the Danish Commissioner for Greenland, was repeated to the President, but he withheld any comment until receiving today the personal cablegram which Dr. Cook evidently filed as soon as he reached the Danish capital.

INDIGNANT OVER THEIR INCREDULITY.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

BRUSSELS, Sept. 4.—Commenting today on the achievement of Dr. Cook, M. Lecointe, director of the Brussels Observatory, said:

"America may well be proud of the success achieved by Dr. Cook. I am indignant at the idea that Dr. Cook's statement of his discovery is held untrue by some people. The pole surely has been discovered. I know Dr. Cook personally, and I vouch for his sincerity."

The Geographical Society has invited Dr. Cook to lecture in Brussels. He probably will be heard the same evening as Lieut. Shackelton, the English explorer, who recently led an expedition to the Antarctic.

WASHINGTON.

SEES FRAUD IN COAL ENTRIES.

High Land Office Official's Charges Come Out.

Secretary Ballinger Busy on His Report.

Hopes to Have It Ready for President Soon.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Charges that fraudulent coal entries in Alaska had been made in the interest of railroad promoters in that Territory, and that "dummies" in Chicago, Terre Haute, Ind., and Detroit had signed the applications for these coal lands, were discovered today to have been made before a select committee of the House Committee on Appropriations last January by H. H. Schwartz, chief of the field service of the General Land Office.

On the basis of reports of investigations conducted by L. W. Glavis, head of the Seattle division of the land office field force, whose charges in the Cunningham coal claims in Alaska are the basis of the Ballinger-Pinchot row, Mr. Schwartz alleged that probably 500 of the 1200 or 1300 Alaska coal claim applications then pending in his office were fraudulent. As to the Cunningham claims he made an exception, based on a report by Glavis, and asserted they might come within the new coal law.

James R. Garfield, then Secretary of the Interior, held against both his subordinates before the same committee on this question. Glavis has now taken Garfield's position, while Schwartz is understood to hold to the contrary.

Speaking of the fraudulent application made by "dummies," Mr. Schwartz told the committee:

"I may say that our investigations as they have progressed show that those people who are endeavoring to acquire a large amount of this coal land went into the laboring camps of the Great Northern and secured laborers to sign applications and our investigations also show that at places in Chicago and at Terre Haute, Ind., and probably Detroit, Mich., and other places, stenographers and clerks, who knew nothing about coal or coal lands, but who were employés of men who are behind the railroads building up there and in prospect of building, signed those applications in large number and those lands have been located and their applications are pending."

Secretary of the Interior Richard A. Ballinger, continued today to "hunt for snakes," in connection with the Cunningham coal claim reports prepared by his subordinates for President Taft, while Gifford Pinchot, chief forester and head of the other side of the conservation controversy, continued to "fish for yellowtail" at Avalon, Cal.

It is Mr. Ballinger's intention to try to complete his report to the President by tonight, and he hopes to take it to Beverly and hand it to the President some time early next week. The interpretation here of Mr. Ballinger's remark that he is "hunting snakes" is that somebody will lose his job, either in his department or elsewhere, as a result of the conservation controversy.

AVIATION COMING SPORT.

Edward H. R. Green, Son of Hetty, Orders Aeroplane for Texas Ranch.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] "Aviation is the coming pastime sport. It has motoring beaten. I am going to have an aëroplane for use on my Texas plantations," said Edward H. R. Green of Texas, who is at the Congress Hotel on his way home from a visit to him mother, Mrs. Hetty Green, in New York.

"Aviation," he said, "is less dangerous than motoring or driving a pair of horses, and it is most exciting and invigorating. The only danger is in falling out of the car of the machine, in which case it would be the same as any other long or hard fall.

"An airship is simply a big box-kite with brains inside, the brains being the motor and aviator.

"I have ordered one sent to me for use at our coming Texas State Fair, and if it works all right the machine is mine for use on my plantation."

Texan Who Has Seen Twenty-six Presidents Elected, Is Dead.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

WACO (Tex.) Sept. 4.—Isaac Brock, who claimed to have seen twenty-six Presidents elected, is dead here at an age said to be 121 years.

According to Brock's family Bible and other documents, he was born in Buncombe county, North Carolina, March 1, 1788.

SKIRTS CLEARED.

CAPT. BROADHEAD ACQUITTED, READY TO RESUME HIS JOB.

Jury, After Deliberation of Twenty-nine Hours, Finds Police Official Not Guilty of Taking Bribe, as Charged. Uncertainty as to His Future on the Force—He Says He'll Be Down "in the Morning."

Capt. Thomas H. Broadhead, who was acquitted of the charge of bribery by a jury last night.

"NOT guilty" was the verdict last night of the jury in the case of Capt. Thomas H. Broadhead, former Chief of Police of Los Angeles, who for five weeks has been on trial on a charge of accepting a bribe of $1000, alleged to have been paid for protection in the "redlight" district.

After being out twenty-nine hours, the twelve men of the jury reported a little after 9 o'clock p.m. that they had agreed on a verdict of acquittal. This result was attained only after two of the jurors had held out for practically an entire day for conviction, though their ten associates were for the freeing of the accused official.

"Tell the boys 'hello' for me, that I am feeling pretty well, and that I will be down in the morning."

This was the message that Broadhead telephoned to friends at Central Police Station just after the rendering of the verdict. The verdict seemed to give general satisfaction at headquarters.

The principal question now is as to Broadhead's future in the police department.

QUESTION OF STANDING.

Will he resume his old place as captain and be assigned to duty, or will the Police Commission conduct a trial on its own account?

Mayor Alexander, head of the Police Commission, said last night that he could not say what action will be taken. Commissioner Graham and other members of the commission seemed to be equally in the dark as to Broadhead's future. The commission will meet Tuesday evening, when it is believed that some action will be taken in the matter.

Several days ago, in speaking of the Broadhead matter, Chief of Police Dishman, who now is out of the city, expressed the opinion that Broadhead, in the event of acquittal, would at once resume his old position, and that he would be entitled to full salary from the time of his suspension, several months ago, following his indictment by the grand jury.

DEFENDANT CONGRATULATED.

Though warned by Judge Davis that no demonstration would be permitted when the verdict was announced, the crowd in the courtroom snapped with the tensity of a tightly-wound steel spring and surged toward Broadhead and struggled to grasp his hand when the jury made its report.

Weeks of anxiety had not shaken the nerve of Broadhead; he thanked his friends in an undemonstrative manner, and smilingly beamed upon the jurors.

A few minutes before the verdict was returned, Broadhead sat in the corridor of the courtroom and talked to his friends. The statement of the jury in the middle of the afternoon had been a shock to his attorneys, but Broadhead never lost his composure, and firmly maintained that he would be acquitted of the charge against him.

"Why should I be convicted? If I were a guilty man I might fear such a possibility. But in a nation where truth and justice are supposed to prevail, there is no danger," said Broadhead, speaking to a friend.

"I need an acquittal right now. Not that I do not know that I would eventually be acquitted, but because if I lose it will cost me a fortune in attorneys' fees, and already I find myself in debt."

Attorney Appel accepted the decision of the jury as a matter of course. When the verdict came the least excited persons in the crowd were the attorneys for Broadhead and the defendant himself.

HOLD JURY FOR HOURS.

Two men held the jury for many hours, and from the beginning of the deliberations it was a question of endurance. On the first ballot the jurymen stood eight to four for acquittal, later nine to three; then, after several hours, it stood nine to two, with one man not voting. After prolonged arguments the vote again stood nine to three, and there the jurymen rested until late Friday night.

Early yesterday morning the argument grew bitter and two men stated that they would not give in. The jury then reported that an agreement was impossible.

Late yesterday afternoon one of the jurors announced that he would vote for acquittal if the other two of the minority could be brought to the same conclusion. One man swerved before supper yesterday, but the other held out. After a hearty meal the more optimistic view prevailed and an agreement was reached.

The argument, which is said to have prevailed at last, was that the case had already cost the State a large sum of money, and would never result in a conviction, even if tried again.

Deputy District Attorney Ford said: "If Broadhead is not convicted, I desire to see him get an absolute acquittal. I bear the defendant no ill will, as charged. In fact, I like him. I have simply done my duty."

"We know that Tom Broadhead is not guilty," said former Mayor Harper. "Broadhead is a poor man and a good man. He might have become rich if he had been dishonest, but he chose to be on the square. Only a jury of idiots could convict him."

"You will now draw your back pay as a police captain," was suggested to Broadhead.

"I don't know," was the response. "I suppose I still have a job, but what and where it is depends upon Chief Dishman."

The trial of Broadhead was the outgrowth of a statement made to E. T. Earl by Nicholas Oswald, former king of the "red-light" district, for which Oswald was to receive $10,000 from Earle. Oswald stated that Broadhead had accepted a bribe of $1000 for the protection of the district in question. Circumstantial evidence was introduced to show that the sum alleged to have been paid to Broadhead was in his possession on the day when he was supposed to have received the bribe. A denial of all the charges was made by Broadhead.

VETERAN STEEL MAN DEAD.

Former Partner of Andrew Carnegie Dies of Injuries Received in Automobile Accident.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WATCH HILL (R. I.) Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] William H. Singer, the Pittsburgh millionaire and veteran steel maker, died today as a result of injuries received in an automobile accident, August 25.

Mr. Singer was 80 years old. He was one of Andrew Carnegie's partners in the steel business. His fortune was in excess of $20,000,000.

A year ago last spring he set aside $16,000,000 for his children, but did not communicate his plan to his family. He had a premonition of sudden death, and desired to avoid complications over a division of his large fortune.

He celebrated his golden wedding anniversary May 27, 1908, and selected that as the date for the distribution of the $16,000,000.

When the four children sat down to the golden wedding dinner they found on their plates checks for $4,000,000 each. They protested, but their father said it lifted a heavy burden from his mind to have the matter of his wealth disposed of in that way.

The four children are William A. Singer, Jr., the artist; George Singer, who is in the steel business in Pittsburgh; Mrs. William Ross Proctor of Philadelphia, and Miss Margaret Singer.

DEVILISH.

FIENDISH CRUELTY SHOWN BY SULTAN TO CAPTIVES.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] While Sultan Mulai Hafid of Morocco has bowed to the decree of the powers that he cease torturing his foes, the remnants of the band led by El Roghi, the details of the terrible measures visited upon his captives did not come fully to light until today. A dispatch from an eyewitness was received by a London newspaper, and contained the following account:

"In the morning, after prayer, all the troops paraded in the court in front of the palace, and Mulai Hafid and the viziers appeared. Two hundred prisoners, half-naked and tied together by the necks, were dragged before the Sultan.

"At the same time baskets full of heads and thirty-two women, said to be the harem of the pretender, El Roghi, were brought in, together with several ancient, rusty cannon, the pretender's state tent, his 'imperial umbrella,' his throne—a ragged and soiled affair in crimson velvet—and some mules and Spanish cows—trophies of the war.

"In the square, seated beneath the wall, where the heads were exposed, were twenty-four prisoners in chains. These were the Kaids and chief captives. Soldiers stood guard over them, and near at hand was a great caldron of boiling pitch, round which hovered the barbers of the city, wearing aprons.

"One by one the prisoners were released from their chains, seized by the soldiers, and led to the barbers, who acted as the executioners. The right hand of each prisoner was sliced off at the wrist with a razor, and the stump was plunged into the molten pitch.

"Four men had their left feet and right hands cut off. Some fainted, and others died of hemorrhages. The survivors were removed in chairs to prison. As each hand and foot was cut off drums were beaten.

"But for the viziers the Sultan would have slain all the prisoners."

Gains 30 Pounds In 30 Days

REMARKABLE RESULT OF THE NEW TISSUE BUILDER, PROTONE, IN MANY CASES OF RUN-DOWN MEN AND WOMEN.

Prove It Yourself by Sending Coupon Below for a 50c Package, Free.

"By George, I never saw anything like the effects of that new treatment, Protone, for the building up of weight and lost nerve force. It acted more like a miracle than a medicine," said a well-known gentleman yesterday in speaking of the revolution that had taken place in his condition. "I began to think that there was nothing on earth that could make me fat. I tried tonics, digestives, heavy eating, diets, milk, beer, and almost everything else you could think of, but without result. I had been thin for years, and began to think it was natural for me to be that way. Finally I read about the remarkable processes brought about by the use of Protone, so I decided to try it myself. Well, when I look at myself in the mirror now, I think it is somebody else. I have put on just 30 pounds during the last month, and never felt stronger or more 'nervy' in my life."

Any Man or Woman Who is Thin Can Recover Normal Weight by the Remarkable New Treatment, Protone.

Protone is a powerful inducer of nutrition, increases cell-growth, makes perfect the assimilation of food, increases the number of blood-corpuscles, and as a necessary result builds up muscles and solid, healthy flesh, and rounds out the figure.

For women who can never appear stylish in anything they wear because of their thinness, this remarkable treatment may prove a revelation. It is a beauty maker as well as a form builder and nerve strengthener.

It will cost you nothing to prove the remarkable effects of this treatment. It is absolutely non-injurious to the most delicate system. The Protone Company, 1729 Protone Bldg., Detroit, Mich., will send to anyone who sends name and address a free 50c package of Protone, with full instructions to prove that it does the work. They will also send you their book on "Why You Are Thin" free of charge, giving facts which will probably astonish you. Send coupon below today, with your name and address.

Dr. Meyers

The Only Dentist in the City Who Makes a Specialty of Platework and Extractions.

His Marvelous Skill Has Placed Him at the Head of His Profession

It is a fact generally recognized that anyone who does one class of work and nothing else, can do that particular work better than those who do a little of everything.

Dr. Meyers is a Specialist who, together with his expert staff of assistants, do nothing else but extract teeth and make plates. And when you come to Dr. Meyers, you are not only sure of receiving, but are guaranteed, the most skillful and perfect work in this line that is to be had in this city.

Specially Equipped Labratory

Dr. Meyers has every facility with which to accomplish superior work. His laboratory is specially equipped for plate work. He has all the special dental appliances necessary to secure unusually satisfactory results. He is able to guarantee a degree of perfection that other dentists less well equipped are not able to attain.

Poorly fitting plates are as miserable apology for natural teeth as can be imagined. And yet, nine-tenths of the plates made by the average dentist give more or less trouble, cause more or less suffering, and are a direct cause of most of the indigestion and insufficiently nourished bodies of those who have to rely upon artificial teeth. It is of the utmost importance, then, that work of this kind should be entrusted to one who is fully qualified.

What Dr. Meyers Guarantees

When Dr. Meyers makes a set of plates, he will absolutely guarantee: that if there are teeth to be extracted it will be done entirely without pain, without the aid of any harmful gas or other detrimental substitute; also that extractions will be so successfully accomplished that there will be practically no inconvenience or delay in using the new teeth; also that the plates will be so perfect in every particular that they can be used immediately, and give entire and permanent satisfaction; also that there will be no imperfect suction, no dropping out, no chafing of the gums, no looseness; further, that they will be so close in appearance to natural teeth that they cannot be told apart; more than that, that you can eat as naturally as before, and not only that, but genuinely enjoy your meals; in a word, that every fault commonly found in plates made by the average dentist will be entirely eliminated. Now, you say, these are pretty strong claims. Just so, they are. But if Dr. Meyers could not live up to them, it would be folly for him to make them. He can, and he does.

The Time Is Now!

If you have teeth that need to be taken out, or if it is necessary to renew the teeth that nature gave you, or if you have an imperfectly fitting set of teeth now, the dentist to see is Dr. Meyers—the man who does nothing but extract teeth and make plates. He is the man who will give you invariable, absolute and complete satisfaction.

There is no time like the present—see him now! Examinations are free.

LONG BEACH.

HARBOR DAY PLANS FORMING.

NATION'S CHIEF EXPECTED TO TAKE PART IN EVENT.

In Commemoration of Opening of Ocean Entrance to Inner Waters, Elaborate Programme Will Be Arranged—Two-Hundred-Thousand-Dollar Ship to Be Built.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONG BEACH, Sept. 4.—October 11 is to be celebrated here as "Harbor Day," and a big programme will be arranged to commemorate the opening of the ocean entrance to the inner harbor. The date is selected because it is upon this day that President Taft is to visit this city for luncheon at Hotel Virginia, and it was he who, as Secretary of War, gave the Dock and Terminal Company permission to dredge the San Gabriel River and its mouth, and compelled the Salt Lake Railroad Company to remove the obstructions it had placed there and build a drawbridge over the channel.

At a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce directorate this morning, Messrs. P. E. Hatch, R. H. Young, E. C. Denio, George H. Bixby, W. H. Wallace, C. J. Curtis and Dr. L. A. Perce were appointed a committee to have charge of the celebration, and one of the first things they will do will be to confer with Lieut. Leeds, Corps of Engineers, U.S.A., and secure his coöperation in the proposed [illegible] The Los Angeles committee will also be asked to give a little additional time on the President's schedule to make his presence more of a feature of the day.

County Superintendent Keppel yesterday denied the petition of the residents of Cerritos to unite with the Long Beach school district because it lacked two names of the required number. The children can attend the Long Beach schools, however, if they so desire. The result of this is that an effort will now be made to annex the Cerritos district to Long Beach.

STEEL BARGE LAUNCHED.

A steel barge, 44x18 feet, was launched today at the Craig shipyard. It is for the Standard Oil Company, and will be used at San Pedro.

"Admission Day" is to be celebrated in Long Beach for the first time in the history of the city. A committee of the Chamber of Commerce has arranged a programme of sports and attractions for afternoon and evening, including a balloon ascension in the afternoon and fireworks at night.

Following the decisive vote yesterday in favor of a bond issue, three building permits were taken out this morning, aggregating $29,000. Myra H. Kenyon secured one for a four-story hotel on the beach west of the Virginia, to cost $16,000; Todd & Shaw, for a brick block on American avenue to cost $11,000, and Philip Rattray, for a $2000 residence on East First street.

TO BUILD SHIP.

Articles of incorporation for the Long Beach Steamship Company were forwarded to Sacramento this morning and is the first forward movement in the project which means the building of a $200,000 steamship at the Craig plant. The entire amount of stock has been subscribed, and the first assessment will be called for as soon as the papers are returned from the North.

A meeting of the Chautauqua Association will be held at the Chamber of Commerce rooms Wednesday to discuss the future of the organization. It has some funds on hand, and it is the suggestion of some of the directors to abandon future Chautauquas and establish a Chautauqua fund, the interest of which shall be used annually to promote art and literature by contests for prizes.

DISCUSS WATER RATES.

Cahuenga Valley Citizens Propose to Organize to Fight Charges Made for Service.

There was a meeting of citizens of Cahuenga Valley last night at Lincoln school to discuss water rates, which are being charged by the Union Hollywood Water Company in that district.

Several attorneys were on hand to speak the legal phase of the matter as to whethe r the County Supervisors have a right to fix water rates.

Resolutions were passed providing for a general mass meeting at the same place next Wednesday night for the purpose of organizing an association to fight the water rates now charged by the company.

A committee consisting of Lee Chamberlain, E. C. Gird, W. C. Norman, Henry Morrissey and John Mitchell was appointed to draft suitable articles of organization and to report at the next meeting.

GREAT ATTRACTION FOR MEN.

A free entertainment of unusual merit is offered to men by the Young Men's Christian Association this afternoon. In order to accommodate all the men who will accept the opportunity, the meeting will be held in the First Congregational Church at 3 o'clock sharp. The music will be by the great Welsh male chorus of fifty voices, which has just won honors at the Seattle exposition and is staying here over Sunday. The address will be by Dr. Joseph Clark, who spent twenty-nine years in Africa. His subject will be: "Life in the Congo Land," and will be illustrated with 100 stereopticon views.

STERN CRISIS FACING LORDS.

Hereditary House Is Between Devil and Deep Sea.

Loss of Prestige on One Side, Ridicule on Other.

"Pink Pajamas" of Churchill Single Bright Spot.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It is evident today that the House of Lords faces the most serious crisis that has come up in the last decade of English history. The passage of the land tax clauses of the Lloyd-George budget through the Commons has made it a practical certainty that the whole bill will go to the upper chamber. What will the Peers do with it?

If they reject the budget in toto as the extreme Conservatives, known now collectively as "the Dukes," are urging them to do, they will have performed a political action of the highest courage. But bravado perhaps would better describe its spirit.

There can be little doubt from the present state of popular opinion that they would be badly defeated on the subsequent appeal to the country. If the Lords swallow the budget with merely a gentle grimace, they will be placed in a rather ridiculous position. Lord Lansdowne's rashly sinister hint as to amendments will have been proved a hollow pretense. Their prestige will be broken. It will be difficult if not impossible for them to stand up against the next popular attack on their power.

Winston Churchill, in "pink pajamas," has been the latest Parliamentary incident to lend a touch of levity to the long debates on the budget. At one of these dreary affairs Mr. Churchill was uproariously charged with voting in garments usually reserved for the bed chamber. They were not, of course, but they lent color of a high pink—to the suggestion. He wore a pink shirt, soft and ample; a loose, thin, light gray long coat, a little bow and slippers.

When, about 5:30 o'clock in the morning he entered the House after a cat-nap in the ministerial rooms, member after member raised the shout, "Pajamas!" Mr. Churchill turned and fled.

JAPANESE WANT BIG NAVY.

Counsellor for Navy Department Says Nation Must Build Fifteen Dreadnoughts.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

VICTORIA (B. C.) Sept. 4.—According to advices brought by the steamer Cyclops, which reached port today from Yokohama, there is an agitation in Japan for a large increase of the navy.

Mr. Tanaka, counsellor for the Navy Department, stated that Japan must build, and quickly, fifteen Dreadnoughts. He said:

"At present the naval power of a country is calculated on the basis of battleships of the Dreadnought type it possesses, and if Japan were to imitate the policy of the British navy half of her present warships would be withdrawn from commission.

"While other nations are building Dreadnoughts Japan has only one ship of that type, the Satsuma, a vessel inferior to the Dreadnought type, and two new battleships under construction. The rivalry and progress of the Orient will compel Japan to have at least fifteen ships of the Dreadnought type."

The Tokio Yamata reports that the War Department's estimate for next year will provide for the expenditure of [illegible],000, a decrease of more than [illegible] from this year. An increased appropriation is provided for building forts in Tokio Bay and for the study of balloons and aëroplanes.

U.S.S. RAINBOW RESCUED.

Picked Up in China Sea by the Antilochus and Towed to Hongkong.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

VICTORIA (B. C.) Sept. 4.—The U. S. S. Rainbow, of the China squadron, lying helpless with her machinery disabled in the China Sea, off Pedro Blanco, nearly 200 miles from Hongkong, on August 12, was picked up by the Blue Funnel line steamer Antilochus, according to advices brought by her sister liner, the Cyclops, which arrived today.

According to these advices the Rainbow's machinery was disabled and she was signaling for assistance. It is reported that the mishap was due to a boiler accident.

The warship was anchored in a comparatively exposed position. Three typhoons were reported in the China Sea, and her commander eagerly accepted the offer of the Antilochus to be taken in tow.

The United States navy officers expressed to the newspapers at Hongkong great admiration for the work done by the Antilochus in towing the Rainbow to Hongkong. No arrangement was made with regard to salvage, this being left to the United States government and Lloyds.

STRIKE BALKS TOLSTOI.

Famous Russian Had Intended to Attend Peace Congress Postponed Because of Strife.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STOCKHOLM, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Count Leo Tolstoi had intended to be present at the Peace Congress set for this week, but postponed on account of the general strike. Although 81 years old, the Count had determined to visit Stockholm in person to help the cause of peace. Whether he will attend the postponed meeting of the peace advocates remains to be seen.

It is reported that Norway will award the Nobel peace prize to Tolstoi at the next sitting of the Storthing. If it does so Sweden will have been anticipated, since this country has long desired to give the Nobel prize for literature to the great Russian.

PLAYWRIGHT STRICKEN AT CHALONS-SUR-MARNE.

Death Due to Appendicitis, Following an Operation, Patient Lapsing Into a Delirium from Which He Never Recovers—Eugene Gauthier at Bedside With Physicians.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHALONS-SUR-MARNE, Sept. 4.—Clyde Fitch, American playright, died at 9:30 this evening. He had been unconscious since 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The doctors and his friend, Eugene Gauthier, were present at the bedside.

Death was due to appendicitis following an operation. Mr. Fitch was stricken with an acute attack while traveling from Germany and upon his arrival here underwent an operation at the hands of Dr. Alquier.

The patient rallied somewhat after the operation and yesterday showed some signs of improvement. He suffered a relapse last night, however, and although he was fully conscious during the early hours today, the improvement in his condition was not maintained. After marked delirium he lapsed into unconsciousness about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when the attending physicians gave up hope of his recovery.

SKETCH OF HIS LIFE.

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—Clyde Fitch, easily the most prolific of younger American dramatists, was born at Elmyra, N. Y., in 1865, of English ancestors who settled in Connecticut early in the seventeenth century and left descendants who have been prominent in the religious and political life of the country ever since.

He early evinced an interest in literature and was an untiring amateur actor. Early in life he began to write for magazines. In 1889, came his first novel, "The Wave of Life," followed by "Some Correspondence and Six Conversations," and "The Smart Set."

Nothing from his pen found any prominence on the boards until the production of "Beau Brummel" in 1890 by the late Richard Mansfield. The play jumped into instant popularity and won with the years a classic place in American repertoire. Thereafter plays came two and some times three to the year, with unflagging regularity. Among the best known of them are "Nathan Hale," "The Cowboy and the Lady," "Barbara Frietchie," "Sappho" (from the French,) "The Climbers," "The Girl and the Judge," "The Last of the Dandies," "The Girl With the Green Eyes," "Her Own Way," "Her Great Match," "The Blue Mouse" (from the German,) and "The Happy Marriage."

Still other plays of his are in rehearsal for the coming season and the count in all, including those written in collaboration, will run to the astonishing total of more than fifty.

Clyde Fitch made writing pay. His income from his dramas has been estimated at all the way from $75,000 to $150,000 a year. And for all his rapid production, he was a most careful worker.

Mr. Fitch was a great believer in the American drama.

"There is a great field in America for plays, dealing with the history of the country," he once said. "Such plays in England are made social documents. There is no reason why we should not have them."

CHOOSES DECAPITATION.

REDDING, Sept. 4.—When an incoming freight train was only ten feet away from him at Anderson today, J. Brunson, a Swedish miner, aged 45, jumped from a flat car where he had been waiting and laid his neck on the rail. His head was cut off cleanly without mangling the body. He had been despondent over poor health.

RAILWAY RECORD.

MEANS FASTER COAST TRAINS.

Mail Contest Would Involve New Passenger Schedule.

Santa Fe Prepares to Reduce Running Time.

Other Roads Object, But Will Meet Any Change.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 3.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The controversy over the western mail contracts reached a stage today which involved the entire transcontinental passenger service between Chicago and St. Louis to the Pacific Coast points. During additional conferences which were held today among the representatives of the various roads involved in the threatened speed war, it developed that if the Santa Fé put on a new mail train to run between Kansas City and Los Angeles in fifty hours, it would necessitate the shortening of the passenger train schedules between Chicago and Los Angeles and San Francisco and possibly Portland.

The Burlington now carries between Chicago and Kansas City a considerable portion of the mails destined for Southern California. The Santa Fé also carries some of this mail which, under the present arrangements of routes, it is compelled to turn over to the Rock Island-Southern Pacific route at Kansas City. Neither of these roads would lose any of this mail in the event of quicker time from Kansas City west. To retain it, the roads, including the Rock Island, would be compelled to quicken the time of their fast transcontinental trains by several hours. Such changes would force the other roads to quicken their schedules and a general rearrangement of transcontinental schedules would, in all probability, follow.

The roads which are in competition with the Santa Fé and the Burlington are now making strenuous efforts to have the postoffice officials reject the offers of those roads. In connection with the controversy, the Santa Fé officials have decided upon a complete rearrangement of their train schedules, both local and through.

It is the purpose of the companies to put on a large number of additional local trains stretching from Chicago to San Francisco and Los Angeles. The purpose of this is to relieve their through trains of much work which they do and to thus permit of better transcontinental schedules and a better maintenance of such schedules.

The problem of through and local train service has been carefully considered with the result that a conclusion has been reached which will cause a revolution in the train service of that railroad and of other transcontinental roads, should they follow the example. Under the new order of things, for example, the California Limited train of the Santa Fé would practically make no stops except those necessary for changing of engines and crews.

RETURNS SHOW PROSPERITY.

IN THE EARNINGS.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—The full return of prosperity to the railroads of the United States is evidenced in reports just published of the gross earnings of twenty-five roads for the first half of August.

For the first time since the panic of 1907, the aggregate weekly gross earnings exceed the high records reached in August, 1907. For the second week in August the twenty-five roads reported gross earnings of $9,454,724, an increase of more than 6 per cent. over the same period of August, 1907, when the gross earnings reached the record point of $8,856,314 for the second week of August.

The earnings for the last week of August have not been computed, but on the basis of the increase for the second week, railroad men believe that that high record of August, 1907, of $12,853,987, will be eclipsed and a new record will be set. The total for August, 1907, was $40,601,877. The first two weeks of August, 1909, totaled $18,109,707, as against $17,659,770 for the first two weeks of August, 1907. On this basis a new record of railroad prosperity for the month of August is expected to be established.

FEWER CARS IDLE.

RUSH COMES EARLY.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—Increasing industrial, agricultural and mining activity is indicated by advance sheets of the fortnightly statement of car surpluses, and shortages, compiled by President Hale of the American Railway Association.

The statement will show that on September 1, the surplus of cars of all kinds had been reduced more than 40,000, bringing the surplus down to a little more than 100,000 cars of all kinds.

"It is important to note," said Mr. Hale today, "that this season's reduction is six weeks ahead of last year's, indicating that shortages this year will be greater than a year ago."

TRAFFIC INCREASE.

SHOWN IN ST. PAUL.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 4.—The annual report of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, given out today for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1909, shows the total revenue from freight traffic last year, was $42,341,650, as against $40,426,879 for 1908, or 4.74 per cent. increase.

The revenue from passenger traffic was $12,774,851, as against $11,883,394 for 1908, an increase of $891,497.

RUSSIAN DEMAND MODEST.

CHINA'S EXCUSE ACCEPTED.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

PEKING, Sept. 4.—M. Korotovitz, the Russian Minister to China, formally notified the foreign board today that he had received instructions from St. Petersburg to renew the Russian claim for participation in the Hankow-Sze Chuen Railroad loan of $30,000,000. He, therefore, sent a formal memorandum, asking participation in this loan for the Russo-Chinese Bank, in connection with the French Bank, but said that in view of China's representations that the loan agreement had been concluded, Russia would not seek to disturb this agreement.

WRIGHT FLIES AT BERLIN.

Aviator Gives Exhibition at Templehof Parade Grounds With Wind Blowing in Gusts.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

BERLIN, Sept. 4.—Orville Wright gave an exhibition flight in his aëroplane at the Tempelhof parade grounds this afternoon, starting at 4:55 o'clock. Ambassador and Mrs. Hill, Consul-General and Mrs. Thackeray and the members of the embassy were at the starting place, while the parade ground was filled with interested throngs.

Mr. Wright was in the air fifteen minutes. The wind blew gustily at about twenty miles an hour, and gave to the Wright aëroplane an uneven motion, often throwing the planes at acute angles.

ROSENTHAL CONTRACT OFF.

Piano Firm Said to Have Cancelled $80,000 Tour of Noted Musician.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The American concert tour of Moriz Rosenthal, the celebrated pianist, which was to begin on October 24, and for which he was to have received $80,000, has been canceled by a firm of piano manufacturers, whose instruments he contracted to use. Rosenthal, it is said, only agreed to the cancellation on the payment of about half the sum stated in the contract for the tour.

Loudon Charlton, concert manager, who booked Rosenthal for forty concerts and arranged to have him play with leading orchestras of the country, must now find other soloists to take his place. The cancellation is said to be due to the sudden determination of two leading piano-making firms to abandon the old custom of bringing noted pianists to this country in order to have their pianos advertised. Foreign pianists have come to the United States only when some piano firm guaranteed them payment for a series of concerts.

The withdrawal of this guarantee by manufacturers will mean a practical revolution in the piano business. Manufacturers will use ordinary advertising methods and the visits of foreign pianists will be less frequent.

FORM INCOME TAX LEAGUE.

Large Number of Delegates Expected Fail to Appear at Albany Meeting.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

ALBANY (N. Y.) Sept. 4.—The Income Tax League of New York was organized today at a meeting of the progressive Democrats.

The large delegation that had been expected failed to materialize, and when J. Francis Condon of Utica, the secretary, called the meeting to order at noon, only a dozen delegates were present.

John F. Crosby of New York City was made chairman, and after the organization had been perfected, resolutions prepared by William J. Bryan, were offered by Michael B. Murphy of Malone, and adopted, as follows:

"Resolved, that we, the members of the Income Tax League of the State of New York, heartily favor the ratification of the income-tax amendment and pledge ourselves and our organization to use every honorable means to secure such ratification by the State Legislature at its next session, and further

"Resolved, that we urge all voters who favor the ratification of such income tax amendment to publicly pledge all candidates for the State Legislature to vote for the ratification of such an income-tatx amendment."

BEGGARS MUST GO TO JAIL.

National Association Organized to Do Away With Professional Mendicancy.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—The National Association for the Prevention of Mendicancy and Charitable Imposture, which has just been incorporated by a number of wealthy men, purposes to do away with the professional tramp and beggar. James Forbes, one of the organizers, said:

"The purpose is to repress knavish imposture and to aid and strengthen the physically crippled and sick who may be in a way to become mendicants and impostors. We purpose to work as a sort of socialized police and hope to cover the entire country."

Impostors, Mr. Forbes explained, will be singled out in a systematic way. Photographs and records of them will be made so that in time the association will be able to unite with the police in jailing the fellows.

A dozen of the most prominent business men of Osage Reservation issued a call yesterday for a mass meeting at Bartlesville, Okla., of land owners to prevent further importation of Texas cattle. The time has come, says the call, to supplant the Texas cowmen with industrious, reliable farmers.

A $200,000,000 INVESTMENT

Manufacture of automobiles has become in a single decade one of the most important industries of the United States. In 1898 the aggregate investment in this business was only $2,000,000, but now it is given at $200,000,000, with every prospect of going still higher. There has also been a rapid advancement in medicine, especially so in regard to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. More people are learning of its wonderful merit every year, and, since it is a thoroughly reliable family medicine, it deserves to succeed. In thousands of homes it reigns supreme because for 56 years it has given satisfaction in cases of Poor Appetite, Sick Headache, Vomiting, Heartburn, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Nervousness, Biliousness, General Weakness and Malaria, Fever and Ague. You really ought to try a bottle without further delay

MISS CONSTANCE HOOD leads the field as The Times scholarship contestants enter the home stretch of the great educational race of 1909. Miss Dorothy Scherer, who superseded Miss Hood as "queen" two days ago, has been dethroned, but remains a close second.

Saturday was a field day for all of the diligent contestants, but a number of the very busiest, including Miss Hood and Miss Scherer, did not cash in all the subscriptions they obtained, preferring to hold in reserve most of their points for the final dash to the goal next Tuesday.

Nevertheless, 217,845 points were registered, divided between twenty-one of the forty-two contestants remaining in the race.

The largest gainer of the day was Raymond Austin of Pasadena, who unloaded 37,800 points and recaptured fifth place from Frank Maine, who scored a gain of 12,500 and dropped back to sixth place.

The second largest gain was made by Mary Pearl Pottol of Monrovia, who added 29,600 to her score and passed the 400,000 mark, leaving her only 53,000 behind the leader. Miss Pottol spent the greater part of the day in Los Angeles rounding up subscriptions that were overlooked by local contestants, and secured a good many. She may still be counted as a possible winner of first honors.

Murrey Royar, the famous "Redlands Rustler," made a big round-up and registered a gain of 29,210, thereby recapturing eighth place from Miss Pedley of Pomona, who scored only 1200 and dropped back to ninth place.

Amos Colborn, the Upland hustler of "Old Faith" fame, gained an even 25,000 points and came almost within 6000 of evening up his score with Frank Maine.

Fannie Swem made the biggest "killing" that it has been her good fortune to make in any one day during her entire campaign. She registered a gain of 13,360 points and moved up seven ranks in the score list to twenty-fifth place.

Edith Tidball of Santa Ana registered a gain of 11,000, but again failed to oust Florence Lambert from tenth place, for the latter succeeded in holding her position with a gain of 6780.

Alice Capron made a gain of 10,300 and remains snugly ensconced in fourth place.

Constance Hood scored a gain of 8700, just enough, with a few thousand to spare, to elbow Dorothy Scherer out of first place. Miss Scherer did not put in any appearance at contest headquarters at all during the day, being away on one of her celebrated still hunts for enough points to cinch first place in the final reckoning.

Florence Barlow made a gain of 9010 and moved up three degrees to twenty-sixth place.

David Boardman made a net gain of 5445 and remains in fourteenth place, with a very good chance to rise at least two degrees higher unless Grace Wagner and Helen Wilson have a goodly number of points in reserve for the final show-down next Tuesday.

Caryl B. Runkel made a gain of 8000 points and moved up one degree to twenty-seventh place, in spite of the fact that he was overtaken by Fannie Swem and Florence Barlow.

Ruth Ferguson made a gain of 4050 and will give Lillian Waite a hard rub for twentieth place, unless the latter has something in reserve for Tuesday.

Miss Wilson of Whittier gained 3600, and narrowly escaped being overtaken by David Boardman, who is only a little over 1000 points behind her.

Grace Wagner gained 2380, and is but a little over 300 points ahead of Miss Wilson.

Lillian Waite made a gain of 1825; Elizabeth Glasscock, 1000; Emma Blortz, 685; Kessler brothers, 600; Sterling Scheck, 210.

The score list may not be printed again until after the final count, as Sunday and Monday are holidays. Subscriptions to be voted in the contest may be cashed in on Monday, however.

The real tug of war will come on Tuesday, the closing day of the contest, when the last chance to make a winning score will expire.

Watch Monday's and Tuesday's papers for final instructions to contestants and their helpers.

Thomas H. Fillmore, Jessie B. Small, N. L. Ridderhof, Frank H. Colby, Verna, Janyce Stahl, piano; J. Benson Starr, Helen Guilford-Stadden, voice; J. Clarence Cook, Marie Azpiroz, violin; F. H. Colby, pipe organ; W. H. Mead, flute; Joseph Kozlowski, clarionet; H. T. Espinosa, saxophone; Robert Messinger, oboe; Joseph L. Edmiston, cornet; E. B. Smith, French horn; W. H. Harriss, trombone and baritone; Myrtle F. Ouellet, harp; A. S. Hobile, zither; E. S. Warren, mandolin and guitar.

Expression is in the experienced hands of M. Gertrude Hards, while Louis Ernest Dreyfus teaches all the modern languages.

It is noteworthy that all of the above-named instructors are of ripe experience, and hold high rank in their several departments.

Piano study is made charmingly interesting for the little folks by means of the Dunning system, which is taught by Mrs. Small.

Mr. Fillmore is widely known as an exponent of Dr. Mason's famous "Touch and Technic," with which system he has equipped many successful teachers.

Space will not permit of further comment on individual merit.

The public concerts and lecture recitals of this institution have attained well-deserved popularity, the interest in the events having steadily increased until the seating capacity of Blanchard Hall is taxed to the fullest.

The growth of the school has been steady since its inception, and bids fair to keep pace with the progress of the greater city.

Besides the main school in Blanchard Hall, there are four branches in different parts of the city and Pasadena.

Among the prizes to be awarded by The Times at the close of the scholarship contest, are two piano scholarships in the Fillmore School of Music, valued at $100 each. As a piano school it is especially noted among local musical institutions.

OH, JOY!

CONTESTANTS WILL CELEBRATE.

ANNUAL SCHOLARSHIP OUTING TO BE HELD AT VENICE.

Next Friday Will Be Day of Jubilee for Prize Winners and Their Friends—Grand Programme of Entertainment for Faithful Workers, Including Victors and Vanquished.

Friday, September 10, will be a red letter day for the participants in The Times scholarship contest of 1909, that is, for all who persevered until the end, whether victors or vanquished. It is then that the prizes will be awarded and the event will be celebrated in the usual joyous manner; if possible, a little more so.

All who did not cease work after the free coupons were discontinued, but who persevered until the end, will be invited. Each will be allowed to bring along one special guest to help enjoy the festivities. Contestants living outside of Los Angeles who have made creditable records in the contest, will be furnished with free transportation to the city and return to their homes, so none will have an excuse to stay away from the celebration.

All of the invited guests will report at The Times office about 9 o'clock Friday morning, where they will be provided with badges and joyous noise-making instruments. Starting at 9:30 a. m., a special Los Angeles Pacific train will transport the merry party to Venice, where a free bath, for all who need it after their arduous labors, will be the first thing on the programme. The dip in the surf and plunge will be followed by an elegant luncheon at Hotel St. Mark's.

During the afternoon the boats on the Venice canals, the miniature railway, the dancing pavilion, bumping the bumps, and other places of amusements will be at the disposal of the scholarship merrymakers. There will also be a special matinee for them at the electric theater, and daylight fireworks from the Venice breakwater. A band concert on St. Mark's plaza will also help to enliven the occasion.

A detailed programme of the gala event will be published later. It will be a jollification worth looking forward to, and should inspire every contestant to do his or her best to be one of the big prize-winners next Tuesday.

WELSH SINGERS PLEASE.

Ohio Male Chorus Appears Before Large Audience—Will Appear in Churches Today.

The Ohio Male Chorus, composed of fifty Welsh singers from Lima, O., gave a concert in Simpson Auditorium last night to one of the largest audiences that ever filled the house. All the numbers were excellent, and without exception were encored, but those that opened the programme, "America," "Spartan Heroes" and a special arrangement of "Old Black Joe," as an encore, were unsurpassed in richness of harmony and precision of rendition.

The chorus is fresh from the Seattle exposition, where it won the prize over all comers. As the manager put it last night, they spent $8000 to capture a prize of $500, just for the love of music. Members of the chorus will sing in different churches today, and at 3 o'clock this afternoon the full chorus will sing at the First Congregational Church, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., in connection with a lecture on Africa.

PULL FOR PARK.

Residents of Southwestern Part of the City Want One Located on West Adams Street.

A mass meeting was held last night at Washington and Cimarron streets for the purpose of discussing civic improvements in the southwestern part of the city. Cramer's Band gave their regular Saturday night band concert, which was largely attended.

After the concert several speeches were made urging various improvements, the principal of which is the establishment of a park, which the residents of that section want located on West Adams street.

BEARS TAKE WARNING.

Three valiant public officials, armed with guns and all other necessary paraphernalia, will leave Los Angeles tonight in quest of bear in the mountains around Havilah, Kern county. They have been after bear before, but they are not saying anything about the successes or failure with which they have met. This time, they hope to bring back several hairy hides. The party includes William D. Shearer, Clerk of the District Court of Appeal; Robert L. Brown, Deputy County Clerk, and David W. Flanigan, Deputy County Recorder. They expect to be absent ten days or two weeks.

The reason of our great success is due to the uniform high grade work done by us.

Flexible Rubber Plates

Have many advantages over the old thick, cumbersome, ordinary rubber plates and even over gold plates, being much lighter and thinner. These plates are flexible, only a trifle thicker than heavy writing paper, fit closer and adhere better to the roof of the mouth. Particles of food and small seeds cannot get under them. They will last longer, are stronger than any others and will not break, as they will give first, being flexible. Dr. Schiffman's own process and made only by us.

I have always heretofore shared with most people the dread of a dentist's chair. But now am sure I shall not dread the ordeal again, for at your office I can truthfully say, "I was not hurt at all." Even the bridgework which I had dreaded was painless and most satisfactory.
MRS. EARL ROGERS.

It gives me great pleasure to state that Dr. Schiffman extracted an impacted wisdom tooth for me, which had been giving me great annoyance for years. It was extracted absolutely without a particle of pain to me. It was easily worth 100 times the amount paid.
ROBERT MARSH,
Of Robert Marsh & Co., H. W. Hellman Bldg.

Dr. Schiffman placed bridgework in my mouth which has proven, after five years' use, to be a perfect piece of work and durable. Is now quite as serviceable as original teeth. A very difficult tooth was pulled before this bridgework was put in, and "It didn't hurt a bit."
C. S. SPRECHER,
Printer and Publisher, 115 Winston st.

Dr. Schiffman extracted twenty teeth for me, and did it absolutely without pain. I have had a great deal of experience with other dentists, and can truthfully say that Dr. Schiffman's method is best of all. I highly recommend him to everyone.
T. B. ROSECRANS,
Soldiers' Home.

For all the past fourteen years Dr. Schiffman has been doing my dental work. In all they extracted and replaced by means of crown and bridgework some twenty odd teeth. The work is very satisfactory and I highly recommend him.
H. A. WITTICK,

Have had molar tooth extracted by Dr. Schiffman. It was a complicated task, but work was done very successfully and I heartily recommend Dr. Schiffman to any needing dental work.

I have been treated by Dr. Schiffman for years. I have tried all the different methods, and I can say unhesitatingly no dentist or physician has ever operated with such success or skill. BURNS TO WATER'S EDGE.

Launch Destroyed at Avalon and Owner Injured—Gasoline Tank Explodes. Arrivals at Metropole.

AVALON, Sept. 4.—A sudden detonation like a cannon shot startled Avalon this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock when the gasoline tank on the launch Jonathan, belonging to William Hunt, Jr., exploded. The boat was just back of the Tuna Clubhouse. It immediately took fire and was completely destroyed. The owner, Mr. Hunt, a member of the Tuna Club, was aboard and was burned about the head and shoulders. He leaped into the water to escape the fire, swam to a skiff near by, and then collapsed. He was taken to his home, where his burns were attended to by physicians.

At a special meeting of the governing board of the Catalina Light Tackle Club last evening, E. L. Doran was appointed acting secretary and treasurer for the unexpired term of Gilmour Sharp, who was called to Europe a few days ago.

ROBBERY AT OCEAN PARK.

Police Are Notified That Outlaws Will Hold Up Coach on the Beach Today.

OCEAN PARK, Sept. 4.—Tomorrow afternoon the beach will be the scene of a thrilling robbery, but it is safe to say that neither the police department nor the township constabulary will even hunt for the perpetrators of the crime. The Out West Riding Club will be here in full force, and the frontier colors of black and red will be prominent. As introductory to the street fair, which opens Monday, this organization will tomorrow afternoon give a big free show. Permission has been secured from the city to take possession of the entire ocean front from Pier avenue to Venice, and at low tide the old stage coach of the plains, drawn by eight mules, will be robbed. Of course, the outlaws will be attacked by cowboys and ranchmen, sheriffs and posses, and many shots will be exchanged, the robbers captured, the bleached blonde rescued and returned to her rich father, and the stage coach righted—so that the scene may be reënacted during each afternoon of the carnival.

Contracts were closed today by the management whereby daily balloon ascensions and parachute drops are guaranteed for each day of the fair. The paraphernalia for the high diver, who drops from a ninety-two-foot ladder into a tub of water, is being erected, and this thrilling feat will be one of the daily free shows. The grounds of the attraction have been fenced, and the last of the tents of the several attractions are being erected. The country store is about ready to begin business, and local social leaders are busy filing their voices in order to perform the spieler duties that have been assigned to them by the promoters of the publicity project. Monday is to witness the opening of the carnival, and the prediction is ventured along the beach that the trolley lines will be called upon to carry record-breaking Labor Day crowds. In fact, large crowds are expected during the whole week. Entertainment of high class has been provided.

IN TROUBLE.

SIXTY VIOLATE PURE FOOD LAW.

LOS ANGELES SALOONS CAUGHT BY INVESTIGATION.

State Board of Health Approves Charges, Many of Which Are Based on Serving of Carbonated Water When Shasta, Bartlett or Napa Is Called for.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Sixty charges of pure food violations were approved by the State Board of Health today chiefly against saloons in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Oakland. It is not the free lunch that has had the benefit of this official investigation, but the festive soda lemonade. Saloons that have been filling the glasses of customers with carbonated water when Shasta, Bartlett, Napa or something else was called for are to be prosecuted. Nearly half of them are in Los Angeles.

The charges, properly drawn up by the State Board of Health, will be mailed early next week. Dist.-Atty. Fredericks will receive his share of the cases and be asked to press the prosecutions at once.

The names of the alleged violators would not be given out by the Board of Health today, the members saying the list is not public property until it is printed in the monthly bulletin issued by the board.

Some are for mislabeled gluten flour which is not gluten at all, while other charges are those of putting poor butter up in packages bearing the labels of well-known dairy sections for the purpose of misleading the unsuspecting housewife. A few other mislabeled articles were found.

The most serious violations unearthed today by the medicos were several cases of adulterated chopped meats. Sulphur dioxide is used by some butchers in their hamburger and sausages.

This is strictly tabooed under the pure-food laws and the meat dealers who compound these mixtures will be called upon to defend themselves in court as soon as the District Attorneys of their counties get their hands on the charges filed by the State health officials.

TENNIS DRAWINGS.

Events at Del Monte Promise to Be Interesting, Owing to the Class of the Players.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DEL MONTE, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The drawing for the men's singles in the Coast championship tennis tourney at Del Monte has developed good playing strength, despite the absence of Long, McLoughlin and Gardner.

The return of Freeman, Coast champion in 1902, and Reuben Hunt, and the presence of Foley, Dawson and Rogers insures good tennis throughout the meet. Few of the top-notchers drew against each other in the first round, the only notable exceptions being Freeman against Hunt, and Nourse against Swengers. The drawing resulted as follows:

First round, upper half—Freeman against Hunt; Spilvalo against Janes.

Preliminaries — Pyburn against Haynes, Code against Grant, McClure against Robley, Comstock against H. Rogers, Bromfield against Foley, Fuller against Knowlton, Dawson against McSwain, Nourse against Swengers.

First round, lower half—Harper against C. Rogers, Finnigan against Dirby.

TENNIS NOW ON DECK.

Southerners Expected to Carry Off Honors in State Championship Tourney.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After the final rounds in the Californa golf championships today, tennis will hold sway on the Del Monte courts. The failure of Maurice McLoughlin and Melville Long to enter into the championship singles after a successful campaign in the East placed a damper on the coming matches scheduled for Monday, but the appearance of the southern crack racket wielders bids fair to place the tournament upon a high class plane.

Entries for the tournament, which includes men's singles and doubles, women's singles and doubles, and junior singles and doubles, will close tonight at Del Monte.

Bundy and Sinsabaugh will also be among the absentees from the California players who competed in eastern championships. Bell, Freeman, Holmes and Browns, however, will make up a formidable contingent from the south and look to have a monopoly of the trophies.

It is almost a certainty that Southern California will make a clean sweep of the doubles. George Janes has not signified his intention of competing, and with this crack northern player out of the coming tournament, the north will stand scant chance of annexing any of the rich trophies.

Tyler and Schwengers will represent the Northwest, but it is doubtful if they will figure against the Southern California players. Hazel Hotchkiss and the Sutton sisters will appear in the women's singles and doubles, and should carry away a share of the honors.

STATE FAIR RACES.

Easter Takes the Classic Stanford Stake in Very Easy Fashion from All Style.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 4.—Easter, driven by Rutherford, won the well-known Stanford stake at the State fair races today in straight heats. His nearest competitor, All Style, driven by Quinn, showed plenty of speed but was unable to keep on the earth at critical moments.

Only in the final heat when the best time was made, did the second best animal press the leader to the finish. But three horses started in the event. Summary:

Trotting, Stanford stake, $1300; Easter won three straight heats; All Style second, Complete third; time, 2:19½, 2:19, 2:17.

Trotting, 2:10 class, purse $1000: Era won three heats, Golden Mut second, Della Derby third; time, 2:10, 2:12½, 2:12½.

Amateur drivers: Harold B won three heats, Kermit second, Briarwood third; time, 2:12, 2:13, 2:13¼.

Vancouver Struggle.

VANCOUVER (B. C.) Sept. 4.—Results:

Five and one-half furlongs: Virgie Cassie won, Lewiston second, Binocular third; time 1:07 2-5.

MONTEREY FLOOD.

pathy that was little suspected before this flood came to give it practical demonstration. Mexico has not had many occasions to exhibit this neighborly sentiment.

DISPELS HATRED OF AMERICA.

One of the factors supposed to enter into the popular unrest was an anti-American feeling. That there was much of this sentiment, for various reasons, can hardly be questioned. It has manifested itself openly on more than one occasion, recently, and it is the talk of the lower and middle classes, the lower classes in Mexico being synonymous with the poorer classes. The flood has given the American resident in Mexico and those across the border in the States an opportunity to show that they have substantial interest in the welfare and comfort of the people of Mexico. The way in which Americans have come to the rescue is not lost on the Mexican mind.

How quickly the impression of good will of the Americans toward their neighbors of the Mexican republic spread among the people here, was exhibited in the scenes at the American consulate. Consul-General Hanna not only was quick to send appeals to his countrymen for aid in a distressing catastrophe, but he made the consulate virtually an open house, where the suffering people were sheltered, fed and clothed.

Consul-General Hanna did no more nor no better for the refugees than did the authorities and charitable folk of Monterey for them, but the tender offer of aid from another country carried with it the sentiment and a fascination that could not be resisted. When the orphans and children cared for at the consulate insisted on kissing the hand of the Consul-General, they were acknowledging to Mr. Hanna something more than a personal obligation to him. They were expressing a new regard for the true American spirit toward the Mexican.

SETTLES LABOR TROUBLE.

On account of the long drouths, members of the poor classes had come in from the farms, where the outlook was desperate for many months, to the cities, where they hoped to find employment and a chance to earn a living. This movement from rural to urban communities resulted in a glut of labor, with the result that many had a hard time to make ends meet. Discontent ensued, the people began to discuss their lot, the radical anti-government press found its opportunity to add fuel to the flames, and in this way much agitation was engendered. Contrary to many reports that have been sent out, there was no such agitation as portended revolution if the thinking men who made a study of the situation are to be credited.

With the movement "back to the soil," the labor problem, it is believed, will be simplified and there will be less cause for discontent. In bringing about this movement and in adding immeasurably to the wealth that will come to the farms, the rains are now welcomed as a forestaller of political trouble.

INVENTS FLYING BICYCLE.

New York Man Rigs Up Fans and Plane Above Wheel and Makes Successful Test.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Now that flying is to be the fad, Albert Teals proposes to bring the art within the reach of everybody who can afford a bicycle. He has rigged a mast of aluminum tubing on a wheel, rising fifteen feet above the bar. At the top of the mast is a fan four feet in diameter. Two feet below the top is another fan of the same dimensions.

A monoplane is attached two feet farther below. The fans move in opposite directions, creating a vacuum in the two feet of space between them. They force the air below the monoplane, which is saucer-shaped. Mr. Teale rigged a wheel according to his theory for a trial, and the test was successful.

FIRE IN BORDER TOWN.

TEXICO (Texas-New Mexico) Sept. 4.—One-fourth of the business center of this city, which is situated on the border of Texas and New Mexico, was destroyed by fire today. A loss of $60,000 resulted. The blaze is believed to be of incendiary origin.

NEWS REPORTS FROM CORRESPONDENTS OF THE TIMES.

SAN DIEGO.

NOBLEMAN LIES BENEATH WAVES.

BURIED FROM LAUNCH BY HIS DYING REQUEST.

Frenchman, Whose Mother Was Countess and Who Would Never Tell Father's Name, Passes from Mortal View—Woman Injured in Auto Wreck.

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 4.—In compliance with his dying request, a member of the French nobility, who shrouded his real identity under the name of John Strube, was buried at sea just off Point Loma this afternoon.

Strube, who died here Thursday, was born in the Province of Alsace, France, December 4, 1818. His mother was a Countess. What title his father held, or who he was, Strube would never tell.

In 1852 a political intrigue drove Strube into exile in this country. He engaged in the Civil War as a soldier in the Northern army, and later came to San Diego.

The funeral services at sea were held under the auspices of Datus E. Coon Post, G.A.R. The heavily weighted body was lowered over the side of the launch and consigned to the ocean.

WINDOW WASHER FALLS.

While engaged in washing windows in the rooming house of Mrs. John Hall, known as the "Alpha," on the corner of Fifth and H streets, this morning, William Ruhl, a window washer, 35 years old, fell a distance of twenty feet to a stone pavement, and escaped with nothing more serious that slight cuts on his head and bruises on various parts of his body.

Witnesses of the accident were surprised to see the man get up and walk unassisted into a nearby drug store, where his wounds were dressed.

BULL FIGHT.

Felix Robert, the French matador, assisted by F. Palomar Caro, F. Luiz Loveto and a troupe of toreadors of distinction, will meet four imported Chilaula bulls in the arena at Tia Juana, Sunday. A novelty to be introduced is the vaulting of bulls without the aid of a pole. Another feature will be the act of Miss Margaret Arrow, a Texas girl, in what is known as "Don Tarcredo." This act consists of posing as a statue in the center of the arena while the bull charges. Any movement puts her life in danger, and the performance requires an abundance of nerve.

NO LIGHTS, SAYS DRIVER.

Harry Putnam, agent for the Portland-Colton Cement Company, and his wife were on their way to a downtown theater in their runabout last night, when the right wheel of the machine hit a pile of sand in the street and the car turned completely over, painfully, though not seriously injuring Mrs. Putnam.

Putnam declares that there were no lights or danger signals of any description at the pile, which is on the site of a building being erected for M. Hall on Fourth street, between B and C.

The auto, which was valued at $900, was practically wrecked.

PREDICTS BIG ENROLLMENT.

E. L. Hardy, principal of the San Diego High School, predicts an unusually large attendance when the fall term opens, Tuesday. It is estimated that from 850 to 900 pupils will enroll this year. When school begins pupils will find a number of improvements in the building, grounds and courses of study. The school grounds have been regraded, cement curbs put in around the lawns and new tennis courts and cement approaches to the buildings constructed.

Ventilation of the building has been improved, and additions have been made to the library, which now contains nearly three thousand volumes. The teaching staff has been increased to a total of thirty instructors, one-half of whom are men. A feature this year will be the staging of a number of light operas by the class in music.

ENTERTAIN HOME TALENT.

Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Hammond of Coronado Tent City were the hosts at a banquet last night at Tent City Restaurant. The guests were all who took part in the "Joy Seekers," a comedy produced in the Pavilion Theater at Coronado this week.

The male members of the cast presented Charles R. Stickney, the composer of the piece, with a handsome stickpin as a token of their appreciation of his talent. All those who had any connection with the production of the "Joy Seekers" have sent letters of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Hammond for the interest they took in the production.

BLIGHT CAUSES LOSS.

Walnut Crop in Orange County Suffers, Says State Conductor of Farmers' Institutes.

ANAHEIM, Sept. 4.—J. B. Neff, State Conductor of Farmers' Institutes, stated this afternoon that he believed there would be between two-thirds and three-fourths of an average walnut crop this year, but he thinks there is still a very heavy loss on account of the blight—in fact much heavier than the average grower estimates.

Mr. Neff for two years has been experimenting with top grafting of walnut trees and says the blight shows very little on these trees. He believes after four or five years the top grafted trees will bear a full crop. Mr. Neff says that much better results are obtained by top grafting trees that are not over five years old, although he believes older trees can be made to increase their output to a great extent by this work if a good resistant variety is selected in the way of grafts.

Mr. Neff says the walnut crop is coming in earlier this year than last and that some nuts are now beginning to fall.

ELSINORE.

ELSINORE, Sept. 4.—The funeral of Mrs. Peter Wall, whose body was brought here Thursday from Sonoma county, was held yesterday.

Miss Jessie Chamberlin, assistant in the postoffice, returned last evening from a month's vacation at the beaches. She was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Horace De Bora of Pomona.

Misses Essie and Jessie Dobbs of Holtville are the guests of Misses Mamie and Maud Kunz, also of Holtville, who are spending several months here on Poe street.

ROW OVER HIGH SCHOOL.

New Moorpark District May Be Divided—Legal Proceedings Threatened.

VENTURA, Sept. 4.—The row over the location of the Moorpark Union High School may knock the whole new district "into a cocked hat." It is claimed that the new district was not legally formed, and Simi and Santa Susana districts, which wanted the High School located within the boundaries of Simi district, are now getting ready to enjoin the Supervisors and the County School Superintendent to prevent the opening of the High School.

On the other side, Oxnard claims that because of irregularities in setting Somis district into Moorpark, that district is still attached to Oxnard, and must be taxed to support Oxnard High School. And Oxnard may enjoin.

It will be remembered that Somis made a bid for the location of the Moorpark High School. The whole matter, however, seems to be in a legal tangle, and Moorpark will have no High School this year.

The trouble has arisen through changes made in the law by the last Legislature, effective July 1, prescribing forms of procedure, which, it is claimed by the protestants, were not followed.

TO FINISH STREET WORK.

Contractor Montgomery has announced his purpose to put on twenty-five additional teams, with tampers, and finish the petrolithic paving of all the streets in Ventura before the winter rains set in.

At a meeting held at the Avenue schoolhouse this afternoon, it was decided to take steps looking to a bond issue to pave the Casitas Pass road by the petrolithic process.

NEW PARISH AT UPLAND.

St. Mark's Organized—Raisin Association Formed—City Now Enjoys Gas—Band Concert.

UPLAND, Sept. 4.—Under the title of Saint Mark's Parish, a number of the Episcopalians of this colony met and perfected organization in this city, recently. The initial meeting was well attended. The following officers were chosen: Egbert B. Clark, chairman; J. M. Webster, secretary; Memorial and Pledge Committee, Mmes. E. B. Clark, Upland, J. R. Canney, Cucamonga; B. B. Mann, Ontario and Imogene W. Huey, Upland and J. R. Canney, Cucamonga. J. M. Webster was chosen choir director, and Fred M. Bryan, organist; C. P. Huey of Upland, delivered an earnest address on "Feeding the Church." It is proposed to organize a Sunday-school and services are to be held on the first and third Sundays of each month in the rooms of the Woman's Literary Club.

A wedding in which Upland and Highland people were interested was that of William E. Westland, editor of the Highland Messenger, and Miss Susan E. Brown, who for some time had been a nurse at the Soldiers' Home, at Sawtelle. They were married September 1, in Los Angeles, at the home of the great-uncle of the groom, Rev. Henderson Judd, who officiated, and after a short visit to San Diego and La Jolla, they will be at home to friends in Highland.

RAISIN ASSOCIATION.

The California Raisin Association is the name of the newest organization of this section, and is being formed at Cucamonga by the growers of this important crop. It is hoped to secure better markets by the move.

Work has been begun here on addition to the Upland Garage, which will practically double its floor space.

The Ontario-Upland Gas Company promised to have gas in its mains in Upland September 1, and was in a fair way to make good this promise. But a couple of days before the date set, workmen were unfortunate enough to pierce with a crossing augur one of the large vitrified pipes of the San Antonio Water Company, and this caused a delay of twenty-four hours. However, last evening, during the band concert, there was a gaslight demonstration, the entire open-air band stand being brilliantly lighted with the lamps installed by Manager Anderson, of the gas company. There was a very large attendance at the concert.

WATER GUARDED.

The San Antonio Water Company has now completed the laying of a pipe line from the Sixteenth street wells south, which makes it possible to guard very closely from contamination, the domestic supply for the city reservoirs. It is said the water comes directly from well to reservoir now, with no chance for turnout. In years past there has been a feeling that perhaps the water supply might be responsible for at least a part of the typhoid fever, of which almost every summer season has brought more or less of a siege.

WANTS HIGHER OFFER.

Santa Ana School Board Not Satisfied With Bids for Abandoned Fifth Street Building.

SANTA ANA, Sept. 4.—The school board is waiting for a higher offer on an abandoned school building on the West Fifth-street grounds. The highest offer so far is $377, which is but a small part of the original cost of the building.

The last will of Domingo Bastanchury, a wealthy cattleman and sheepman and pioneer of this county, has been opened. The estate is to be divided in equal shares among his widow and sons. The will was written on October 30, 1893.

PALO VERDE VALLEY.

NEIGHBORS, Sept. 3.—The August rains were of such unusual duration that over 200 tons of hay were destroyed.

J. E. Pierson has begun "dry farming" on the mesa.

Mrs. P. H. Bodkin left on the auto for Los Angeles, Monday, accompanied by her daughter, Florence.

The stage automobiles are filled almost every trip with landseekers. The heavy rains have rendered the desert roads almost impassable, especially crossing the mountains. These autos have been of great service to the public, as the trip that formerly took two days now can be done in five hours.

Mrs. J. E. Neighbors and her three children have left for Los Angeles to remain a year or so. Mr. Neighbors will follow later on.

Rev. J. W. Martin of Los Angeles is arranging to move into the valley.

TEHACHEPI.

TEHACHEPI, Sept. 1.—The Great Pocahontas of the Great Council of California, instituted a new council of forty charter members here Tuesday. Mrs. Booth was largely aided in the work by Sister Meda Randall of Redlands and Sister Anna Painter of Riverside.

INSTITUTE AT FULLERTON.

FULLERTON, Sept. 4.—A two days' session of the Farmers' Institute was commenced here this morning, and interesting papers were read. The attendance was not as large as had been expected. State Conductor Neff is in charge.

SAN BERNARDINO.

SEEKS DOCTOR, FINDS DEATH.

TRACK WALKER KILLED IN THE SANTA FE YARDS.

Was Hurrying to Obtain Medical Aid for Wife Who Had Just Given Birth to Child When He Was Struck by Locomotive—Woman Waits All Night in Dread.

SAN BERNARDINO, Sept. 4.—Struck and instantly killed while hurrying to this city for medical assistance for his wife and baby, but a few hours old, was the terrible fate of Pedro Negrete in the Santa Fé yards in this city.

The track-walker was struck by three locomotives, coupled at the northern limits of the yard. They either came down upon him under the cover of darkness or he supposed they were on an adjoining track. He met his death beneath the pilot of the leading engine, a moment after it struck him. His velocipede, upon which he was riding, was hurled for several hundred feet along the track before being pushed from the roadbed. Negrete was badly crushed beneath the engine before being shoved to one side. The accident occurred without the knowledge of the engineman, who proceeded, not knowing they had run down and killed the man.

The remains were brought in shortly after midnight, being found by a teamster.

All during the night the man's wife waited for the return of her husband. At daybreak the section foreman telegraphed that his track-walker had failed to return. It was not until then that the remains were identified.

The "Ville de Paris" of Los Angeles is conducting a great sale of women's ready-to-wear garments at their branch store, located at No. 529 Third street, between E and F streets, San Bernardino. The merchandise offered is fresh and new, and the sale prices average about half the original values.

Industrial Independence.

THE ANTI-UNION SHOP MEANS PROSPERITY FOR COMMUNITY BY ITS CONTINUOUS OPERATION.

IMPORTANCE OF THE OPEN SHOP.

The insistent demand of labor-union agitators for a closed shop naturally leads to the inquiry as to what is a "closed shop" and what is an "open shop." American Industries answers as follows:

"An 'open' shop means one where all are treated on an equality. The employer is free to employ whom he will, and the employee is free to join or not to join the unions, according to his individual judgment of his interests. That is the spirit of true Americanism—a fair field and no favor. The 'closed' shop means the closing of the avenues of employment for labor, and of profit for capital. As between man and man no trades unionist can defend this policy to the prejudice of his fellow-workmen. It, therefore, is a case of the union against the individual non-union workman, and that is 'unfair.' It is so unfair that it is condemned whenever it gets into court."

Because of unionite demands the open shop means an anti-union shop, while the closed shop, on the other hand, means a union shop. Expressed in this way, the issue is plainly stated and is easily understood. The anti-union shop is one uncontrolled by the unions. The union shop is one where neither the independent laborer nor the employer himself has anything to say about its management. The union makes the rate of wages and compels the employer to sign an agreement accepting the same, and defines the conditions under which the shop may be operated. There is no agreement on the part of the employees regarding the amount of product for the wages paid. There is no provision for the employer to discharge what he believes to be inefficient workmen. Such a discharge always results in an appeal to the union bosses, and if the man be not reinstated a strike is precipitated. The employer's business may be ruined, but that counts as nothing so long as unionism prevails and the barnacles feeding upon it get their pay.

The blight of unionism was well illustrated last week at Saco, Me., where the York Manufacturing Company found it necessary to shut down its mills, throwing 2000 operatives out of work, because of a strike of weavers when an increase of 4 cents a "cut" of woven cloth was refused. At first the demand for increased wages was made by sixty-two weavers. This was refused and the operatives quit work. The following day seventy-five more weavers quit work, this being the union method of enforcing the demand for increased wages. This derangement of the weaving department affected the operatives of other departments, and the management shut down the whole plant for an indefinite period. The daily pay roll of the company was about $3500. The withdrawal of this amount from daily circulation affects the prosperity of the whole community. The members of the Weavers' Union, who are the ones that precipitated the shut-down, justify their course by the statement that the members of the union could not do otherwise than strike when the demand for increased wages was refused. Whether the profit made by the company would permit the payment of the increase demanded received no consideration. Evidently it would not, or the mills would not have been so promptly shut down. Had the company decided to continue operations the union spinners would soon have gone out, and would have been followed by other unionists. The cotton mills of the East are so nearly union shops that the unions can seriously cripple their operation. The only way to establish anti-union conditions is to shut down the whole plant, an action that takes courage, because of the injury that may result by compelling customers to go elsewhere for goods. Starvation conditions are the only ones that appeal to unionists. When there is no food in the house they are willing to ignore union shop conditions.

The steel trades have been so harassed by the exorbitant demands of unionism that they have been driven into the determination to make their shops anti-union for their self-preservation. The Republic Iron and Steel Company invested millions of dollars in costly machinery, whereby workmen were enabled to earn very high wages. Now the company is tearing down these mills and replacing them with machinery which the labor-unions cannot control. The high priced strikers and hundreds of other workmen have been discharged and will be superseded by machinery which will do the work better and for less money.

The anti-union shop is the only one that the employers can control—a fact that is becoming more and more apparent each year.

Ignore Union Shop Demand.

A New York dispatch says the officers of the New York and New Jersey Metal Trades Association have tabled the request for New York of the International Association of Machinists for the closed shop and a new wage scale. They will not be taken up unless some aggressive step is taken by the union, and in such case summary action will be taken by the employers. The demands affect about 15,000 machinists in New York and some of the towns in New Jersey nearest New York. When demands were first made many machinists were idle, and it is said that while some other trades have improved since the business depression, during which the wages of the machinists were not cut, the demand for machinists is still less than the supply.

Strikers Given Severe Sentence.

The strike of Japanese sugar plantation workers at Honolulu has received no sympathy from the courts of the Territory of Hawaii. Two months' imprisonment and a fine of $300 each was the sentence imposed by Judge J. T. De Bolt on President Makino of the Japanese Higher Wage Association, Editor Soga of the Nippu Jiji, the Japanese newspaper supporting the strike of the Japanese plantation laborers, and Negoro and Tasheka, assistant editors on that paper. The four Japanese were found guilty August 18 of criminal conspiracy in connection with the strike. The limit under the law is a year's imprisonment and $400 fine.

Strike That Was Lost.

Four thousand hatmakers in Orange, N. J., who struck seven months ago to force the manufacturers to permit the union label on their product, have unanimously agreed to accept the proposition advanced by Gov. Fort of New Jersey, who acted in the capacity of peacemaker between the unions and the manufacturers.

After much debating it was suggested by Gov. Fort that the strikers return to work and accept the conditions that prevailed preceding the strike.

DIES FROM INJURIES.

William H. Perkins, aged about 45, died at 8 o'clock last night in the County Hospital from injuries sustained in a fall from the platform of a windmill near East Hollywood at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. G. W. Guinn, for whom Perkins worked for eight years, said last night that the man came from Connecticut and had no known relatives. He was taking down a windmill and was standing on the platform, thirty-five feet high, when he was taken with a fit and fell to the ground. Both of his legs were broken in the fall and he sustained other injuries which caused him great suffering until he died.

The F. O. Engstrum Company has secured the contract for another building at Agnews, Cal., for the State Hospital. It will be of reinforced concrete treatment. The contract price is $87,876.

Chief of Police Is Not to Resign His Office.

Office of the Times, No. 28 S. Raymond Ave.

PASADENA, Sept. 5.—The local Humane Society yesterday forwarded to the State organization a letter urging the draft a resolution protesting against the entertainment of President Taft through the means of a bull fight at Juarez, Mex., at which place he is to meet President Diaz.

The society, believing that the knowledge that the President of the United States was a spectator at such an exhibition would carry a baneful influence, and that the sport is debasing, cruel and inhuman, has called on the State organization to take action.

The proposed resolution asks that the people of Mexico furnish some other means of entertainment not unbefitting for the Presidents of the two nations to witness or participate in. The officers of the society believe that this would meet the wishes of President Taft, also, for they point out that he is a lover of pure and wholesome sports and has never shown a desire to attend vicious and brutalizing exhibitions.

WELCOME TO TAFT.

Pasadena's welcome to the President October 12 is to be second only to the annual Tournament of Roses carnival in the wealth of its floral beauty. South Pasadena and other suburbs have signified their intention of joining in impressing on the Chief Magistrate that Southern California and especially Pasadena is the garden-spot of the country.

Special cars will be run carrying children from all points in Pasadena and from the suburbs in order to [illegible] them along the route where the shower of flowers will take place.

In speaking of the plans Mayor Thomas Earley said: "The President will be submerged in roses, with only his jolly and his jovial smile showing above the mass of bloom." President James A. B. Scherer of Throop Institute said: "It certainly is a unique idea—a mile of flowers for the President." President [illegible] of the Board of Trade said: "The plan is a grand one and will be carried out successfully." George P. Cary of the Tournament of Roses: "Anything with flowers carries the spirit of Pasadena. It will be a tribute to the President."

Secretary A. J. Bertonneau of the Board of Trade, with whom the idea originated, said: "If the President will dine with us, we will give him a feast of flowers. Better that a city be noted for its flowers than for the finest banquet possible to spread."

Five hundred little flower bearers will greet the President of the United States when he comes to Pasadena, and the choicest flowers that are grown will be strewn in his pathway and he will get the heartiest welcome that a loyal people can give their Chief Executive.

FAVOUR NOT TO RESIGN.

Chief of Police Favour has wired from Bonanza, Or., that he has no intention of resigning. This word from the Chief was in answer to a query as to the authenticity of rumors in Pasadena that he had purchased a ranch in Oregon and intended to forsake this city. The rumors were started through the report of a northern newspaper containing an item that Chief Favour had purchased a ranch near Bonanza and said that he would make it his future home.

CIRCUS MADE TO ORDER.

A strange circus will be held on the summit of Mt. Wilson Monday by the guests of the hotel. For the past week small boys have been collecting snakes, horned toads, squirrels and other animals and reptiles to form the menagerie. These will take the place of elephants, tigers and lions and one self-sacrificing youth will submit to the changing of his features to represent the famous dog-faced boy. A young lady with a facetious vein has offered herself as the fat woman and will submit to a padding process to assume the proper proportions. Acrobats summering on the mountain will be the clowns and the others have been assigned tasks according to their abilities. The programme is quite startling. The parade will start at 9:30 in the morning about the mountain trails, to be followed by chariot races, bronco-busting exhibitions and horseback riding by ladies. In the side show there will be [illegible]co, the snake charmer; Lloyd with a minstrel troop, Dam[illegible] in a knife-throwing stunt, Durbo, palmist; Durebo, the tattooed man; a Salome dancer, a tribe of Indians and other attractions, besides pink lemonade.

ANOTHER FREE BABY.

Mrs. Elizabeth Grinnell of the Pasadena Humane Society is the custodian of a ten days' old baby girl, which is offered for adoption. The little tot is the child of an excellent mother and it is expected that there will be a hundred applicants too many, as has frequently been the case when the Humane Society has had a bouncing baby like this one to dispose of. The child will be given to the first applicant who can show that she will receive a good Christian home and that she will have an opportunity to carve a future for herself.

MRS. BESANT'S VISIT.

Mrs. Annie Besant, the lecturer on theosophy, spoke this afternoon at the Shakespeare Clubhouse at 3 o'clock. She was the guest in Pasadena of the local branch of the society she represents and was shown every courtesy. A large audience greeted her and applauded her words.

NOT TO INVESTIGATE.

Mayor Earley, Judge Klamroth and [illegible] Willett investigated the rumor that charity patients are not admitted to the Pasadena Hospital. They found there is no real basis for the report in the case of Henry Fessler, a would-be suicide, who, it was stated, was refused care after emergency treatment until a weekly sum had been paid. The board of directors of the hospital will take no cognizance of the report, as it has already been investigated.

The meeting of the directors was held at the summer home of Mrs. Robert J. Burdette at Cliffton-by-the-Sea, as the wife of the famous pastor-humorist was not able to make the journey to Pasadena. Mrs. Burdette is obliged to be very careful as she is only recovering from a serious illness.

TOURNAMENT MEETING.

President George Cary has called a meeting of the stockholders of the Tournament of Roses Association for Thursday. It is expected that action will then be taken toward mortgaging the eight acres owned by the association for the purpose of improving the park. It is believed that $8000 will be obtained and that this will be immediately expended in making improvements in the park.

PASADENA NEWS NOTES.

It is expected that September 18 will be the opening day of the Children's Playground at Vernon avenue and Colorado street.

LOOKING FOR WARSHIPS.

Announcement for Naval Vessels That Will Visit Santa Monica for Pier Dedication.

SANTA MONICA, Sept. 4.—From the Navy Department today came information to the Pier Dedication Committee to the effect that the two cruisers and four torpedo boats that are to participate in the dedicatory ceremonies on Admission Day will arrive and anchor just off the end of the new pier at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of Tuesday. The ships will be in position to receive visitors all day Wednesday and Thursday. The fleet selected to protect these shores for the three days is headed by the cruisers Albany and St. Louis.

DEATH OF MRS. GOODWIN.

Mrs. Cornelia Goodwin, widow of Harry B. Goodwin and niece of John P. Jones, former United States Senator, died last night at her home on Fourth street, following an illness of several weeks. She was born in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1876, and spent a part of her girlhood in this city, where she was married. Later, San Francisco became her home, and she resided there until after the earthquake, when she returned to this city and resided with her father, A. C. Hamilton. The funeral, which will be conducted at "Miramar" Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, will be private.

The services to be held in St. Augustine's Episcopal Church tomorrow will mark the dedication of the new pipe organ, the installation of which has just been completed. The discourse of the evening will be delivered by Bishop Johnson.

The golden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Howland is to be observed Friday afternoon at Royal Arcanum Hall by the members of the Grand Army post and by the women of Fremont circle.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Gooding, on Yale street, was the scene Wednesday noon of a pretty home wedding, in which Miss Sybyl Whiteman, of Redlands became the bride of LeGrande Woolscroft of Redlands. It was here that A. H. Whiteman and family of Redlands had been passing the summer season. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. Green. On the afternoon of the wedding day the young couple departed for the mountains, where they will remain two weeks, before going to Redlands to make their home.

Excitement reached its height tonight at the moving picture theater on Third street when the cry of fire was followed by a blaze that lighted up the entire interior of the little electric amusement place. The combustion had been in the operating-room of the kinetoscope. The building was packed, but, fortunately, it was cleared without any one being injured, although in the mad scramble for the exits there was a frightful jam. The fire alarm was turned in, and the prompt arrival of the department saved the building and prevented any damage beyond the destruction of the films and the moving-picture machine.

WILMINGTON.

PLAN BIG FILL ON THE FLATS.

PROJECT FOR EARTH RAISING SCHEME FAVORED.

According to Arrangements in Course of Perfection a Great Mass of Dirt Taken from Bay by Dredger Will Be Spread Over Area to Be "Elevated."

WILMINGTON, Sept. 4.—In connection with the broad plans conceived by Los Angeles in her harbor development is the scheme of building up the Wilmington flats from the bay front to Seventh street, and extending from the bluffs at the Consolidated Lumber mill on the east to the Wilmington-San Pedro road on the west.

This constitutes the original town plat of Wilmington, as laid out by Gen. Banning, and includes about 2400 acres. Ever since the late city administration of Wilmington had been in existence previous to annexation with Los Angeles, it had been the fond dream of City Trustee Opp to fill in the lower part of this area to a level with the Seventh-street mesa.

This would cover about two-thirds of the area of the old townsite, or about 100 blocks. Counting 8000 square yards to the block, it would make an area to be filled of 800,000 square yards. An average depth of three feet would be required, as estimated by Trustee Opp, to raise the land surface to a sufficient altitude to be of any value to the property and yet to keep the levels within a safe altitude for drainage and sewerage purposes.

According to statements reported to have been made in the City Engineer's office of Los Angeles, in the complete development of the inner harbor there will be a surplus of about 1,500,000 cubic yards of earth to be disposed of after the fills planned for for bulkheads, etc., have been made. This, it is stated, will be sufficient to make the proposed fill of the city area in question. It is understood here that the matter has been taken up by the Engineer's offic, with a view of including it in the ultimate plans of harbor improvement.

In order to bring this about and avoid any possible mistake in making the grades and levels necessary, it is stated that an entirely new survey of the city will be ordered, and a new map adopted by which there will be a unity of plan in the survey of the inner harbor and the land area adjacent.

The Pacific Electric Railway grading crew is making rapid progress in the work of widening the right of way along the west shore of the bay. The bank along the route which is being excavated is a solid mass of earth and gravel, and requires blasting. This earth is being deposited along the line of First street to widen the bed of the track and also is being taken over on the Long Beach extension for filling in the low ground lying in Long Beach territory. It is expected that this part of the line will be rushed to completion and that cars will soon be running between the two cities.

The real estate market has been at a low ebb this week, but few sales having been made. This is accounted for on the ground that investors are now waiting for the bond issue promised by Los Angeles for the development of the harbor. Meantime, the business men are planning for a forward movement in locating industries here. Some inquiry on this line has been made, but no deal has yet been perfected.

The Home Telephone Company is now planning to install its system here, making Wilmington its central office. Already it has secured seventy-seven subscribers and expects to double this number in a short time. The company will erect an exchange building and plan a system that will be up to date.

Mrs. Bergen of Upland whose application for a restaurant liquor license was denied by the former Board of Trustees before they went out of office, will go ahead with her plans of building a rooming-house on Seventh street near the lumber mill. She has sufficient guarantee from the lumber companies there for patronage of such a plan that she will push the enterprise expecting that the Los Angeles Council will grant the liquor license.

It is reported that the Wells, French Company of Chicago, which manufactures railway cars, is now negotiating for a factory site on this harbor. This company uses a large quantity of Oregon pine in the manufacture of its cars, which it ships across the continent. It finds that it can build the cars cheaper on this coast and send the finished cars through to their destination loaded with products from this State and harbor, thus saving large expense. Cars may be manufactured here for the railways now building in Mexico and South America. This may bring also the location of iron smelters and foundries.

Mr. Garrett says: "I have been a great sufferer from catarrh and rheumatism. My nose would stop up until I could hardly breathe and there was a continued dropping in my throat, with roaring in my ears until I was so dizzy that I could hardly stand on my feet. I also had to hawk and spit to clear my throat, and suffered from a general debility that brought on a severe attack of rheumatism, which almost laid me up at times. I tried many doctors and all sorts of patent medicines but got no permanent relief until I consulted Drs. Shores & Shores. Their treatment was wonderful, and I am now happy to state that I am entirely cured not only of my catarrh, but my dizziness and rheumatism is all gone, and I cheerfully recommend Drs. Shores & Shores' treatment.

AMBITIOUS ARE SCHOOL PLANS.

HOLLYWOOD TRUSTEES DECIDE TO CALL ELECTION.

Propose to Raise One Hundred Thousand Dollars for New Union High School and Auditorium—Student Body Rejoices Over Decision to Allow Football.

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 4.—At a meeting of trustees of the Hollywood Union High School district this afternoon, it was decided by a unanimous vote to call an election for the purpose of voting bonds for $100,000. The money is to be used in the erection of a building for a polytechnic high school and for a large auditorium. According to the plans, the buildings will be erected on the grounds directly north of the present holdings. The three and one-half acres on the south, recently purchased for $20,000, will be transformed into an athletic field and a portion of it will be used for horticultural purposes. A quarter-mile cinder track will be one of the features of the field. If the bonds carry and the buildings are erected the district will have invested in its high-school property over $225,000.

The present school building, erected about four years ago, cost $60,000. Last year a gymnasium building was built at a cost of $7000. The school property is located at the corner of Highland avenue and Sunset boulevard.

The Hollywood Union High School district was organized in 1903. It is composed of six school districts in the Cahuenga Valley and one in the San Fernando. It extends from the western boundary of Los Angeles to the Soldiers' Home, including Dayton Heights, Eight Hollywood, Prospect Park, Colegrove, Sherman, Beverly, Lankershim and Hollywood city. A portion of the district is now petitioning for annexation to Los Angeles. Just what effect it would have on its standing in the school district should this territory become a part of Los Angeles, has not been determined, but Deputy District Attorney Hartley Shaw has been asked to interpret the law governing such cases.

The election will be called as soon as the necessary papers can be made out and proper publication given. The bonds will bear interest at the rate of 4½ per cent., and will run for twenty-five years, $4000 being payable each year.

The student body of the High School is rejoicing over the fact that the trustees have decided to allow football this year. The work of organizing the team will commence as soon as school opens.

TUNNEL FESTIVITIES.

The committee having in charge the preparations for the celebration which will take place upon the day that the Hill-street tunnel is formally opened, held its first meeting yesterday afternoon and outlined its plans for the day's festivities. Five thousand invitations will be sent out for the outdoor reception, to be given on the De Longpre grounds. A number of refreshment booths will be erected among the trees and flowers, which will be presided over by some of Hollywood's fairest young ladies. A band concert will be one of the features of the day. A committee composed of Mrs. P. J. Beveridge, Mrs. F. W. Stith and Mrs. S. T. Weir, representing the Woman's Club, assisted by a large committee of Hollywood women, will work with the Board of Trade in making the guests of the city welcome.

BUILDING UNION HIGH.

HUNTINGTON PARK, Sept. 4.—Work was started, today, on the new Huntington Park Union High School building. It will cost nearly $60,000 and will be located on a five and one-half-acre tract, which cost $3500. It is expected that the building will be completed in January. Until then the school will occupy rooms in the Weber block. The districts uniting in the organization of the new high school are Huntington Park, Vernon, Bell and Fruitland.

Building operations are being carried on in other directions on behalf of the Huntington Park "young idea." The Society of Friends is completing the second building of its Training School for Christian Workers, thus more than doubling the capacity of that institution. The grammar school district is spending $6000 in finishing the second story of its building, installing furniture and making improvements on the grounds.

The Baptist Church is spending several hundred dollars for a Sunday-school room.

FACT AND COMMENT.

THE summer is over, vacations are at an end, two-thirds of the year 1909 are gone into eternity, and there are four months still remaining with every promise of brisk business in nearly every line of industry and investment in which the people of the United States are interested, from the Atlantic Coast to the Pacific, from Canada into Mexico. The revived activity in industries overflows our country and spreads all over the Dominion of Canada, down through the republic of Mexico, overlaps those of Central America, and then spreads out over all the southern part of the hemisphere. The same revival in a less degree marks business all through Europe. In a word, the depression of two years ago is practically at an end. It has taken longer to set things right than we thought it would when, in November, 1907, the trouble culminated and broke in a storm all over the world. Most people looked upon it as likely to last into the coming year, and few anticipated depression that would last longer than the following spring. It has affected the business of the world all through 1908, and we are just now, at the end of the second year from the beginning of the trouble, about back to normal conditions.

Real Estate First and Last.

Real estate, as usual, was the first interest to feel the effect of the acute trouble. The business of the great mass of the people must go on. Grocery stores must run, butcher shops be kept open, and the task of clothing the people cannot be long interrupted. But those contemplating the securing of a lot for a home, the erection of a building for residence or business purposes, can put off their intended improvement or investment indefinitely. As the real estate market was the first to feel the crushing effect of the panic, so it is the last to be reached by the rising tide of new activity. The mills must start, the railroads must undertake the work of extending their lines, and the money which has remained locked up in the vaults of the banks, at a gain of very low interest rates, must go into general circulation through practically universal revival of business in all other lines before the general public have money to put into real investments in real estate, improved or unimproved. The business boom of 1906 and 1907 spread over the world, and included every line of business. It was a genuine boom, in which nearly every one lost his head to some degree. The effort to do business on borrowed capital was carried to such an extreme that it has taken all these past months, over twenty of them, to enable merchants and manufacturers to liquidate. Those who were caught in the flurry with unencumbered real estate have the hardest time of it, and the effort to liquidate [illegible] has been the most strenuous. With this work of liquidation practically out of the way, and with the general revival of business, we may now hope to see money in active circulation, all the people employed, all able to live abundantly well. These conditions mean an opportunity to save money by wage-earners and to conserve more or less of the profits of business by small merchants. As soon as these savings begin to accumulate, the normal conditions in real estate will immediately become apparent. The desire to own a home is very nearly universal. In prosperous times the number of people securing their own homes becomes very large, and then we have an active real estate market.

Local Conditions.

In the great boom two to three years ago this department of The Times each Sunday was very diligent and persistent in warning people against over-speculation. When the financial storm broke upon us the policy was changed, and Fact and Comment immediately undertook the task of encouraging property-holders not to permit panic to seize upon their minds, but wherever it was possible to hold on persistently to their investments in Southern California real estate, whether in city or country. It is pretty generally recognized that the influence of this advice was very effective in preventing an utter collapse of the real estate market. The department went further, and week by week advised those who had a little money, coupled with an intention of securing a home or a bit of property on speculation in this part of the country, to act promptly. There were a great many holders forced to let go, and there were many bargains in the market in all kinds of property.

As the months passed and conditions righted themselves, we still advised the same policy, and doubtless a great many readers of Fact and Comment are now happy in having "got in" while the market was weakest and the prices lowest. We do not hesitate to repeat this advice, in the same spirit and careful phraseology as heretofore. The advice is not to be guilty of rash speculation, but there are many people here with a little spare money who can well afford to put a part of it into well-selected, carefully-bought real estate, either for improvement purposes immediately or in the future, or to hold on speculation. We would not advise any person of small means to tie himself up or to cripple his regular business in any way by purchasing property on small payments and loading himself with large debts. The advice contemplates persons who have either a little or a considerable amount of money to spare who cantie it up safely for as long as five years. Those who can buy a piece of property wisely and carefully, pay for it, and not suffer inconvenience from having the money tied up, will at the end of five years be glad they put their funds into Los Angeles real estate.

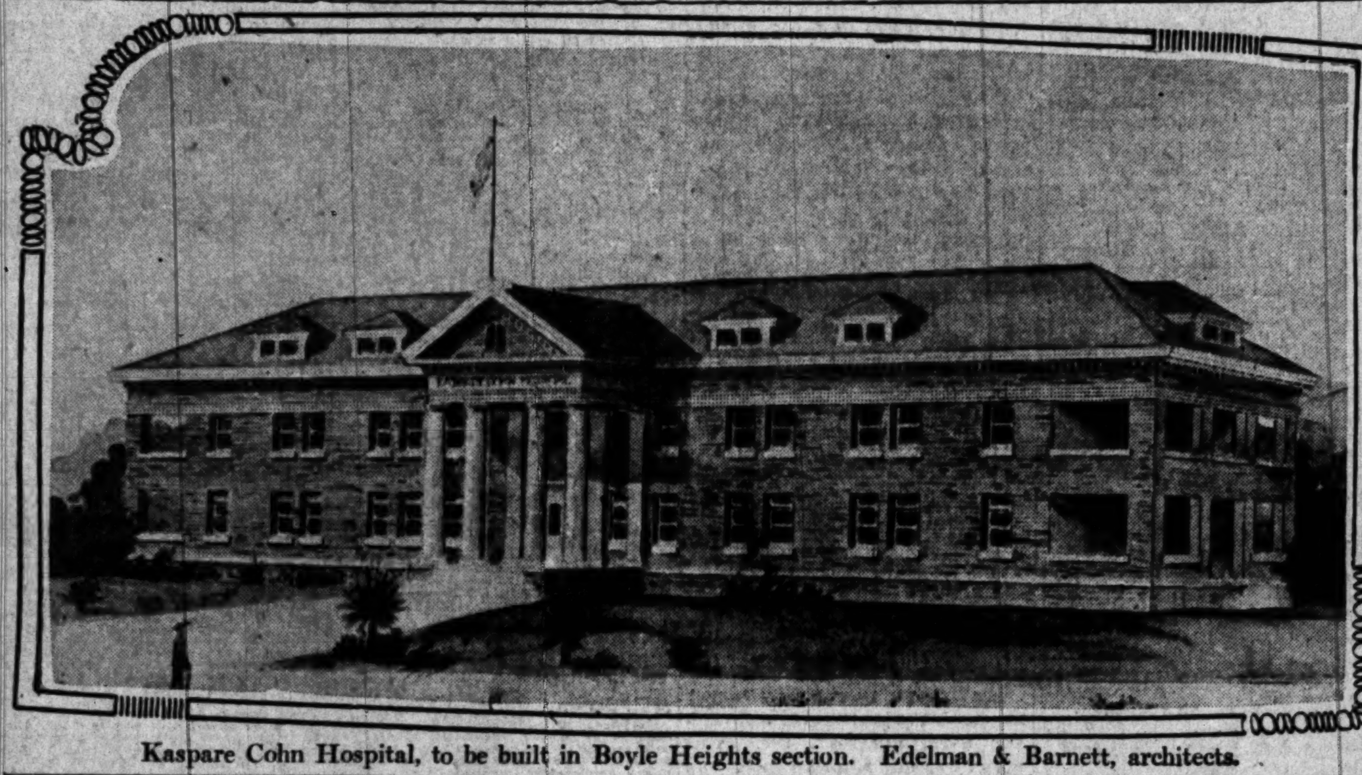
Looking Back.

We are here looking forward and not backward, a process that you hear of every day you walk along the streets. Some person who left here many years ago returns, and, looking about contemplating the enormous growth of population with the natural enhancement of real estate values following that growth, is often heard to say: "If I had bought a lot with a few hundred dollars twenty years ago or thirty years ago in Los Angeles I would be independently rich now." There are just as many people here today who will make the same remark twenty years hence. There are just as many opportunities to make fortunes in real estate here now as then. The increase in the value of real estate is the direct result of growth of population and the improvement of the streets and the construction of fine buildings. This growth is not at an end nor near it. Thirty years ago the population of the city was about 11,000. It is now about 320,000. Before another thirty years have passed there will be 1,000,000 souls inside of the city of Los Angeles. The prices of today, however high they may seem to us, will be so low compared with those ruling at the end of the period that there will be as many regrets at not having purchased property as you hear now by those who look backward from the present point of view. The objection is sometimes made that it takes more money. This is a mistake. A person with a few hundred dollars thirty years ago might have bought a lot on Bunker Hill avenue or close in in some other direction which, costing at that time $300, is worth today $10,000. There are many lots in the city now to be had for $300 to $500 each which will increase as much in value in the next thirty years as the lots in question have in the past thirty years. It is not that it takes more money, but simply one has to go farther away from the business center. He goes no farther from the center of population. Bunker Hill avenue thirty years ago had perhaps a dozen houses along the crest. Now there are few vacant lots there at all. All out in the farthest parts of the city are spaces where population is sparse now which in thirty years will be packed with houses, homes and business blocks.



Kaspare Cohn Hospital, to be built in Boyle Heights section. Edelman & Barnett, architects.

Shrewdness Required.

Of course, business will always be done mostly in the business center of this city as in all other cities. But all the business will not be done in any one center. As population grows in different directions, secondary and tertiary business centers will grow up. We see this occurring every year. Ten years ago Pico Heights was very sparsely populated and there was no business done there at all worth speaking of. Pico street is a pretty good business street today. Many other streets have grown into business propositions. Thirty years from now First street, from South Hollywood to the eastern limits of the city, will be used for business purposes almost exclusively throughout its whole length. It is the one great business artery of the city running from extreme east to extreme west. At that time Hollywood will be either a part of the city proper or connected with the city on the borough system. From the eastern end of the city as it is bounded at present away out to Whittier and beyond, population will be very dense and will all come into the city through this great artery. From north to south will flow business into the main artery.

North of First Street.

But let no one think the city north of First street from any point, from the intersection of Los Angeles to the intersection of Olive street or farther east and farther west, is dead or even will be dead. It has been growing slowly of late compared with other parts of the city, but if we contemplate the population that must dwell in future years in East Los Angeles and all the territory east of there, including Pasadena, Alhambra, San Gabriel and on to Monrovia, which must all reach the heart of the city by coming through this neck around the Plaza, we shall see that the property in there must be valuable. Go the other way up through Tropico, Glendale, to Burbank, and on to the big tunnels above Newhall and Chatsworth Park, and we have another district of country where dense population will live in the years to come, that will all come in through this northern section of the city. The great parks, Elysian and Griffith, will in these coming years be attractions for persons living in all parts of the city. They will go through this neck of city territory to get to these parks and to return. We have been discussing tunnels through the crest immediately west of Broadway. One of these will come before long, and with it will spring up renewed activity through all the hill territory away out to East Hollywood.

Southward.

Then we must keep our minds upon the Greater Los Angeles already a fact. The industrial section of the city will continue to stretch out along the river banks on either side close to the railroad tracks of the three great systems, all of which will reach the harbor. We must have a great industrial center here. Various manufacturing industries will enlarge the scope of their operations and new ones will come in. There will be a continuous unbroken city all down Main street and Alameda street as far down as Wilmington and San Pedro. There is where the great factories and mills will be located. We can stand now and look back thirty years and see what has taken place along the principal thoroughfares between First and Seventh streets. If we look ahead thirty years we shall see manifold greater developments in the manufacturing growth of the city all down this great industrial stretch of territory.

VALUES INDICATED.

Apartments on Coronado, Near Seventh, Purchased by Local Investor at Big Price.

The Coronado Apartments on the west side of Coronado street, between Seventh street and Wilshire boulevard, have been purchased by Charles Grabeen. The deal was made through the agency of W. B. Merwin & Co. Herbert White, the seller, received a consideration reported at $40,000, part of which was in trade.

The building is three stories and of frame and plaster construction. It has a frontage of sixty feet and a depth of 135 feet. The property is modern in every particular.

OCCIDENTAL HEIGHTS.

The Edwards & Wildey Company, in connection with the Victor G. Kleinberger Company, closed an important deal this week, in close-in acerage in Eagle Rock. Thirty acres, fronting on Colorado boulevard and Hill boulevard, were sold to a local syndicate for a consideration of $30,000. The property adjoins the Elenwood Heights Tract and a fine residence section. Colorado boulevard, on which the tract has the largest frontage, is being surveyed and the Supervisors are to let a contract within the next sixty days for the improvement of the thoroughfare, its entire length from Pasadena to Eagle Rock, thence to Hollywood and to the ocean. Through Eagle Rock, the boulevard is 120 feet wide. The property is being subdivided into residence lots. Improvements consisting of five foot cement walks, deep curbs, ten foot parkings, petrolithic paved streets, and ornamental shade trees will be installed at once, and water will be piped to every lot. The property will be placed on the market under the name of the Occidental Heights Tract. The Edwards & Wildey Company and the Victor G. Kleinberger Company will be the selling agents.

SELLS BEACH ACRES.

The Cornell Company has sold for W. Webb to J. Martin, two acres at the northwest corner of Webb avenue and Medcalf street, Manhattan Beach. The property is improved with a five-room house. The price paid was $2500.

FOR THE SICK.

HOSPITAL WILL BE A MODEL.

CONTRACT FOR BUILDINGS LET YESTERDAY.

The Kaspare Cohn Hospital Association to Erect Jewish Hospital in Boyle Heights Section—To Accommodate Sixty Patients in Two Up-to-Date Structures.

In the Kaspare Cohn Hospital, which is to be erected on Stephenson avenue, just outside the city limits by the Kaspare Cohn Hospital Association the city will possess one of the most complete and up to date institutions of this kind on the coast. The site for the hospital is a beautiful five-acre tract between Dorris and Calhoun streets. Edelman & Barnett are the architects. Something over $50,000 will probably be expended in the project.

Two buildings will be erected, a main hospital and a tubercular ward, the latter standing about 100 feet back of the larger structure. The main building will have a frontage of 158 feet and a depth of eighty feet, and will be constructed in the form of the letter "T." The two structures will be connected by a pergola. The tubercular ward will be 35x50 in dimensions, exclusive of courts.

The larger building will have accommodations for fifty patients, while ten cots will be accommodated in the smaller. Both buildings will be constructed of red pressed brick with artificial granite trimmings. The main hospital will be two stories, basement and attic, while the other structure will be a single story in height. A beautiful two-story portico with stone columns will be a feature of the former building. The lighting and ventilating of the institution throughout will be perfect.

The main edifice will be divided into single suites and wards, with two operating rooms on the second floor, one for minor surgery and the other a large room, twenty feet square and under a glass dome. Both operating rooms will be finished in tile, with vitriolized wainscoating seven feet in height. On the first floor, in addition to the wards, will be found the offices, reception room and hall, doctors' rooms and dining rooms, together with the kitchens, drug room and refrigerating department. The basement will contain servants' quarters, heating plants, laundry, locker rooms, and servants' dining-room.

The entire finish of the inside walls and ceilings of both buildings will be in white enamel. All the floors will be maple. Steam heat, vacuum cleaning, refrigeration, a light signal system, water filters, steam sterilization and other equipments used in the best hospitals will be installed. The grounds about the buildings will be beautifully landscaped, and wide drives will be constructed.

The contract for both buildings was awarded yesterday to Myers & Condon.

REALTY BOARD IS HOT.

Takes Issue With the State Board of Equalization Over Question of Appraisals.

The Los Angeles Realty Board spent a very busy day yesterday securing affidavits refuting the excessive valuation put by the State Board of Equalization upon Los Angeles property. The methods adopted by the State board in arriving at valuation appraisals are ridiculed, and instances cited to show the irresponsibility of the work.

It is complained that the State Board of Equalizers having access to three sets of figures, namely, those of the County Assessor, the Los Angeles Realty Board and Henry Hart, an appraiser for one of the largest savings banks in Southern California, saw fit to go outside of these figures and employ two incompetent men to arrive at valuations affecting a large number of properties.

Affidavits have been secured from property owners showing the values set upon certain particular properties and the earnings from rents from these properties. These, sworn to before a notary, give estimates of value on private property by the owners themselves, based on rentals, actual trading and the known prices of adjoining properties. They are said to show the appraisals of the State board ridiculous.

For example, 100 feet on the east side of Broadway, between Seventh and Eighth, brought on July 15, 1908, $1500 per front foot. The adjoining property, at the northeast corner of Broadway and Eighth, 119 feet on Eighth by 100 feet on Broadway, was valued by the assessor at $200,000, and by the State board at $301,920, or $3000 per front foot. The Realty Board appraised it at $200,000.

At the corner of Spring and Eighth streets, fifty feet on Spring by 164 feet on Eighth was appraised by the Realty Board at $100,000, or $2000 a front foot. The State board fixed the valuation at $150,000, 50 per cent. more.

In Westmoreland place the State board fixed a valuation of $70 a front foot, for property which is considered by many deponents to be of considerably less value. A certain frontage in this tract was appraised by the State board at $5450, as against $2800, the valuation put upon it by the Realty Board.

On Hoover street, near Alvarado, a lot 130x155 feet was appraised at $13,000, while the assessor valued it at $5130.

The Realty Board will devote the better part of the coming week to securing additional affidavits.

HUGE TRACT FOR FARMS.

Important Deal in Perris Valley Land Opens Up Another District for Colonization.

The largest deal in real estate ever made in the Perris Valley has been completed through the agencies of J. Howard Johnson of Whittier and C. E. Gyger & Co. of Perris. The purchase was made by a syndicate headed by A. H. Dunlap and T. L. Gooch of Whittier. The seller was William Newport of Perris. The consideration is reported at approximately $155,000.

The property consists of 5500 acres, and has long been known as the North Newport ranch. The huge area will be subdivided into small sections and placed on the market. C. E. Gyger & Co. and J. Howard Johnson will handle the tracts.

The completion of this deal spells a new era for the Perris Valley, as heretofore the holdings have all been in large sections of land, a fact which has retarded the development to which so excellent a locality is entitled. The water facilities of the region are unexcelled. Remarkable yields of alfalfa and oranges have been recorded on the limited acreage which has already been developed.

VALUABLE EXCHANGE.

Large Corner Property in Hollywood Brings Forty Thousand in Important Trade.

One of the most important transactions in Hollywood property reported this year is the sale of the northwest corner of Prospect boulevard and Wilcox street, which was occupied for many years by H. J. Whitley. This property has a frontage of 179 feet on Prospect boulevard, 220 feet on Wilcox and 30 feet on Chester Court. The consideration was $40,000, and was used as part purchase price in acquiring the northeast corner of Mateo and Bay streets, having a frontage of 212 feet on Mateo and 140 feet on Bay street, without any improvements, together with the two-story pressed-brick building at Nos. 325-327 Towne avenue, with a frontage of 37 feet and a depth of 110 feet.

Messrs. Jepsen and Glass conveyed the Hollywood property to Thomas S. Wadsworth. The deal was made through the agency of Bernard A. Vollmer, who represents both parties. The place is in the heart of the business section of the neighboring town.

SELLS LOTS AND ACRES.

William R. Uber, with Ben. White, reports the following: W. J. Parsons to G. W. Reed, forty-five acres of unimproved land at Mecca, Coachella Valley, for $3500. For W. R. Uber to W. J. Parsons and Mrs. C. S. Ayers, three lots, each 56x168 feet, on South Workman street, near Mission road. This property has a group of fourteen four-room modern bungalows built in the form of a court. The consideration was $15,000. Mr. Parsons and Mrs. Ayers gave in exchange forty acres at Mecca, at a value of $4500, the difference being adjusted by mortgage and cash. H. S. Taggart to Edward Russell, twenty acres near Garden Grove, with two barns and a small house, the consideration being $5000. G. W. Reed to W. J. Parsons and Mrs. C. S. Ayers, two lots, 56x186 feet, in Pasadena, improved with a two-story seven-room house on Summit avenue, the price paid being $6000. Edward Russell to H. W. Taggart, a lot 55x165 feet, on Second street, near Ohio, for $5000. For W. J. Parsons and Mrs. C. S. Ayers to Ira H. Stubbs, three lots, improved with fourteen four-room modern bungalows, the consideration being $16,000.

REPORTS BIG LEASES.

Dan Miller reports the following leases: J. B. Brown Music Company, at present situated at No. 648 South Broadway, has leased the ground floor of the Forrester building and the entire third floor of the same building for five years, for a total consideration of $48,000. L. L. Vogel, the hatter, now at No. 519 South Main street, has leased the store room at No. 308 South Spring street for a term of five years, the total consideration being $21,000.

$30,000.

In the most desirable portion of Wilshire Boulevard we have a delightful and elegant home which must be sold this week. Looking up a broad boulevard, on a lot 80x175 ft., which is highly improved with trees, shrubs and flowers, with an unsurpassed view, its peer cannot be found at $30,000. If desired, the furnishings can be sold with the house and possession can be given immediately. This is the first time we have had an opportunity to offer such a beautiful home at such a low figure for more than a year, but it must be sold, and we can readily explain the owner's wish for selling it in a few words. The ten large rooms with two tiled baths, equipped with every convenience that money can buy, make a most attractive home at a price which is certainly low.

FOR SALE—
We are not advertising snaps and bargains for the reason that there are none.
Any time there is a $5000 property offered for $3000 you buy it, but first find out that it's worth $5000. Gold dollars are not selling for half price now or any old time.
Neither is real estate.
We have good houses listed at prices that are right, $2000 and upwards, and each property is well located, built on the square, and worth every dollar that price demands; get the "bargain and snap" idea out of your mind and see us for honest values.

$1750— —ONLY— —$1750

FOR A BIG 60-FOOT LOT.

WITHIN HALF BLOCK OF

WILSHIRE BOULEVARD.

Before you purchase a lot STOP and THINK—find out how many people you are paying a profit. What's the use of buying a lot that's been re-sold three or four times—each time, naturally, at an increased price. It isn't good business. The chances are that by the time it gets to you the price is so high that you'll have to hold it a long time before it will "stand" another advance. It's just the same if you buy for a home; why pay more for a home site than necessary? Now, here's the point we're driving at—our

WESTERN WILSHIRE HEIGHTS.

Is ABSOLUTELY The Only Tract In

THE WILSHIRE DISTRICT.

That is selling at ORIGINAL prices. REMEMBER THAT—it means more than you think for when you are selecting your lot.

When we say "The Only Tract In The Wilshire District," we mean it. Of course, there are some other tracts that are advertised as in the "Wilshire District," that are selling at original prices, but investigation will show these to be as far as half a mile from the boulevard. Our property is located at the corner of Western avenue and Wilshire boulevard. The big 60-foot lots that we are offering at $1750 (and not many left) are within half a block of Wilshire boulevard.

AND $1750 IS THE FIRST AND ONLY PRICE THEY HAVE EVER BEEN OFFERED AT. AND, AGAIN, WE SAY THAT THERE ARE NO OTHER LOTS SELLING AT ORIGINAL PRICES.

These elegant, large home sites would be good buys were the price $500 higher, but at the present price of $1750.

THEY ARE POSITIVELY THE CHEAPEST LOTS IN THIS EXCLUSIVE DISTRICT.

The best street improvements that money can buy are all installed; gas, electricity and city water IN NOW. Magnificent homes going up all over the tract and in the territory surrounding.

THE WILSHIRE DISTRICT.

Is—and ALWAYS WILL BE—the most SELECT, REFINED and EXCLUSIVE residence section of Los Angeles. There is no question about that. The class of people, the class of homes, and the RIGID restrictions prevent it from ever being otherwise.

If you will compare the size of the lots and prices—regardless of the "Class"—with the more "Ordinary" districts twice the distance from the business center, you will find that this high-class property is after all, the CHEAPEST. THINK OF IT—ONLY $1750 for 60 feet within half a block of Wilshire boulevard. Think of the price now and what it will be two years hence. You can practically name your own price then.

WE MAKE THE EASIEST TERMS EVER OFFERED IN THE "REAL" WILSHIRE DISTRICT. TERMS THAT MAKE IT POSSIBLE FOR ONE OF MODERATE MEANS TO OWN ONE OF THESE MAGNIFICENT HOME SITES.

Look around—we want you to see all the rest, first—then come to us; after you've seen all the others it won't take you ten minutes to decide on

The elevation gives a clear view of Los Angeles and the mountains.

$25 CASH AND $10 MONTHLY.

These lots are at the southwest corner of Vermont and Manchester ave.; high and level with a gradual eastern slope, accessible to the ocean breezes, right in the course of San Pedro and Wilmington, where $6,000,000 will be spent for improvements.

Acreage for Subdivision.

BUILDERS AND INVESTORS ATTENTION.
Would you be interested in a ten-acre tract, on car line, 28 minutes from Los Angeles, subdivided on three sides, and only 5 minutes' walk from Hollywood High School?
This tract is surveyed, staked and platted into 48 lots, averaging 50x150, which should sell out quickly at $900 to $1100 per lot when that new tunnel is completed.
If you have $9000 cash to plank down this week, we can deliver this piece at a price so the lots will average $469 each.
Add $100 per lot for street work, walks and improvements, and you have the cheapest and best close-in property at Hollywood. Owner left the city and writes back "sell this property at big sacrifice if necessary, but sell this week." Be sure and investigate this if you have faith in Hollywood's growth, and if you have $9000 in cash, balance easy terms. Address K, box 271, TIMES BRANCH OFFICE. x5

$3000 INCOME ON $4000 INVESTMENT.
That sounds unreasonable, if the investment is safe. But it's true; 40 acres of our very best land; 75 miles from this city, in Los Angeles county. Now selling at $50 and $40 an acre; can positively and easily be put into alfalfa, allowing maximum for expenses, for $4000, (and ordinarily a great deal cheaper.) This includes complete water development. This 40 acres will cut 10 tons an acre of choicest alfalfa. Low price for loose hay in field in this district has been $10 to $16 this year (maximum cost, winter $25 ton baled.) Rent it on half-share basis and figure out the result. These are facts and we are prepared to support them. Why not investigate? See land and return same day. Also improved ranches for sale.

E. J. BALDWIN ESTATE.
E. J. BALDWIN ESTATE.
E. J. BALDWIN ESTATE.

With few exceptions, the entire estate will be sold. This vast estate comprises thousands of acres of the richest farming land in this State. Its merits are so well known that but little comment is necessary.

The Rancho La Puente, in the heart of the great San Gabriel Valley, consisting of thousands of acres of the most fertile soil in Southern California, will be offered for sale and will be sold in tracts of 10 acres up.

Only 14 miles N.E. of the city, between El Monte and Covina, by the S.P.R.R., Pacific Electric and Salt Lake Railroads.

Perhaps you are curious to know what this land is adapted to.

Well, it cannot be beaten for growing
ALFALFA.
WALNUTS.
Fruits, vegetables. Yes, and around Covina, Monrovia and Arcadia, it's first-class
ORANGE LAND.

THE WATER QUESTION

That is already demonstrated.

There is water under this land.

One plant in operation pumps 600 miner's inches of water. There are numerous small plants, none of which pump less than 150 miner's inches of water.

There is not another tract of land in Los Angeles county or at least that is as close to the city of Los Angeles that can be bought at as reasonable a figure. We are simply besieged with buyers, don't wait until it's too late. Now is the time to buy. If you are looking for a location for a home or for an investment, here is your opportunity.

There is a good home market for all produce, especially for alfalfa.

Go out and see for yourself, that is all that we ask. You will be convinced.

Prices and terms at our offices.

Have you ever heard about the DAMP LAND
just south of EL MONTE, 12 miles from Los Angeles, one mile from the electric car line?

This land requires no irrigation whatever to grow
ALFALFA.
VEGETABLES.
CELERY.

Just think of it. No labor or expense for irrigating; just plant your crops, cultivate them and watch them grow. Perhaps you don't believe this to be possible in this land of rainless summers; well, then, just board the Covina line car for El Monte, go out with us to the tract, and let us "show you" where 10 tons of alfalfa, per acre, can be grown each year, without irrigation. Get in on the ground floor and double your money in one or two years.

We have about 2000 acres of this land for sale, but at the rate it's selling it will not last long. Prices and terms at our offices.

ALDERSON BUILDING AND INVESTMENT COMPANY.
415 CURRIER BLDG.

For the past year or two we have in our different ads. covered about all the ideas we could think of to show you what we offer, and what we can do for you.

Today we will sum it all up by saying that

WE KNOW WE CAN COMPETE WITH ANY BUILDER.

WE KNOW WE BUILD GOOD HOUSES.

WE KNOW WE ARE RESPONSIBLE.

WE KNOW WE CAN PLEASE YOU, AND

WE KNOW WE WANT THAT OPPORTUNITY

TO PLEASE YOU.

Our plan of work briefly is to build as general contractors, or we will furnish the mortgage money to enable you to build on your lot, or in some instances where the general conditions will warrant it, we will help you to clear up the lot you have purchased on installments during the past few years, and then furnish the money to build with.

Do not allow yourself to be deluded with any idea that there is a big "commission rake-off," or "high prices" to "absorb" the cost the money is to us, for there is no such condition to meet.

We need only to talk with you two minutes to dispel such an erroneous opinion from your mind; our mortgage money is simply 7 per cent., and every payment on principal reduces the interest; there may be some builders in the city who can offer just as good a proposition, and who will do as much for you as we will, but we have our own doubts.

JUST CALL AND SEE US ABOUT YOUR BUILDING.

MRS. MASSON,
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 322 S. SPRING ST. (over Owl Drug Store,) by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND-READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.
The earnest student and thinker will soon learn in his investigations along psychological lines, that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HIMSELF HAS WRITTEN THAT INFORMATION.
PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in every-day life.
Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health and domestic life, financial conditions, success and prosperity, can all be told you through scientific palmistry, WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.
MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

STANLEY
STANLEY
PROF. STANLEY,
WORLD'S GREATEST PSYCHIC.
PROF. STANLEY.
247 — SOUTH HILL STREET — 247
LOOK FOR THE NAME AND NUMBER.
"TRUTHFUL IN HIS PREDICTIONS. RELIABLE IN HIS ADVICE."
No matter what troubles you may have with yourself or others, come and he will guide you TO SUCCESS AND HAPPINESS.
READINGS—$1-$1-$1-$1-$1-$1-$1—
ALWAYS CONSULT THE BEST. IS IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END. IT IS BETTER TO CONSULT NO PSYCHIC THAN ONE WHO IS NOT ABLE TO HELP YOU.
It is true that his fee is more than some others charge. However, he believes that he has passed the experimental stages and finds no one who is not willing to pay this small fee of $1.00, providing they receive reliable advice. If after the reading is over and you are not perfectly satisfied, he will not accept one penny of your money.
IF THE TELLING OF YOUR NAME WILL SATISFY YOU, HE WILL DO SO FREE OF CHARGE; ALSO SHOW YOU HOW IT IS DONE.
What is of most importance is facts and figures.
Without your writing or even speaking, he will give you names, dates and figures.
If you want the truth, with reliable advice, you will consult BYRON STANLEY on past, present and future. Also remember what has been told you, which too often is not the case.
NO NEED TO TELL HIM.
There is no need to tell Stanley your story. There will be no "quizzing" or asking of questions. His talents enable him to instinctively know your wants and troubles. Without any attempt at mystification, but with unerring sight into the inner nature of things, he reveals that which you most wish to know. His advice on all matters, business, lawsuits, marriage, health, is invaluable. It is exact and correct—not guesswork. He gives names, dates, facts and figures, and shows clearly and distinctly the road to success in business as well as in domestic and family affairs.
Before you go into anything of importance—or undertake anything serious—in business or love, or marriage, or before you make any change—you should consult the master mind of psychic.
If you have already made a mistake, thrown away your money, and lost confidence through dealing with much-advertised and self-styled palmists and clairvoyants, and their cheap, claptrap methods, start anew, consult Prof. Stanley. He will tell you frankly your condition and what you may expect; if nothing can be done for you he will not take a cent of your money. Has not this honesty on the face of it?
PROF. STANLEY IS THE OLDEST LIFE READER in experience, the richest in knowledge and skill; crowned with years of unparalleled success. His advice has saved and made thousands happy. It will benefit you.

EXPERT ASTROLOGER AND PALMIST.
A resident of Los Angeles 25 years.
PROF. ALTHOUSE is an experienced practitioner in the science of modern ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The HOROSCOPE—calculated from the PLANETS at your birth, will show what a powerful influence they have in all affairs of life. It shows diseases, deaths, domestic affairs, financial affairs; your talents; your environments; tells about children; when and where to travel; what to seek and what to avoid; when in danger of illness, accidents, death, losses, troubles, etc., etc., also your good periods coming—GIVING DATES OF THESE EVENTS FOR THE FUTURE. In fact, the HOROSCOPE gives ACCURATE AND RELIABLE information on ALL AFFAIRS OF LIFE. He read for E. H. Sothern, Nat Goodwin, Maxine Elliott, Gadski, Admiral Schley, David Starr Jordan, ex-Gov. Pardee, Senator Clark, Gen. Chaffee, Edison, Sousa, Modjeska, Lillian Russell, Calve, Admiral Evans, Jefferson, Anna Held, Daniel Sully, Annie Besant, Joaquin Miller, etc. These are a few of the many noted PUBLIC persons Prof. Althouse has positively met and read.
PROF. ALTHOUSE is an expert PALMIST, and WITH EACH PALM READING GIVES ALSO AN ASTROLOGICAL READING.
PAPINTA, actress, writes and says: "Everything has turned out just as you predicted, when reading my hand and Horoscope. YOU ARE WONDERFUL, and I cannot express myself of what I think about your WONDERFUL TRUE READINGS."
MME. BALDWIN writes: "The Horoscope you wrote for me is absolutely CORRECT. My friend, MME. NORDICA, the singer, first showed me her Horoscope, and recommended your work to me. Inclosed find check for four more Horoscopes—all friends of mine."
MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK says: "I was greatly surprised to find how many of your warnings were well founded. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."
DR. ALEX. J. McIVOR TYNDALL SAYS: "Your work along the lines of Astrology and Palmistry is highly spoken of on all sides."
FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading was MOST SATISFACTORY."
LOUIS JAMES, actor, says: "Your reading was ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY."

MUNDO
MUNDO
The man of mystery is still here; acknowledged peer of all psychics and known as the wizard of India and the only graduate of the Ordoo College of Occultism to ever leave his native land. He is unlike any you ever saw, does positively all that others claim to do and demonstrates the power of mind over matter free to every patron. The only man in America possessing this power. Seeing is believing. Try him, then try others and see if they can do the same. A capable man has confidence in his ability and will not require you to deposit your money before his work is done. Mundo has read for many of America's leading citizens and a few titled foreigners, but he has more respect for his patrons and more consideration for their feelings than to publish their names broadcast for the sake of advertisement. Nor does he claim to have read for dozens of prominent people that common sense will tell you he never saw. If you need advice and want a reading from a real life reader who does not spend half his time slandering his competitors, see Mundo, the real life reader who really tells what you desire to know or no charge. A foolish weakling only will pay for a reading that gives no benefit. Stop and think, then. See MUNDO, the Hindoo psychic. Special readings, 50c.

ADMITS FIRE GUILT.

Man Gives Himself Up to the Police and Says He is Responsible for Burning of Hay.

"My conscious hurt me, and I just had to come and give myself up. My name is William J. Overton. I am a painter. You had better lock me up for setting fire to the hay market in the Plaza Wednesday night. My conscience hurts me."

This is the startling way in which Overton introduced himself to Acting Desk Sergeant Osterloh at police headquarters last night.

"That's right," he continued, when the officer stared at him in blank amazement. "I know what I am saying. You had better lock me up. I had been drinking for a week or so Wednesday evening. I crawled into the shed of the hay market and was getting ready to go to sleep when the night watchman found me and kicked me out.

"Later in the night, I went back and tried to go to sleep again, but he found me again and kicked me out, just the same as the first time. But, before he found me the second time, I had lit a cigarette, while I lay there in the hay, and I threw the match away. The next morning I read in the papers that the place had burned down. I knew that it was the match I threw away that did it, and I got to thinking about it. My conscience hurt me so that I could not stand it any more, and tonight I just had to come in here and give myself up."

Overton, who shows plainly the effects of a hard debauch, was turned over to the detectives' department. Acting Clerk Hosick, after a few questions, ordered him to be locked up as a suspect until morning.

The Los Angeles Construction Company will build for G. D. Montgomery on Ardmore avenue, between Third and Fourth streets, a two-story nine-room frame residence costing about $4000. The plans were prepared by Te Planry Company.

HUMAN FLOWERS.

BABIES PICNIC FOR CHARITY.

THREE HUNDRED TOTS GATHER AT HUNTINGTON HALL.

Little Ones Assemble to Give Show for Fund of Matrons' Association, D.E.S.—Prize Competition Almost Forgotten in General Jollity—List of Awards.

Three hundred babies had the merriest kind of a picnic yesterday on the beautiful and spacious grounds of Huntington Hall, and, at the same time, helped swell the charity fund that is being raised by the Matrons' Association, Order of the Eastern Star.

Margaret Nell Cummings, who took a prize at the baby show at Huntington Hall yesterday.

The gathering was, in reality, a baby show, but the tots were all so delighted with each other, that even the mammas forgot about the competing for prizes, and so the youngsters turned it into a picnic.

The center of attraction was Erett Leroy Kinepp, who, of course, was awarded a beautiful silver rattle, as the youngest baby on the grounds. He opened his pretty blue eyes at the Woman's Hospital just five days ago. He was in the arms of a trained nurse, Mrs. Grove, who said the outing would not hurt the little one, for he is a "fresh-air baby."

The little ones were all allotted to sections and Anita Biard of No. 2717 Francis avenue captured the prize of a diamond ring, offered for the prettiest blonde girl, and Clifford Easley the prize offered for the prettiest blonde boy. Howard and Harold Thompson, beautiful three-months-old twins, were the prize winners in their class. Adelaide Immermann was given an order for $5 worth of shoes for being the best girl singer, and Frank Cochran, 6 years old, was the best boy singer, and received an envelope containing a big silver dollar. Other prizes were awarded according to sections to which the children were allotted, and were as follows:

George Weidler, 30 months old, section 8; Margaret Nell Cummings, 2 years, section 10; Katharyn Wallace, 2 years, section 11; Mildred Rice, 1 year, section 20; Harry Mahannah, 7 months, section 21; R. Dunn McDonald, 2 years, section 20; Lucille Margaret Rumble, 18 months, section 6; Mabel Mildred Martin, 23 months, section 7; Clifford Easley, 4 years, section 18; Esther Joy Kaginsky, 3 years, section 16; Elizabeth Macarthur, 4 weeks, section 1; Stanley Raferty, 1 year, section 4; Van Rencsslaer Hamilton, 2 years, section 12; Anita Baird, 3 years, section 15; James Morgan, 3 years, section 17; Howard and Harold Thompson, twins, 3 months, section 19; William Briton, 2 years, section 20; Richard William Petrie, 6 months, section 3.

Mrs. Margaret Chambers was in charge of the show, and Dr. W. K. Chambers announced the prize winners. Matrons from the different chapters, O.E.S., acted as a reception committee, and saw to the comfort of the little ones and their mothers.

THE POLITICAL WATCH TOWER

Ridiculous rumors were put in circulation yesterday by leaders of recall set, to the effect that the Republican city convention of the 22nd inst., has been called off and that there is to be no party indorsement of candidates for various municipal offices. This is a case wherein the wish is father to the thought. There is absolutely no foundation for the statement, which was exploited to the best of its ability by the organ of the recallers, in the hope that there might be a stemming of the tide in favor of a convention to indorse candidates.

This was but one bit of evidence furnished during the day of the desperation of the recallers over the political situation. The fact that the Earl-Lissner outfit is much disturbed over the existing order of things was further emphasized at a meeting of Democratic recallers—members of the so-called Jefferson Club No. 2—at which an effort was made to dissuade the leaders of the Democratic party from holding a convention for the purpose of indorsing candidates.

So far as the Republican city convention of the 22nd is concerned, it cannot be called off, even if those who proposed it should change their minds—and they have not and will not. The call has been issued, the caucuses for the selection of delegates have been set for the evening of the 17th inst., in each of the 194 precincts of Los Angeles, and the convention, consisting of about 2000 delegates, will be held at Shrine Auditorium on the 22nd., exactly in accordance with the call.

In the selection of delegates to this convention every Republican of the city will have an opportunity to express his choice. The caucuses will afford a popular means of making the selections, and the convention should be a truly representative gathering.

Hearing that Dr. D. W. Edelman, chairman of the Democratic City Central Committee and member of the municipal Civil Service Commission, proposed to call a convention of Democrats for the purpose of indorsing candidates, Secretary McDonald and other members of the Jefferson Club No. 2, which sets itself up as the only true exponent of Democracy in Los Angeles, held a meeting yesterday at the Hollenbeck Hotel, to which Dr. Edelman was invited. Mr. McDonald, Timothy Spellacy, H. C. Dillon, Mattison B. Jones, Harrington Brown and other members of the club were in attendance. Several of those present have been accused of training with the members of "Our Set" and there has been no denial of the soft impeachment.

Dr. Edelman later, was very circumspect in discussing the details of the meeting, to which no rank outsiders were invited. He admitted that an attempt had been made to divert him from his purpose of calling the convention, which, in his opinion, should be held after the expiration of the time fixed by law for the filing of nominating petitions. Dr. Edelman's idea is to look over the list of candidates and then to write a prescription for the Democratic party—or such part of the party as will take his medicine.

While the chairman of the Democratic City Central Committee will not come out flatly now and express himself in favor of any of the many candidates now in the race, it is understood that his personal preference is for Mushet for Mayor and Capt. C. H. Hance for Treasurer. It seems that Dr. Edelman and many of his followers in the Democratic party are not very keen for O. E. Farish, the only Democrat who has yet come out for the head of the ticket. But Mr. McDonald, Mr. Jones, Mr. Dillon, and others of the Jefferson Club No. 2, who attended yesterday's meeting are nominally supporting Farish, though under the surface, it is declared that their real choice is Uncle Aleck.

It appears that, in spite of the pressure brought to bear on Chairman Edelman, the Democratic city convention will be held and that the voters of that party will have the benefit of the advice of their representatives, to guide in the selection of candidates for important city officers.

A rumor was in persistent circulation yesterday to the effect that Owen McAleer, former Chief Executive of Los Angeles, has given up all thought of again becoming a candidate for Mayor. McAleer was one of the first to state that he was considering the matter of coming out once more for the place, but he has not yet filed his petition, and several of his friends declared that he would not do so. Mr. McAleer, however, is a man of varying moods, and it would be no surprise to those who know him well if he were yet to present his name to the Republican convention for indorsement.

P. C. Mulqueeny, a deputy in the office of the County Tax Collector, and Department Commander of the United Spanish War Veterans, is the latest candidate to take out a petition for the office of City Auditor. His principal competitor is H. Ivor Thomas, a deputy in the office of City Auditor Mushet. Mulqueeny is a Republican and is particularly well known in military circles. The impression prevails that he will receive the indorsement of the Republican city convention.

Two additional candidates for the City Council took out petitions yesterday at the office of the City Clerk. They are Mark Bunce of No. 1562 Palomares street, and E. D. Seward of San Pedro. Seward had an active part in the campaign for the consolidation of San Pedro and Los Angeles. Newell H. Mitchell, a retired capitalist of No. 1689 West Twenty-fourth street, is another aspirant for the Council. Mr. Mitchell came to Los Angeles in 1888, and is vice-president of the Society of California Pioneers. He is owner of Hotel Mitchell in Pasadena, and also has large holdings in Hollywood, Anaheim and Los Angeles. The names of many prominent citizens are on his petition.

HARBOR INVESTMENTS.
With present limited opportunity probably the last for investing in Pacific Wharf and Storage Company's 6 per cent. bonds at present prices, on installment plan and with bonus stock, we offer a small block as one of the most attractive investments ever presented.
The company by an underwriting oversubscribed and in which we have participated, has now financed its needs to a probable revenue basis, in the near future, having already spent judiciously and economically $250,000 in continuous and telling work.
Consolidation and control of San Pedro Harbor by a great and responsible municipality is not only looked upon with great satisfaction, but has created an increased interest in the securities as well as in the property and project of the PACIFIC WHARF AND STORAGE COMPANY, which shows for itself, is likely to be the first completed of any extension of the dockage and warehouse facilities now in progress and in harmony with the intention and project of making San Pedro a great harbor.
Interviews and correspondence solicited.

A BIG PROFIT FOR A SMALL SUM.
WE DO THE WORK.
There's my Etiwanda Vineyard plan in a nutshell! Select your vineyard from land already planted to Muscat grapes, or land we'll plant to the variety you prefer. Pay $2.50 per acre cash and $2.50 per acre monthly. We'll cultivate and care for your vines free of charge for three years until they come into good bearing, with a full stand of vines guaranteed. This land is at Etiwanda, only a short ride from Los Angeles, in the San Gabriel Valley. Grape growers there say that a net annual profit of 20 per cent. can be reasonably relied upon from a matured vineyard. You can get in on this handsome return, on the above easy terms, without leaving your present occupation. Level land in 5-acre tracts, water piped in front of each. $200 to $250 per acre. Get my new art folder. It gives the whole story. Etiwanda excursions daily.

Another Achievement For Mt. Washington

Los Angeles Gas & Electric Corporation Will Lay Gas Mains for Heating and Lighting. Work Will Begin This Month.

With illuminating gas on Mt. Washington, every city convenience is available--water, electricity, gas, telephone and car service, and all accomplished within the past nine months, is surely a record to be proud of. Negotiations for gas have been pending for some time, and in accord with the progressive and liberal policy of the Los Angeles Gas and Electric Corporation, an official of the company stated to a director of the Mt. Washington company, yesterday, that extension and installation of gas mains to Mt. Washington would be started during the present month. This is certainly good news for the residents of Mt. Washington, as gas is one of the most necessary household utilities.

Robert Marsh, president of the Los Angeles and Mt. Washington Railway Company, has returned from a six weeks' trip to Alaska, Portland, Seattle and other sections. FINEST BOOKLET EVER PUBLISHED

Mt. Washington Brochure is Pronounced Masterpiece of Printers' Art

Authorities who are in a position to know, state that Mt. Washington's new booklet is one of the most artistic creations ever used for real estate purposes. Here is an excerpt from the booklet:

MOUNT WASHINGTON—the very name to one who has visited this masterpiece of nature, suggests vast panoramas of rugged mountain ranges, birdseye vistas of several cities and an unsurpassed prospect of the ocean blue. It suggests wonderful studies in cloud effects, soft moonlight, inspiring sunrises and gorgeous sunsets. It brings to mind the thought of old castles perched on lofty eminences, beautiful winding driveways—in fact, a visit to Mount Washington brings vividly to one the realization that the ideal living place has at last been found.

Although Mt. Washington appeals intensely to those of artistic tendencies, to the dreamer, to people of imagination, it also appeals to hard-headed, wide-awake, "everyday people," because it has been transformed from a somewhat isolated (because of its unusual height) miniature mountain, into a practical city residence subdivision.

AND SHE'S A BOOSTER.

Miss Holmes Enters the Field of General Advertising—Is Well Equipped With Experience.

Miss Frances Holmes, originator of Prosperity Week, booster of Los Angeles and expert advertiser of the good things of Southern California, has struck out for herself. Miss Holmes is now head of her own agency, and has been since the first of this month, but will continue to handle the advertising business of Bishop & Company and other large concerns which rely upon her judgment in this line.

Miss Holmes is an energetic little woman, who puts into her work that interest which most women put into their homes and babies. For seven years she was connected with J. C. Newitt, until his death, and in that time was responsible for a great deal of the fine display work from that agency's office. Since the death of Mr. Newitt Miss Holmes has devoted her time to the business of Bishop & Company.

The work accomplished by Miss Holmes for Prosperity Week, consisting of the details of this important incident in the history of the city and Southern California, was of great worth, and is asserted by Secretary Wiggins of the Chamber of Commerce, to have been the "most successful undertaking of all the successful undertakings handled by the Chamber of Commerce."

So considerable has been the success of Miss Holmes with the advertising for others that she determined recently to open a general advertising business on her own account, and with her knowledge of conditions in this locality, she is thoroughly capable of conducting such a business, as her past experience has amply proved.

MAY SEE PITCHBLENDE.

Samples of the Rare Mineral Are to Be Placed on Exhibition in This City.

Samples of pitchblende ore are to be placed on exhibition in this city for the inspection of miners. John H. Hise of No. 1001 West Thirty-fifth place has received a specimen of the rare mineral from Victor C. Alderson, president of the Colorado School of Mines.

The purpose of showing the pitchblende here is to enable miners to familiarize themselves with it so that they would recognize it if they found the mineral in their prospecting tours. The exhibiting of it here will give miners a better chance of winning the prize offered by a Colorado millionaire for discoveries of the rare stuff.

The pitchblende will be shown in Luckenbach & Co.'s window, beginning tomorrow.

MEXICANS TO CELEBRATE.

The Club Cura Hidalgo will celebrate the ninety-ninth anniversary of the independence of Mexico, at the Chutes Park on September 6, with a literary programme in the afternoon and dancing and many other attractions in the evening. Arrangements are being made by the different committees to entertain the largest crowd that ever assembled here for such an occasion. The officers of the club are: President, M. G. Gonzales; honorary president, Rev. Juan Cuballerio; vice-president, B. N. Olivas; treasurer, J. A. Domingo; secretary, U. U. Persea, and pro-secretary, R. C. Benites.

HIS ESCAPE WONDERFUL.

Miner With Dozen Sticks of Dynamite in Boots Explodes Caps and Still Lives.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

QUINNESSEC (Mich.) Sept. 4.—Of the many close calls from death in the annals of mining in the Lake Superior region, it is doubtful if any can equal the experience of James Johnson in the Chapin mine. Johnson is in a hospital, maimed for life. With a dozen sticks of dynamite in his boot legs and several dozen of dynamite caps exploding at his feet it cannot be explained why he was not blown to shreds.

Johnson, who was employed as a master miner, was preparing to explode a twelve-hole blast. He placed the dynamite in his rubber boots as a convenient way of conveying the blasting material. He was stooping over when a spark from the candle in his hat fell into the box containing the caps packed in sawdust and covered with cotton batting, each cap possessing an explosive power of fifty pounds. All the caps exploded except fourteen.

Rescuers who went to the scene found Johnson unconscious. A hand had been blown off, one eye was destroyed, a large gash was torn in the chest and the body was covered with bruises and cuts. The boots containing the sticks of dynamite had literally been blown from his feet but the cartridges were found intact.

EXPECTANCY.

PREPARING FOR BUILDING BOOM.

Lumber Company Takes Permit for Huge Wharf.

U. S. Grant Hotel to Install Eight Elevators.

Continued Activity in All the Country Towns

SAN DIEGO, Sept. 4.—Anticipating that San Diego is to soon experience a greater building boom than ever before, lumber concerns are preparing to expand in order to be able to take care of an increased business. The Western Lumber Company yesterday took out a permit with harbor commissioners to build a wharf at the foot of Columbia street to cost $30,000. A company of Portland capitalists are forming a company to engage in the manufacture of lumber here. A site has been secured and it is said the mill will be one of the largest ever built in Southern California. The harbor commissioners have under consideration an application for a franchise to use tide lands and to build a wharf for the company.

While realty transactions are slack building operations are booming. Reese Llewellyn, of the Llewellyn Iron Works, has spent the week here looking after contracts for installing ten elevators of the latest plunger type. A battery of eight of these modern lifts is to be installed in the U. S. Grant Hotel building, while two are to be used in the ten-story building of American Land and Building Company.

The Common Council has under consideration three bids for the construction of a fire-engine house on University Heights. F. M. Howell, E. L. Rambo and G. Maltby are the contract bidders. Maltby put in the lowest, $1470 for Oregon pine floors and $1485 for asphalt.

George F. Long, a native of England, while touring the United States became so enamored of San Diego that he has decided to build a home here. He bought two lots on City Heights for $1500 and has contracted for an elegant home. M. German, a local capitalist, this week purchased an entire block of lots in City Heights at a reported price aggregate of $300 per lot.

The Hayes & Hayes Realty Company report the sale of a lot 116 by 135 feet, on University avenue, for Edward R. Thompson and others to H. D. Smith, a merchant of Creston, Iowa, for $20,000. The lot is improved with a frame building used as a grocery and a coal yard. Hayes & Hayes have sold for Edward Thompson to a local buyer two lots on Twenty-fourth and H streets, improved with a good house, for $5000. John A. Erickson has sold two lots on Georgia street, University Heights, to Mrs. Ollie McMahan for $2150. Luther Spainhor has sold to Prof. H. O. Wise, two lots on Irving avenue for $1150.

Mrs. Emily Botganger has begun the erection of flats on Front street between Date and Elm to cost $7000.

BIG RENTAL DEMAND.

FIRM HAS BIG SALES RECORD.

SOUTH PASADENA, Sept. 4.—The real estate firm of Washburn Bros., No. 1032 Mission street, reports a good business for the summer months and much inquiry for property in South Pasadena. In particular they have many calls for houses to rent from people wishing their children to have the advantage of good schools that are not overcrowded, or who want to invest, but wish to live here long enough to become thoroughly acquainted with locations before purchasing. They state the outlook for the fall and winter is unusually good. The following is a list of recent sales made by them:

Margaret Rowand of Pasadena to James N. Jewett of Texas, a lot 50x155 feet on the northeast corner of Oxley street and Montrose avenue, for $900 cash. Mr. Jewett purchased this lot as an investment. Mrs. E. E. Washburn to G. S. Hamrick of Pasadena, a lot 55x156 feet on the southwest corner of Oxley street and Montrose avenue, the consideration being $1250. This was also a cash sale and Mr. Hamrick will improve with two houses. One now under course of construction will be on the rear of the lot and facing Montrose avenue, and the other will face Oxley street.

Mrs. Stella Seed Freeman to M. M. Marble of Garfield avenue, one acre on the east side of Garfield avenue, between Oxley and Mission streets, improved with a six-room California house on the rear. The price paid was $3000. This lot is 100x535 feet, with a very fine building site on Garfield avenue. C. A. Dodge, to the school board of South Pasadena, four acres of land on the north side of Mission street, extending from Elm avenue to Montrose avenue, the consideration being $12,500. This site to be used later for another east-side school building.

H. W. Peck of Los Angeles to C. H. Walker, two lots 50x157 feet each, on the northeast corner of Monterey road and Stratford avenue, for $2500. Mr. Walker bought this fine corner, which stands up above the sidewalk about three feet, as an investment, but will probably improve later on.

In conjunction with the Sykes-Boadway Company, O. J. Sutton to P. E. White of Pasadena, a lot 50x150 feet on the south side of Pasadena avenue, just west of Monterey road, improved with a five-room cottage, almost new. The price paid was $3000. In conjunction with Sykes-Boadway Company, P. E. White of Pasadena to O. J. Sutton, a lot 50x150 feet on the north side of Delmar avenue, Pasadena, improved with a five-room cottage, for $3000.

A. C. Grier to J. R. Choate of Los Angeles, a lot 55x177 feet, on the west side of Elm avenue, between Monterey road and Oxley street, for $1250. This was a cash transaction. Mrs. Harriett A. Heath to L. L. Washburn, four lots, 180 feet on Sycamore and 160 feet on Arroyo Drive, improved with two store buildings and a five-room cottage. The consideration was $6250.

COLONISTS COMING.

MANY ACREAGE TRACTS SOLD.

BEAUMONT, Sept. 4.—The advance guard of eastern colonists have commenced to arrive in Beaumont, and many sales of acreage and city property are being made. The Beaumont Land and Water Company reports transactions as follows: William White has purchased thirty-one acres of mesa land four miles north of Beaumont, for $4750, and is erecting a country residence to cost about $6000. The house is being built on a hill 2200 feet above sea level, and will be surrounded by an orchard of apples, cherries and other deciduous fruits.

W. T. Davis bought twelve acres for $641, and will drill a well and build a home at once. Mathias Smale of Redondo bought a lot in Apple Valley for $650, and will plant fruit trees. E. A. Spann of Arizona purchased ten acres in Apple Valley for $1420. George P. Savage purchased two lots in the townsite, each 60x145 feet, for $300. Mr. Savage, who already owns five acres in Apple Valley, secured the city lots as a residence site.

For the second time in two weeks the Summit Hotel has changed owners, Charles Budden being the latest buyer and O. W. Bell the grantor in the transaction. The reported consideration was $6500. Mr. Budden is an experienced hotel man and will refurnish the house and add extra guests' rooms.

Principals and teachers for the new high and grammar schools have been appointed, and the school census now shows about 240 pupils as against seventy-five two years ago.

HOUSES NEARLY FINISHED.

MANY LOTS CHANGING HANDS.

AZUSA, Sept. 4.—W. P. Barnes reports the sale for Clifton J. Platt of Pasadena, of eight acres of unimproved land just southwest of town to Alexander Cameron of Pasadena. The consideration was $3000. There is a five-room house on the place, and Mr. Cameron and family will move in at once.

H. B. Bonner reports the sale of two houses and three lots on Azusa avenue and Fourth street for J. C. Morton of Azusa, to Mrs. M. S. Hayes of Oregon, for $3100. Mrs. Hays buys for an investment.

Three fine residences, those of Dr. Hill and Mrs. Burns on Center street, and of R. B. Demmitt on McKeever avenue, Azusa Heights, are nearly ready for occupancy.

REAL ESTATE NOTES.

Unintentionally the name of the architects, Jeffrey, Van Trees & Millar, was omitted from the account in these pages this week of the laying of the corner-stone of the new Union Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church. This attractive Gothic structure will be rushed to completion at once.

The Victor G. Kleinberger Company, which has occupied room 302, H. W. Hellman building, will move to rooms 332-333 in the same building.

Robert Marsh returned last week from an extensive tour of the Northwest, including Alaska. He reports San Francisco and Seattle not in it with Los Angeles in point of development and fall prospects. He advises strongly against any one's leaving Southern California with a view to investing in the newly-discovered area around the North Pole, and declares that it will be a long time before corner lots in that region will command the prices prevailing in and around this city. Mr. Marsh, however, predicts a big future for the United States' great northern possession.

Patton & Longley have secured the sales agency for Moneta Avenue Square. The tract will be opened today.

The Yaqui Land and Water Company, which controls more than 600,000 acres of fertile agricultural lands in the Yaqui Valley, Sonora, Mex., has decided to withdraw their property from the market for several months. This step has been considered necessary in order to place more sections under complete irrigation and to give development work a good start over the demand for the lands. The company is mainly a Los Angeles corporation, among its principal backers being the Richardson Brothers. John Hays Hammond and Harry Payne Whitney of New York are also interested. The present irrigation work comprises a main canal twenty-six miles in length and fifteen miles of laterals.

INTERESTING STATISTICS.

The books of the city water department show that there has been a total of sales of water connections made in the municipality of a little over 62,000. Of these a little over 4500 are permanently dead, leaving a little less than 58,000 actual water connections in force in the city of Los Angeles, not including the two recent additions of San Pedro and Wilmington. Of these still alive about 1900 are temporarily disconnected. The sale of new connections numbers about 300 a month at the present time, and for two years past the number temporarily out of use has not varied much from about 2000. At the present time the number is a little lower than for the past twenty or twenty-four months. Of these 1900 connections one-half or more are normally disconnected. They are connections with very out-of-date edifices, which are never tenanted except occasionally, when the population crowds up close to the capacity of the city for housing the people. When railroad expansion was going on here for a few years at such a pace, employing a vast army of peons to do the rough work, most of these shacks were occupied regularly. Under all other conditions they are normally vacant, and the water service disconnected. There are not above 1000 buildings in the city outside of these commonly untenanted shacks at the present time disconnected. Of course, there are a good many houses vacant in different parts of the city, where the service is not disconnected because the vacancy is looked upon as temporary. Persons leaving the city for a vacation or a visit East, or otherwise, do not have the water cut off, but leave the connection intact in order to keep the lawns up.

INGLEWOOD RANCH ACTIVITY.

Sales for the week at Inglewood Rancho are reported as follows: E. C. Chapman, one acre on Eucalyptus street, $475; Miss M. Fay, two acres on Patton street, $1300; I. K. Houser, two acres on Inglewood avenue, $1200; H. E. Conway, one acre on Oak street, $450; W. Charles Roberts, one acre on Winton street, $325; Samuel W. Webb, two acres on Ash street, $600; J. E. Cocks, one acre on Myrtle street, $750; J. C. Johnson, one acre on Lennox avenue, $600; R. Hulsman, one acre on Lennox avenue, $600; W. F. Prescott, one acre on Fir street, $500; H. L. McFarlick, one acre on Fir street, $500; C. F. Clark, one acre on Myrtle street, $650; S. M. Miller, one acre on Patton street, $600; C. C. McProud, two acres on Ash street, $600; C. E. BEAUTY SPOT.

SUNNY CITY OF RARE DELIGHT.

Homes of the Wealthy Rising in Sierra Madre.

Find Health and Happiness in Suburban Town.

Splendid Train Service Aids Municipal Marvel.

BY E. C. PENTLAND.

At the foot of Mt. Wilson, sixteen miles from the center of Los Angeles, stands Sierra Madre, a city of about fifteen hundred population, with pretty homes, orange and lemon groves, vineyards; shaded, curbed and paved streets, and cement walks. It stands at an elevation of from 800 to 1200 feet above sea level, the mountains towering above it and the beautiful San Gabriel Valley spreading out below.

The sixteen-mile ride on the electric cars is taken from Los Angeles in forty-five minutes, at a cost of only 30 cents for a single trip, 50 cents for a round trip, and on commutation tickets for less than 25 cents a round trip. The passenger coaches on this electric line are sixty-two feet long, will seat sixty passengers and have traveled more than seventy-five miles an hour. Mr. Huntington's private car once made the remarkable speed of 110 miles in one hour.

ELECTRIC CAR SERVICE.

The superiority and magnitude of the electric car service of Los Angeles is not realized until comparisons are made with other cities also noted for their electric car equipment. Los Angeles, with a population of 300,000, has three electric car systems, covering nearly 325 miles of tracks, with 26 routes of travel and 1218 daily train departures. Columbus, O., with the same population as Los Angeles, has only eight routes and 110 daily train departures. Chicago, Ill., with a population of 2,100,000, has only four routes and 113 daily train departures. Indianapolis, Ind., with a population of 250,000, has nine routes and 201 train departures. Fort Wayne, Ind., with 100,000 population, has three routes and 100 train departures. Springfield Ill., with 70,000 population, has four routes and 75 train departures. Detroit, Mich., with 375,000 population, has seven routes and 190 train departures. Cleveland, O., with 500,000 population, has eight routes and 165 train departures.

And more roads are being built, existing tracks are being extended, and the number of rails on present routes are being doubled and even quadrupled. The number of cars sent out is being increased. These figures are very significant at the present time. Sierra Madre has hopes that the present sixty-minute service will be doubled soon.

CLIMBING MT. WILSON.

Sierra Madre is the point of departure for those who enjoy a delightful mountain climb, either on foot or horseback, over a mountain trail to an elevation of more than six thousand feet—a distance of about eight miles. It takes the climber four hours to reach the summit of Mt. Wilson at an easy rate of travel, and there are stopping points along the route, one at two miles, another at four miles, and the last at the summit.

Many persons come out on the morning train leaving Los Angeles at 6:05 o'clock a.m., and climb the mountain during the morning hours, remain there all day and return in the evening. Others come out at night on the last car and walk up the mountain by moonlight. There are from 500 to 2000 persons who climb the mountain every Sunday, and during the winter months, when the snow is on the ground at the summit and the oranges are being gathered in the valley below, thousands made the trip to enjoy the novel experience of wading in the snow.

"There are two ways" said Mayor C. W. Jones, yesterday, to reach the summit of Mt. Wilson; on foot or on burro-back. The latter costs $2. The use of mules or horses costs more. There are two trails from Sierra Madre to the summit. One is the Mt. Wilson trail, and is about seven miles long. The other, known as the Sturtevant trail, is kept in excellent repair by the United States government. This last leads past the summit of Mt. Wilson to the West Fork of the San Gabriel River, the Mecca of the hunter and fisherman. It's total length is seventeen miles, up a very easy grade. Sierra Madre residents have a hunting lodge back in the mountains on this trail.

"After leaving Sierra Madre on the Mt. Wilson trail, the ascent commences immediately, and in two miles reaches an elevation, at the Quarter-way-house, of about 2500 feet. At this point there is cold running water and shady resting places. At the Half-way-house, two miles further on, one may stop and eat. The last stage of the climb is about three and a half miles, and at an elevation of 5998 feet the climber can rest and get refreshments at the hotel.

"Along the trail are other stopping places. At an elevation of 6100 feet is the Carnegie observatory, about a quarter of a mile from the hotel. The scenery is grand, and at least five hours should be spent on the summit. By making the trip in easy stages, almost any one, from children to old people, can make the ascent. The return trip takes only about half the time of the climb up.

"There is a speed contest up the mountain once a year for a gold medal, athletes from all over the Coast taking part. The record is one hour and twenty-five minutes, from Sierra Madre to the summit. The return to Sierra Madre may be made by the Sturtevant trail, on which are many new points of interest, and other magnificent views. Hundreds spend from one week to several months in the camp resorts in the cañons adjacent to Sierra Madre. The charges for the completely furnished tents being very moderate."

SUNNY DAYS.

"The attractions of Sierra Madre" said Mr. J. D. Brown, "are as varied as the seasons. In the winter our visitors are delighted with the location of Sierra Madre, because we have sunshine nearly every day throughout the year. The elevation is high enough to avoid the fogs of the low lands, and yet below the clouds which sometimes envelope the tops of the mountains above us. It is a beautiful sight to sometimes see below us, as far as the eye can reach, a bank of fleecy clouds, while perhaps at the same time the clouds are lying banked against the Sierra Madre mountain slopes, the snow-capped peaks being seen above.

"We have many visitors from the ice-bound Northern States during the winter months who come to enjoy our sunshine and flowers. In the summer we get the mountain breezes in the morning and the ocean breezes of the afternoon, so that the hottest day of summer is pleasant. The view from Sierra Madre overlooks the beautiful San Gabriel Valley, with its orange groves, farms and cities, and across thirty miles, to the ocean at the harbor of San Pedro, and to Venice and other resorts. At night thousands of electric lights are sparkling and the lights of the electric cars are seen moving in all directions."

The population of Sierra Madre is estimated at 1500, and the assessed valuation is more than $1,000,000. The various lines of business are well represented. They include a national bank, two general merchandise stores, a grocery store, two hotels, a newspaper, several restaurants and lodging houses, seven real estate agents, telephone exchanges, electric lights, a lumber yard, contracting firm, two meat markets, barber shop, tailor shop, two shoe stores, livery stable, two feed and fuel stores, poolroom, four churches, grammar school, sanatorium, public library, clubhouse, furniture store, garage, drug store, two hardware stores, a lawyer, doctor, but no saloons.

PAVING THE STREETS.

Sierra Madre has trebled its population in the last two years. The pride of the residents is in the well improved streets. The paving, curbing, grading with the most improved petrolythic method, which results in a dustless road in summer and free from mud in winter, will cost when done about $125,000. These street improvements are ten miles long, all made within the last eighteen months. The streets are the joy of the driver of blooded horses and the speedy automobile. Pepper, acacia and other varieties of trees have already been planted along the streets, making avenues of delightful shade.

PURE MOUNTAIN WATER.

Three tunnels were run into the side of the mountain, 300 to 600 feet, giving ample supply of pure mountain spring water for domestic use and irrigation. The water has been pronounced by the State chemist as the purest in California.

The income of Sierra Madre is largely drawn from the orange and lemon groves and vineyards surrounding the town. The city is the home of many wealthy people, and the healthfulness of the climate is famed far and wide.

PRICES OF LAND.

"The prices of property in and about Sierra Madre," said a leading real estate dealer, "vary from $400 for a lot 50x150, up to $1500 for a lot 100x200. These prices include cement sidewalks, curbing, oiled streets, water and generally either fruit or shade trees. Corners vary from $700 to $1800. The three principal streets, east and west, which parallel the mountain, are Central, Highland and Grand View avenues, all of which are improved, or being improved. Acreage prices vary from as low as $450, up to as high as $2000, depending upon the location and the orchards or improvements. Through eight months of the year all rentable houses are filled, the rents varying from $10 a month for a two-room furnished cottage, up to $25, for a six-room furnished house. When unfurnished about 25 per cent. less.

The majority of the houses are new and up-to-date. They are provided with bath, hot and cold water, electric lights, screened bedroom, flowers, trees and lawn. Sales now being made are largely to homeseekers and home builders. There have been over 150 homes built during the past year or so, many of them owned and occupied by wealthy business men of Los Angeles.

A RESIDENCE TOWN.

"Sierra Madre is destined to be the dwelling place of those who want a home where the scenery is grand, the water pure, and the conditions for life ideal. Even a poor man can live at Sierra Madre and prosper. I met a recently restored-to-health lady, who said her husband worked in Los Angeles.

"'We pay $12 a month for this cottage, and my husband pays 24 1-2 cents a day for electric car fare. That makes our house rent about $18 a month. We could get a cheaper house if we had too. This climate makes one almost crave out-of-door life. There are camping places here, where people live for months in tents. If we lived in the city our rent would not be less than $18 a month, probably more, and we would spend at least $3 a month for car fare. So it is cheaper to live in Sierra Madre and I enjoy the climate so much.'"

MANY COSTLY IMPROVEMENTS.

"During the past year or two, the following improvements, as nearly as I can recall them, have been made in Sierra Madre," said J. A. Gilbert. "Paving of streets, $85,000 (and $35,000 more being now expended.) Woman's Club House, $9000; telephone building, $2800; telephone exchange equipment, $22,000; addition to Congregational church, $1500; addition and pipe organ, Episcopal church, $5000; Catholic chapel, $600; A. N. Adams, stores, $1500; C. S. Kersting, brick store, $5000; J. J. Underhill, brick store, $2500; A. N. Adams, two residences, $5500; C. S. Kersting, offices $1000; J. H. BOARD OF TRADE WORK.

"The plans for the work of the Board of Trade for the coming year," said the president, J. W. Keys, "consist of securing a tourist hotel, to cost from $50,000 to $60,000; increased electric train service, purchase by the city of the water plant, securing a municipal gas plant (the bonds for $30,000 having already been voted;) numbering the houses, securing an extension of the electric line to the higher land east of town, the purchase by the city of a chemical engine, hose cart and more hose for a better fire protection, and the organization of a men's social club and the erection of a clubhouse."

POSTAL RECEIPTS.

The postal receipts of the Sierra Madre office, as reported by Postmaster C. A. Yerxa, for the quarter ending January 1, 1907, were $292.35, while for the same period ending January 1, 1909, they were $917.62, showing an increase of about 300 per cent. in two years.

RAILROAD STATION.

Sierra Madre is one of the favored stations on the Santa Fé Railroad, every one of the dozen or more trains making a stop here, this condition having been insisted upon by the late "Lucky" Baldwin when he granted the right of way.

WHAT THE CLIMATE DID.

"When I came to Southern California," said F. A. Patterson, "my friends were seriously alarmed at the state of my health, and I was given three months to live. The beneficial effects of the climate here were immediate, and within twelve months I passed a critical examination for life insurance. That was five years ago. I am now a Sierra Madre enthusiast. We have here in Sierra Madre, along the musical line, in which I take a great interest, a Monday Musical Club, devoted to the study of music and the musical masters; a choral society of thirty members; a stringed orchestra of eight pieces, and a mandolin club of twelve pieces. The organization of a municipal brass band is contemplated."

WOMAN'S CLUBHOUSE.

The ladies of Sierra Madre are proud of their $10,000 clubhouse, which was opened July, last. Semi-monthly attractions of a high order will be hereafter given, nine months of the year. The credit is largely due to Mrs. G. H. Leteau for the success of this enterprise. Several representatives of woman's clubs have visited the Sierra Madre Clubhouse and have been unanimous in declaring it to be the finest building of its kind in Southern California, outside of Los Angeles. There is a very complete auditorium on the ground floor with a seating capacity for five hundred, and adjoining a club room, dining-room and kitchen for social occasions. On the second floor is a lodge room which has been leased by the Masons for a term of years.

W. S. Andrews of Sierra Madre was awarded a gold medal at the Portland exposition for the excellence of oranges raised in his orange grove within the city limits of Sierra Madre.

WANT GOOD HOUSES.

Three Leading Rental Firms in City Say Demand for First-Class Homes Never Better.

"The demand for residence rental property of all classes is greater than it has been at any time in the past three years," said one of the leading rental men of the city yesterday. "There is an unusual demand for modern cottages and bungalows, well located," he continued, "but houses of all sizes and prices, if at all modern and in good renting condition, are sought after. The demand for apartments of two or three rooms, well located, is much greater than for flats, especially if the apartments have steam or furnace heat. Five and six-room flats seem to be desired the least of all. The demand for furnace-heated houses, even of the bungalow and cottage type, is increasing constantly. There are fewer vacant properties than have been on the market at this season of the year during the past three years, probably not exceeding 700 or 800 houses in the city in good rentable condition.

"Many owners," he added, "do not seem to appreciate the fact that with the enormous amount of building which has gone on in Los Angeles during the past few years, it is necessary to keep rental properties as nearly as possible up-to-date and in good repair. Many of the houses offered are not fit for occupancy, and yet the owners wonder why tenants cannot be secured.

"One feature to be noted during the past three years is the fact that there have been but few vacant houses at any time in the industrial section, where the laboring and working people live. This shows that this class of people have not been generally out of employment. The principal vacancies have occurred in the older section of the town, where the property is classed as semi-business property and the houses are usually old and frequently in poor repair.

"There has been an unusually good demond, also, this fall, for furnished houses of the better class," he continued. "The higher-priced properties are taken more readily than usual at this season. The fall inquiry, previous to the approaching opening of the schools, has been unusually early this year, owing, probably, to the fact that there are fewer houses to be had and the tenants are looking about in time in order to secure what they wish. The demand is increasing for higher-class properties, and the rent of first-class property is generally stiffening. Vacant properties have diminished in all parts of the city, Boyle Heights, East Los Angeles and all districts feeling the demand. The principal demand, however, is in the southwest and Westlake districts. We could dispose of an unlimited number of modern bungalows in these districts immediately."

Two other firms which lead in the rental business gave practically the same comment upon the general situation in the house rental market. One head of a rental department gave as his observation that the general demand is fully as good as during the corresponding period of 1906, and that the demand for the best in residence property was never so great before. Speaking of the remarkable number of apartment-houses under way in the city, this man expressed the belief that fully thirty of this class of buildings were being constructed, and said that practically all were leased at good figures. The same dealer declared that the leasing of business properties was the best in three years.

The head of another company declared that good five and six-room bungalows, modern and in first-class condition, and renting at from $25 to $40 a month were never so hard to secure in the history of the city as now. He cited instances when 90 per cent. of the advertisements inserted in the papers by his firm covering such property had been snapped up within three days. Like the other two men interviewed, he agreed that by far the greatest demand was in the west and southwest, but he agreed also that the right class of properties rented readily in all other sections.

ARCHITECTS AND BUILDERS.

The Southwest Contractor & Manufacturer reports the following new building enterprises: Morgan & Walls are preparing preliminary sketches for a two-story and basement frame residence on Wilshire boulevard, near Kingsley Drive, for Louis C. Scheller.

C. M. Gay is preparing plans for a twenty-ton ice plant and a 1200-ton cold storage building for the Fresno Brewing Company. The building will be 48x110 feet, one and two stories in height and designed in Mission style.

Homer W. Glidden is preparing plans for a one-story reinforced concrete store building, 50x65 feet, for Richard Stephens of Fillmore.

Garrett & Bixby have completed plans and taken figures for a three-story frame store and apartment building at First and Flower streets for Louis Delcart. There are to be two large stores on the first floor and twenty-three apartments above, each with private bath.

F. R. Dorn has completed plans for a mission-style frame and plaster depot to be erected by Robert March & Company, at the foot of the incline railway up Mt. Washington. The station will be 24x40 feet, with waiting rooms on the first floor and a four-room apartment above for the keeper.

Norman F. Marsh is receiving figures for a $25,000 building for the Memorial Baptist Church at South Pasadena.

A one-story brick store building, 60x115 feet, is to be erected at Nos. 721-723 Broadway by Col. John H. Norton, plans being prepared by John P. Krempel. Col. Norton will lease the building for three years with the intention of erecting a seven-story structure at the end of that period. Mr. Krempel is also preparing plans for a two-story, ten-room residence for A. Connelley of Oxnard, and for a two-story nine-room residence for George Hainlin of Anaheim.

F. M. Tyler, has completed plans for a one-story ten-room residence for S. W. Belden of Cahuenga avenue, near Sixth street, and for a story and a half, ten-room residence for W. H. Willebrands on Manhattan Place, near Fifth street.

Scott Quintin is preparing drawings for a six-room bungalow, 32x44 feet, at No. 625 Bailey street, for B. Shrophran, the exterior to be rustic.

Frank Demund has plans prepared and will build by day work a two-story ten-room frame residence at No. 112 S. Andrews boulevard, the estimated cost to be $5000.

Plans have been completed by John J. Harnish for a story and a half nine-room frame residence on Casco street, near Temple, for A. H. Cuenod. The porch and chimney will be made of clinker brick. The interior trim will be white mahogany and Oregon pine, with oak floors.

W. J. Austin has had plans prepared and will build for himself at No. 675 Grand avenut, a two-story, eight-room frame residence.

The Baker Iron Works has the structural steel contract and the C. J. Kuback the general contract for the six-story and basement brick building for the Crane Company on Third street, near San Pedro. The building complete will cost over $80,000. The plans were prepared by Morgan & Walls.

A WELL-KNOWN CARPENTER AND CONTRACTOR.

For many years I was a sufferer from catarrh with constant dropping in my throat, ear noises and deafness. My stomach was also affected, causing loss of appetite and general debility. Changes in climate and many forms of treatment failed to give me relief, and I had despaired of being cured, when friends induced me to try the Physicians and Surgeons' Association. Under their treatment I immediately began to improve, and in a surprisingly short time completely regained my health. You are at liberty to refer anyone to me.

STATEMENT OF REV. J. S. ANDERSON OF M. E. CHURCH
Los Angeles, 416 S. Hope St.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

From childhood I have been more or less inconvenienced by a growth in the nasal organs, which made it difficult to breathe in the proper manner, through the nostrils. It also impaired my speaking.

At last I decided to consult some specialist concerning the matter. Dr. S. G. Edwards of the Broadway Physicians and Surgeons' Association was the specialist I selected. He performed an operation, removing the growth and now I feel like a new and healthier person.

It affords me great pleasure to give Dr. Edwards my highest recommendation as to skill, ability and conscientiousness. Yours very truly, J. S. ANDERSON, Formerly Missionary in Utah of the M. E. Church.

THE MARKETS.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Practically the only change on the market yesterday morning was the advance in local butter. This was 2½ cents per 2-pound roll on creamery extras and firsts, and is in line with the general higher prices which are going into effect throughout the United States. Butter producers, instead of throwing their product on the market as fast as they make it, are placing it in storage throughout the Middle West. It is understood that concerted action will be taken by the producers to see a 50-cent price on every pound of first-class butter that is sold during the holiday period. Receipts of local stock were 26,748 pounds. Buying was fairly active, some butter still selling at the former quotation.

Egg receipts were only 74 cases. Receipts throughout the week have been light, and as a result prices are very firm. A continuance of light arrivals over Sunday and on Monday will probably result in an advance.

Cheese arrivals were 186 pounds. There was some call for the commodity, but not nearly as large as that of the day previous. The demand for cheese is picking up and prices are firm.

Potato receipts were 1165 sacks. The market continued firm with the announcement of arrivals of even this size. There is still a complaint of unripeness of some of the spuds arriving from the river district. Onions are selling regularly, but without any features. Prices have been unchanged for some time, although there is a slight fluctuation in jobbing quotations. Bean receipts were 166 sacks. Arrivals of sweet potatoes were 219 sacks. The demand for sweets is one of the best on the market, being continuous.

More than eight cars of apples arrived, 4494 boxes comprising the tabulated receipts. Among them were the first real storage apples of the season, red permains, winter pippins and late bellefleurs.

GENERAL EASTERN.

WHEAT PRICES SAG HEAVILY.

SLUMP IS DUE IN PART TO THE COMING HOLIDAY.

With Exception of Brief Period at Opening Sentiment Remains Bearish All Day—Initial Firmness Due to Rains in Spring Belt and Rumors from Argentina.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 4.—Wheat trade was of unusually small volume, owing to the coming holiday on Monday, and, with the exception of a short period of moderate strength at the start, sentiment throughout the day was bearish. Price fluctuation ranged 1-2 to 7-8. Much to the surprise of the bears, the market opened firm, with prices 1-8 lower to 1-8@1-4 higher. The initial firmness was due to general rains over the spring wheat country, and a dispatch from Argentina asserting the wheat crop in two provinces had been damaged by the locusts. With little to encourage buying, the market became heavy, and closed weak at almost the bottom.

Low temperatures in the Northwest, with a possibility that the cold weather may extend to the corn belt, prompted buying of corn by shorts, resulting in considerable firmness. Prices at the close were 1-8 lower to 3-8@1-2 higher.

A feature of the trade in oats was the buying of December and May by country houses. This, in some quarters, was said to indicate that the farmers were unwilling to sell their oats at present prices. The market closed steady with prices 1-8 lower to 1-8 higher.

Provisions were quiet and steady, prices not exceeding the 5c range.

Cash quotations were as follows: Flour, easy, winter patents, 4.75@5.10; straights, 4.40@5.10; spring patents, straights, 4.60@4.80; bakers', 3.25@4.80; No. 2 rye, 72@74; feed or mixing barley, 45@50; fair to choice malting, 54@63; flaxseed, No. 1 southwestern, 1.35; No. 1 northwestern, 1.41; timothy seed, 2.50@3.30; clover, 12.15; mess pork, per bbl., 22.87½@22.90; lard, per 100 lbs., 12.32½; short ribs, sides (loose,) 11.65@11.85; short clear sides (boxed,) 12.37½@12.50.

MAY EXCLUDE CONSOLIDATED.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—The New York Stock Exchange may continue to enforce a rule of its board of governors, prohibiting its members from dealing with members of the Consolidated Stock Exchange, under a decision rendered today by Justice Crane, of the State Supreme Court, in Brooklyn.

Marcus Heim, a member of the Consolidated, applied to Justice Crane for an injunction against the New York Stock Exchange, alleging the rule was in restraint of trade, and would make the New York exchange a monopoly in a legal sense.

Justice Crane refused to make the injunction permanent.

AIRY PLEASURES.

FEAST AND JOKE BENEATH TREE.

JOLLY PICNIC OF FOUNDERS' AND EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION.

Rivals in Business, But Comrades in Good Fellowship, Iron and Steel Men Gather Under Ancient Pepper at Rancho Verdugo and Enjoy Speeches and Dancing.

With a hot draw-off from the furnaces at Casa Verdugo and a large supply of case-hardened quips and jests, the Founders and Employers' Association of Los Angeles enjoyed its seventh annual picnic yesterday. Rivals in business some of them, but comrades in good fellowship and the spirit that has made Los Angeles the ideal home of industry, the members of nearly thirty firms engaged in the iron and steel trade sat down at a table under the ancient pepper tree at the Rancho Verdugo.

They discussed the making of the first boiler in Los Angeles, built with a pickax and a monkey wrench without a handle as the only tools. There were toasts of less technical character. M. A. Baker was called on to respond to the subject, "How Johnnie Heim Climbed the Back Fence," and Reese Llewellyn, with extreme erudition, discussed, "Girls I Have Met on the Train." Richard Livingston of the Keystone Iron Works was on the programme with a thesis on "Junk Dealers I Have Known."

One of the features of the entertainment was Reese Llewellyn's buck and wing dancing. A colored quartette having proved too professional to satisfy the genuine sporting instinct of the founders, Mr. Llewellyn was introduced as the amateur champion. After his exhibition, he collected $7.15 in nickels, that had been showered on the platform. One of the regrets of the occasion was that, having accepted money for a performance, Mr. Llewellyn must necessarily join the professional class.

After the dinner at Casa Verdugo the party went by automobile to Bimini Baths. It is one of the bylaws of the association that all good founders must take an annual bath whether they need it or not.

The officers of the association are: Fred L. Baker of the Baker Iron Works, president; Richard Livingston of the Keystone Iron Works, vice-president; W. B. Hoswell, secretary and treasurer. The Executive Committee consists of D. P. N. Little of the Union Iron Works, W. E. B. Partridge of the Union Tool Company and G. A. Axelson of the Axelson Machine Works.

BULLET HIS SOUVENIR.

Nicolas Garcia is carrying a leaden pellet in his right hip as a souvenir of a visit to the wife of a former friend, Jesus Traco, at Arcadia. Traco was waiting for him yesterday. When Garcia saw the irate husband he ran. His speed was increased by the sound of an explosion and a wound in his hip. He was brought to the city on an electric car and was treated at the Receiving Hospital.

ORIENTAL ROW NOW SETTLED.

JAPAN TICKLED, BUT CHINA NOT AT ALL PLEASED.

Five Points Concerning Manchuria Handled in Agreement Which Will Be Published This Week—Boundaries in Dispute to Be Fixed by Officials of Both Countries.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

PEKING, Sept. 4.—The final draft of the agreement between China and Japan in settlement of the various Manchurian questions that have been in dispute for some time, was signed at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The Japanese are pleased with it, but the Chinese declare themselves as being in the position "of a man compelled by successive blows."

The agreement sets forth that China and Japan entered upon this undertaking with the object of settling five points concerning Manchuria. It consists of two parts, which are divided into twelve articles and four [illegible], and is effective from today. It will be published officially September 8.

China will open the towns of Lunch[illegible], Chutzucha, Taotoku and Peit[illegible], in the Chientao district, as soon as possible. She will also open the Chientao district to settlement.

Japan recognizes the Tumen River as the boundary line between Korea and Manchuria, and withdraws all her officials from the Chientao district, completing the evacuation in two months' time. She will, furthermore, appoint consuls in Chientao.

The opening of the Kirin Railroad extension is to be decided mutually, and officials are to be appointed to determine the boundaries of the Fushun and Yentai mining districts.

APPEAL TO LAW FOR CHILD.

Negroes Try to Take Girl from Man Who Says He Is Her Father.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The Afro-American Council of this city has decided to attempt by legal means to secure possession of a [illegible]-year-old colored girl, Me[illegible], who is claimed by H. A. Baltus, a Belgian, to be his daughter. Baltus was cited to show cause next Tuesday why the child should not be taken away.

Dist.-Atty. Wachhorst has advised the council that it matters not whether or not Baltus is the girl's father, if he ill used her, she could be removed from his care. It is the contention of the council that Baltus and his wife use the little girl much worse than they do their other five children. They say they found the colored girl in a state of neglect, which was not the case with the white children. Baltus claims the colored girl is his natural child, born when he was in the Congo Free State as an employé of the Belgian government. The local negroes claim the colored girl's position in the Baltus household amounts to that of a slave.

BALLOONS FOR THE MASSES.

Sport of Millionaires Brought Within Reach of Common People in St. Louis.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Ballooning, the sport of millionaires, has been brought within reach of the "common people," by Harris A. Heimann, balloon builder and organizer of the South St. Louis Aero Club. A baby mastodon that can be inflated for $15 will be christened "South St. Louis, Jr.," today. The experiment with the baby balloon will enable the board of directors of the South Side Club to present a new rate schedule.

One of the objects of the new club is to furnish air voyages to members at the lowest possible rates, which have hitherto been $40 per head. Those bold enough to venture aloft alone probably will be able to do so at an expense of $15 per flight, plus car fare home.

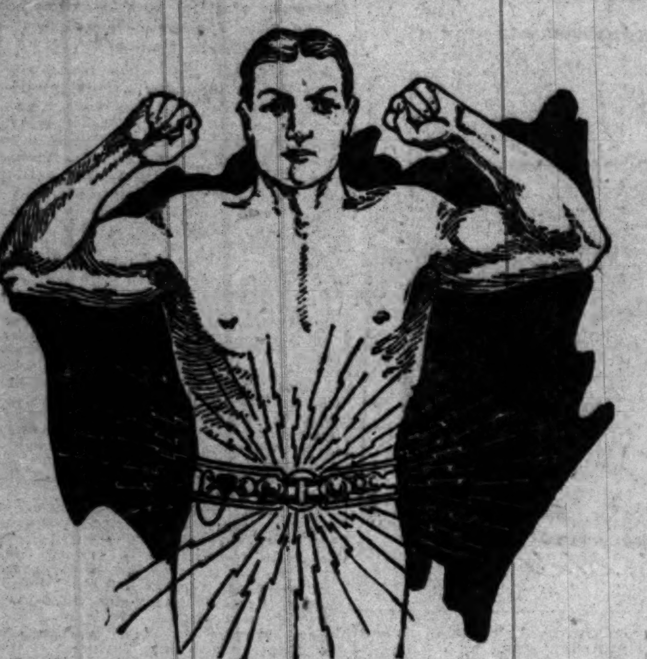
STANFORD'S NEW DEPARTMENT.

The medical department of Stanford University will be opened with public exercises on Wednesday morning. The address will be delivered by Henry Asbury Christian, dean of Harvard Medical School. Dr. Henry Gibbons, Jr., will speak on behalf of Cooper Medical College and President Jordan on behalf of the university.

W.O.W. PICNIC.

The Woodmen of the World will have a picnic at Redondo Beach tomorrow. An elaborate programme of sporting events has been arranged for the gathering, in which members of the various camps and circles will participate.

Be the Man You Used to Be



Wouldn't you like to be the man you were a few years ago; to have the same ambitious spirit, the strength and vitality that you used to possess? Wouldn't you like to be free from pains and aches, and to feel that you are the equal in strength of any man your age? You can be if you will obey the appeal here made to you.

All that you lack is vitality—new life. You are like an engine without steam—you haven't the motive power to keep the machinery of your body working properly. Anything that will restore your "steam" will make a new man of you. Drugs have been tried and have failed. You know that; but Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt can not fail; it is electricity, and "electricity is life." That is what you require, and a few weeks' use of Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt will give you health and happiness.

Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt is a scientific device for saturating the human body with a powerful but soothing current of electric life, for hours at a time without the least shock or burn or unpleasant sensation. It generates a constant, unbroken stream of electricity, which it sends coursing through every nerve and tissue of the body, restoring vitality and strength and giving to every weak or inactive organ the power to do its work as nature intended. When your body has sufficient electric energy to satisfy the demands of nature, weakness and disease can not exist.

What Other Men Say

"I was 58 years old when I began the use of Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt, but now I am 58 years young."
Terminal Island, Cal. D. McKENZIE.

"Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt has completely cured my rheumatism, and though I am sixty years of age I feel as young as I did twenty years ago."
Orange, Cal. H. P. JONES.

"Within four weeks after I commenced your treatment I was so improved in health that I was able to quit the use of the appliance. I am feeling as well as I ever felt in my life."
Fullerton, Cal. FRED BERNSTEIN.

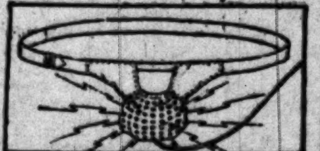
"I am pleased to state that Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt has proved effective in curing me of kidney and stomach trouble. I am better in every respect and feel many years younger than I did a few months ago."
A. M. COATS.
R. D. No. 3, Santa Barbara, Cal.

"Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt has proven to be all you claim for it. In spite of my age—I am past sixty—it has given me a new lease on life; my health generally has improved, and I have gained in weight. I will vouch for your treatment at any time."
Upland, Cal. JOHN GEARY.

"Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt has cured my stomach trouble and whatever I eat digests easily. My kidneys are all right now, and the back pains are gone."
Box 647, Corona, Cal. J. S. LEWIS.

Men who are nervous, run down, weak and unambitious will find that electricity, as supplied by Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt, will quickly put them in good condition.

The man does not live who can not be made a better man by the application of Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt. Those who have used it say that it is the grandest invigorator of the age.



Electric Suspensory Used in Connection with Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt.

Because you have experimented with faradic batteries or taken electric treatment from physicians without being cured, is no reason why my method should prove a failure. The doctor's battery can only be applied for half an hour at a time, and that is not enough to effect a cure. Besides, that method is inconvenient and expensive. Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt can be used all day or all night without interfering with your work or rest.

I want every ailing man to call, if possible, and let me thoroughly explain my method of electric treatment. If I can't cure you, I don't want your money, and I'll tell you so at the start. When you pay for Dr. McLaughlin's Electric Belt you pay for a cure.

MEN!

Stop Taking Poison

They wonder that it has never occurred to them before that disease was but the result of the disturbance and derangement of the vital force. That the only way to restore an organ of the body to healthy action is to bring to that organ the electro nervous force that shall cause it to discharge its functions without permitting stagnation, decay and consequent death.

Activity is the law of life.

Our Electric Vitaliz dry cell body battery or electric belt restores strength and health in a natural way. Call or write for our free book, explaining how and why it cures. It's written for thinking men—men who want to know what they are getting and that it is correct.

VITALIZ is the most powerful and perfect working appliance of this order made and requires no nasty vinegar or acids like old-style belts need—Vitaliz produces a high-grade power that cannot be obtained in common belts, so don't think all belts alike and be imposed upon by getting a cheap chain of JUNK, as sold all over town, and everywhere and called "electric belt." You can get them anywhere, but they are useless and weak.

No nasty vinegar or poisonous and dangerous acids need be used on our batteries, they are always ready for use. Our own special belt batteries—no inconvenience, and most perfect, long lived cells ever made. Why use old-style belts with cheap chains of junk. Call and let us show you the difference—we have anything you may want and at the bottom price—no pretended reductions, but the BOTTOM PRICE to you first. Call and see our appliances. Consultation absolutely free. F. G. BRANTVERNE, 1102 Maple ave., cor. E. 11th st., Los Angeles, Cal.

WE ARE MANUFACTURERS and undersell all—giving you the GENUINE and charging you less than you would have to pay for inferior kinds from dealers, etc. We also have all kinds made at cut rates, but manufacture the best, most powerful and perfect working appliance which GIVES A CONTINUOUS STREAM OF HIGH-GRADE POWER DIRECT TO THE BODY. Our electrical suspensory, which is included with ALL our belts, restores lost strength and makes happy, healthy men of those who feel like wrecks.

A GOOD, STRONG VITALIZ belt $5 complete, with electric suspensory for men—THE RIGHT KIND, TOO—Not a cheap wire one, like sold by others, but the BEST.

Have you ever noticed the man who goes to the drug store ever so often for his bottle of "nerve tonic," "invigorator," kidney dope, or other mixtures? Ever see him cured? No—he always looks all in, down and out, and he's getting worse every day, but the dope deceives his senses and he thinks it helps him. It puts his stomach out of order and ruins his health in every way, but he does not seem to realize it. Why? Because the drug dopes away the pain or bad feeling and the alcohol in the mixture produces a false stimulation. You see him going to the dope shop every week or two for a measure of his dope and he thinks he is paying for it, but he isn't. The chief paying will come after a while, when the ruin of his system is complete and the drug habit has a firm hold on him—then he will suffer with all kinds of complaints and nothing will give him relief—that's the time the drug superstition gets its full pay—another man doomed to end his days a WRECK. All the foulest products of earth's decomposing disease matter are raked over to make the drugs; all the poisonous plants and nasty insects of disease infested lands are gathered for their POISON and the poison is fed to a human being simply because he is weak or has some other poison in his system. A fine practice, isn't it, and eminently respectable, no matter where the Man ends? BUT THE MAN WHO THINKS FOR HIMSELF will think well before he swallows some mysterious mixture—He wants to know why he is taking it and what he is taking it for, and HOW IT IS GOING TO BENEFIT HIM—We want to talk to that man, to give or send him our free book, which tells HOW to get strong and vigorous and HEALTHY without a drop of medicine.

"The word health now means a normal supply of electricity in the body, and the word disease means an insufficiency of that power."

The basis of energy in the human body is Electricity. All the organs, every function of the body and the health of the individual depend upon the Electricity possessed by the nerves, and pain, weakness, despondency, lost energy and ambition denote a lack of it. If the stomach fails to digest the food that is given it, if the nerves are weak, kidneys inactive, or any organ fails to do its work, it can be restored to perfect health by the proper use of it.

The greatest proof of the value of Electricity and how it is replacing drugs for a weak, broken-down system, is the fact that physicians who a few years ago scoffed at the idea of Electricity as a cure, are today applying it in preference to drugs. The results of experiments conducted by the greatest scientists in the country show that the action of the organs, the basis of life in the body, is Electricity, and where it has been wasted by overwork, indiscretions or disease, it can be replaced by the proper application.

People who have squandered fortunes in search of health and have tried every medium known, have in the end been willing to consider what the electric theory of disease could do for them. No sooner do we explain it to them than they are astonished at the simplicity and the directness of our treatment.

BY OWNERS AND DEALERS.

NEWS OF THE WEEK IN REAL ESTATE CIRCLES.

Demand for All Classes of Lot and Residence Properties Is Good for Time of Year—New Subdivisions Every Week—Big Fall Business Is Expected.

The demand for all classes of lot and residence properties continues to engage the attention of real estate dealers throughout the city. Many are declaring that the anticipated fall activity is in sight, and that business is already picking up appreciably. However that may be, it is safe to assert that the pessimist is an exception among the Los Angeles dealers in dirt. Realty men point out the general indications of prosperity, the record building permit statistics for August, the huge bank clearings and the steady movement in property of all kinds throughout the ordinary dull summer months and augur from this encouraging combination of facts that big times in real estate are surely due. The keenest dealers are putting good money into new subdivisions almost every week in anticipation of an unprecedented demand for Southern California property. Readers of these columns cannot have failed to note the ever-increasing percentage of buyers who purchase to build. The home-seeker is the buyer who brings the real and lasting prosperity to any community. He is the best friend the investor has. Following are the sales reports for the past week:

BIG HOTEL PROJECT.

Mammoth Hostelry to Cost Hundred and Fifty Thousand Planned for Santa Monica.

John M. Hammant has practically succeeded in financing a hotel proposition upon which he has been working for several months, as a result of which Santa Monica will soon have a new seaside hostelry. Mr. Hammant has secured a sixty-day option on a desirable ocean-front site, having selected the Mrs. Arcadie B. de Baker property just north of and adjoining Senator John P. Jones's "Miramar" home. The lots are at the corner of Ocean and California avenues and run through to Second street on the east.

The plans, as drawn by H. X. Goetz, call for an adaptation of the mission style, with a 320-foot frontage on California avenue. The building is to have a depth of 150 feet and will be either four or five stories in height. The details as to this are incomplete, much depending upon the amount of money to be invested. The desire is to secure a building of about 100 rooms, with an outlay, including equipment, of approximately $150,000.

Mr. Hammant has assurances of support from eastern acquaintances, and stands ready to invest his own funds to the amount of perhaps $40,-00. He has received considerable encouragement locally, and the details have progressed to a point where success seems probable. He is not, however, prepared to make a statement in detail concerning features of the building. His plans include an "Angels' Flight," by which the beach may be reached, and there is also a suggestion in his plans for commodious dressing rooms and a bath-house on the beach at the foot of the Palisades. The architect's perspective for the proposed building is reproduced on this page.

The structure contains eighteen two and three-room apartments, every room having outside light, and each apartment having its own private hall. Servants' rooms, laundry and heating plant are in the basement. The office and lobby are on the first floor. Wall beds and cabinet kitchens are features. Garrett & Bixby were the architects.

A BEAUTIFUL STREET.

Many Expensive and Handsome Houses Springing Up on Westmoreland Boulevard.

Of the numerous high-class residences completed or in course of erection on Westmoreland boulevard, photographs of two are reproduced on this page. These dwellings, which are at Nos. 1715 and 1815, respectively, were both built by L. M. Hollingsworth. The former is finished, and the latter is now nearing completion.

The property at No. 1715 is a twelve-room house of attractive and substantial construction. It stands on a lot 63x162 feet. The place represents an investment of about $14,500. The exterior is of massive trim, and the interior is designed along lines in keeping with the general appearance of the structure. It contains dining and living-rooms, billiard-room, halls, five bedrooms, sunroom, den, sleeping balconies and baths.

The house at No. 1815 Westmoreland boulevard stands on a lot 60x162 feet, and the property will cost, complete, about $18,000. It has four large rooms and bath on the first floor, six rooms, with two baths on the second floor, and three rooms, including a billiard-room, on the third floor. The first floor is finished in Tabasco mahogany, curly birch and quarter-sawed white oak; the second in white enamel, and the third in the natural wood. The house is to be equipped with electric power circuits for vacuum cleaning, heating, laundry and cooking.

Facts About Grand Pianos

—From a Recent Statement By Steinway & Sons

"A REAL GRAND PIANO is a musical instrument of orchestral character—Not a Mere Shape, that can be reduced to any size. The desire of so many to have a grand piano has induced most makers to produce tiny "grands"—so little that they serve only to accent the value of the upright. The size of these pianos is a concession to convenience and fashion—a fad—that does not consider musical effect. When a piano is less than 5 feet 10 inches in length it ceases to be a grand piano. It is an arrested development. It is only a pretty piece of furniture.

The STEINWAY MINIATURE GRAND

has all the characteristics of our great concert grands, in modified volume. It is a Real Grand Piano; it occupies a distinctive position between the uprights and the larger grands; there is a scientific reason for its size, 5 feet 10 inches. When you hear it you will understand why we make nothing smaller in grand pianos."

It will give us pleasure to demonstrate to you the beauties of The Steinway Miniature Grand.

The rich musical quality and splendid tone volume of this REAL GRAND PIANO place it in a class by itself.

Its distinctive position among Steinway productions can best be understood by comparison and demonstration.

Opportunity for these are at your disposal here.

SEA HUNTING.

SENDING DOWN AN ENEMY'S SHIPS NAVAL WAR GAME AT SAN PEDRO.

A Thrilling Defense of Los Angeles from Imaginary Attack by Water.

BY HARRY C. CARR.

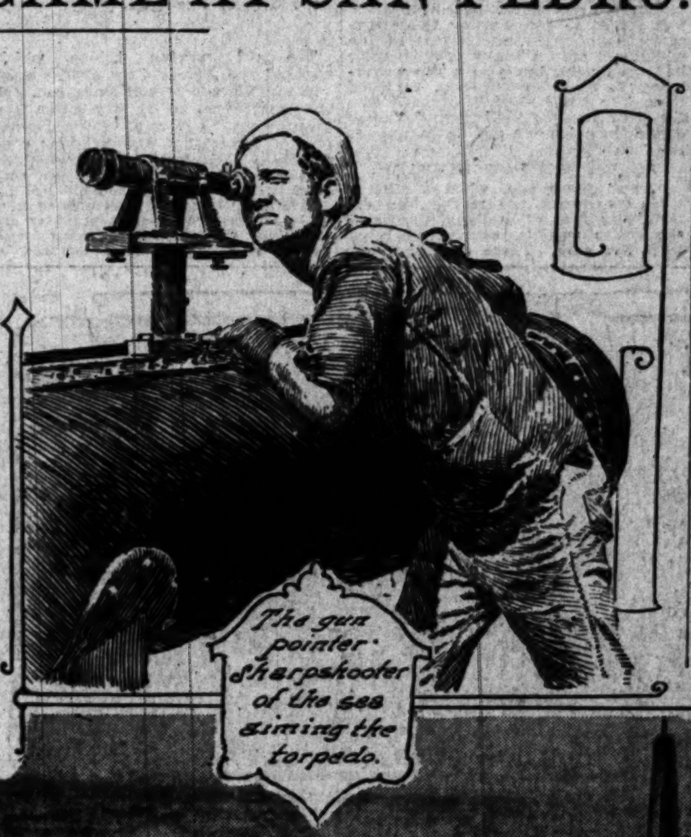
A SNUFFLING cough; a puff of powder smoke; a black, baleful-looking steel torpedo taking the water with an ungainly plunge like a cow jumping a fence; a splash; a long tearing rip through the water; another battleship sunk off San Pedro!

The army is maneuvering to persuade Congress to appropriate money for fortifications on the bluffs at San Pedro; but the navy is already at work with the torpedo boats, defending Los Angeles from an imaginary attack by sea.

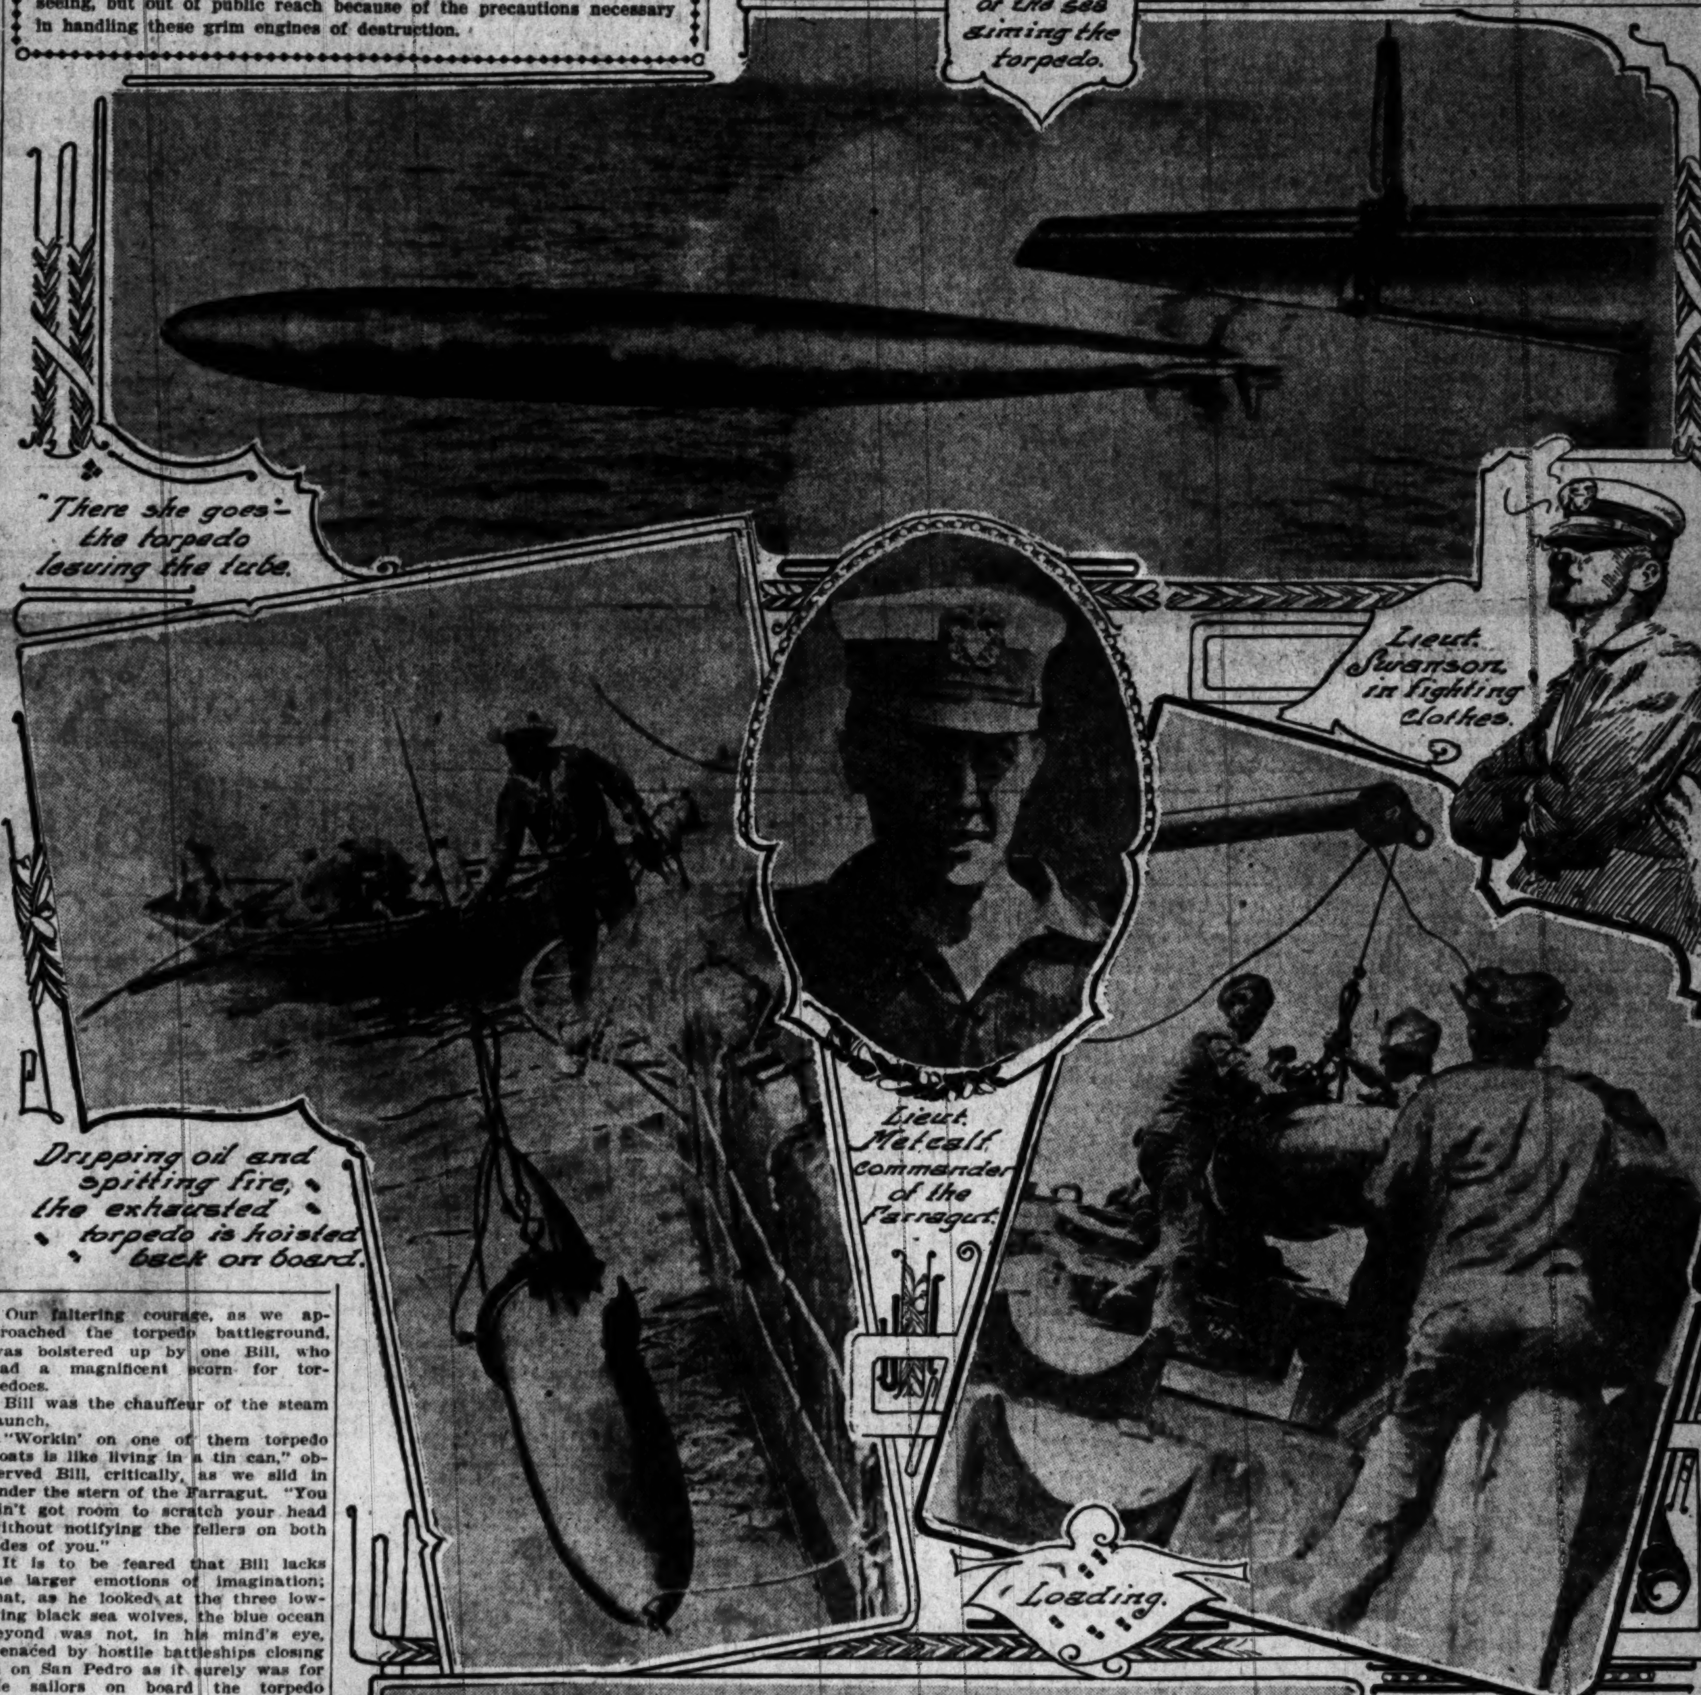
A thrilling and picturesque war game is going on near Dead Man's Island, off the end of the breakwater. The seascape, by this time, must be littered with the fragments of unfriendly Dreadnoughts.

Our champions in the fight are three mysterious-looking black, wolfish torpedo boats, manned by picked crews in fighting clothes, stripped to undershirts and in rough overalls—the Lawrence, the Farragut and the Goldsborough.

It is a spectacular, realistic practice these swift craft, with their deadly projectiles, they go to the mark like living things on errands of vengeance, are going through in the blue waters. It is a sight worth seeing, but out of public reach because of the precautions necessary in handling these grim engines of destruction.



The gun pointer—Sharpshooter of the sea aiming the torpedo.



"There she goes—the torpedo leaving the tube.

Lieut. Swanson in fighting clothes.

Lieut. Metcalf, commander of the Farragut.

Dripping oil and spitting fire, the exhausted torpedo is hoisted back on board.

The Farragut.

How the Port of Los Angeles Would Be Defended Today.

Impressive pictures by Rafert of torpedo boats in action off Dead Man's Island, ready to destroy an unfriendly fleet of battleships. The photograph of a torpedo just leaving the tube is one of the most remarkable ever made.

Our faltering courage, as we approached the torpedo battleground, was bolstered up by one Bill, who had a magnificent scorn for torpedoes.

Bill was the chauffeur of the steam launch.

"Workin' on one of them torpedo boats is like living in a tin can," observed Bill, critically, as we slid in under the stern of the Farragut. "You ain't got room to scratch your head without notifying the fellers on both sides of you."

It is to be feared that Bill lacks the larger emotions of imagination; that, as he looked at the three low-lying black sea wolves, the blue ocean beyond was not, in his mind's eye, menaced by hostile battleships closing in on San Pedro as it surely was for the sailors on board the torpedo boats.

The Navy Department seems to choose young sailors, almost boys, for this work, not only because it is hard and dangerous and fatiguing, but because it takes youth and enthusiasm to play the hard game.

A temperament like Bill on board would queer the whole romance. You couldn't pretend battleships with Bill watching you.

These boy sailors, however, contrive to throw a peculiar air of grimness about the war game. Everything looks warlike and terrible.

READY TO STRIKE AND DIE.

A torpedo boat is nothing but a flimsy shell of steel—all engine inside and all torpedo tube outside—meant to strike one death blow and perish. And all the stage settings fit the role.

The deck is stripped for action; also the men. Not a sign of color or bright fittings. Nothing but a red powder flag to show the ship is about to go into action and the smoke-blackened national colors on a staff at the stern.

You have to clamber up a ladder, made of a succession of creases, on the steel side of the boat. There are no luxuries on a boat like the Farragut.

The ropes and the slender rail, as you climb up, are sooty and black from the pouring rain of cinders falling from the huge funnels.

There are no such sailors about the deck as please your sense of romance on the battleships. They are all stripped to war paint.

Most of the men, lounging about the deck, are disrobed to their under shirts, displaying big, muscle-laid tattooed arms.

We asked for an officer and were led to a grave-eyed young man in faded blue overalls and a hod-carrier's jumper. This proved to be Ensign Keller, the torpedo expert and executive officer of the Farragut.

He was bossing some men in various degrees of nakedness and overalls who were spreading thick yellow grease over something that looked like a giant tuna made of steel. It was a torpedo, and we knew there was something doing, and that we were about to see a battle.

Presently the commanding officer, Lieut. M. K. Metcalf, came on deck. He was a boy in blue flannel shirt and a cap.

As he appeared, the young engineer-officer, Ensign Shonerd, went quietly forward and stood over the open ventilator hatch, looking down into the enormous machines—big enough to run a battleship.

Without a word, the crew of the Far-

BEFORE DAWN PAIR ARE WED.

Lover and Sweetheart Rise at Four o'Clock.

Are United at St. Vincent's Ere Sun Is Up.

By Ruse Elude Objections of Their Parents.

Believing an elaborate wedding ceremony, with all its previous and after functions, entirely superfluous, J. Clarence Dolan of this city and Miss Marguerite Clark, daughter of Anthony J. Clark, one of the foremost business men in New Mexico, stole a march on their friends, and were secretly married at 5 o'clock yesterday morning at St. Vincent's Church. Their wedding had been planned for October 20, and five or six functions in honor of the bride and groom had been set by friends.

In order to carry out their plan for a quiet wedding, the couple were forced to call in the aid of the Rev. Joseph S. Glass, president of St. Vincent's College. He arranged matters so that the customary calling of the bans in church for three Sundays before the wedding was dispensed with, and the matter kept secret.

He was one of the few persons admitted to the confidence of the couple, and after the ceremony acted as host at a wedding breakfast at the Hotel Alexandria.

Others who knew of the wedding were Marie Dolan, sister of the groom, who acted as maid of honor, and James T. Cleary, a young attorney, who was best man. The four young people assured their families on Friday evening that they were going to Long Beach to visit two of the sisters of the bride, and that they would remain at the beach cottage until the following day, or even until Monday morning, forming a little house party. To make their position more secure, they invited several friends to come down and spend Sunday at the same place.

Instead of following these plans, the party went directly to the Alexandria Hotel, where apartments had been engaged, and left word to be called at 4:30 in the morning. The earliness of the hour and the youth and different names of the party, gave rise to a suspicion in the mind of the clerk, who communicated this suspicion to a friend of the young people yesterday morning. It was then already too late to cause a change in the well-laid plan of the young people.

ROTTEN TOLL.

TONS OF FRUIT GO TO WASTE.

Heavy Losses of Produce Are Common Here.

Hogs and Incinerator Get Decaying Surplus.

Officers Vainly Try to Restrain Scavangers.

Why is all this waste of fruit?

Conservation of resources has been one of the great national issues during the past three years. The conservation of local resources, particularly of the vegetables and fruits which are grown in Southern California, or elsewhere and shipped here, might form an issue for local action.

Year after year, tons and tons of fruit and produce are carted from the markets of the city to the dump heaps in the river bed, to the incinerator maintained by the Board of Public Works or to the pig pens of numerous hog producers in this section, practically a total loss. At the same time throughout the city there are hundreds of poor people who, if the produce were offered to them in sufficient time, might find it unnecessary to accept the charity of the various charitable institutions.

The total amount of produce which is thrown away varies greatly each year and there is no one who can give accurate information as to the exact quantity whic his wasted. A consensus of opinion of the many produce merchants places the actual money waste at $10,000 a year at the very least and some of the dealers estimate it as high as $25,000. As these figures include only what goes to waste at the two big markets of the city, a greater average of loss may easily be considered because of the quantity of fruits and vegetables which never leaves the farm, or again that which passes through the markets and is finally wasted in the groceries.

WHERE PIGS FEED.

Just on the outskirts of Los Angeles, comprising a large part of the thriving community of Vernon, are to be found a great many pig farms, farms on which at least one-third to one-half of the fresh pork consumed in Los Angeles is raised. The owners of these farms are the chief scavengers on the market. They arrive long before rise of the sun in the morning and move from stall to stall and from commission house to commission house, selecting only the very best of the refuse, box after box of peaches, pears, tomatoes, melons or other products which have become soft, although not as yet an entire loss.

They leave the more decayed fruits for the owners of the places themselves, who must have their own wagons or hire some of the rubbish wagons to cart it off.

Three wagons of the Los Angeles incinerator are employed daily in gathering the left-over garbage. The drivers of these wagons receive 50 cents for every load they gather from the merchants. The refuse is then hauled off to the incinerator, down on the banks of the river, at the corner of McPherson street, where yearly, several thousand dollars' worth of fruit is burned. Two days ago an entire wagon-load of what had been the finest of late Crawford peaches, arrived at the plant for destruction and so it goes, according to the keeper, throughout the entire year.

In addition to the incinerator, there are two dumps in the river bed. To these, private rubbish collectors, who charge their own prices for gathering the decayed products, carry their loads and dump them. They are burned in the open after lying for days at a time, a stench and nuisance to any one living within half a mile of the places. Altogether, there are at least forty wagons employed in hauling off the surplus fruits and products which because of a lack of buyers, has been thrown away.

SMALL CHANCE FOR CHANGE.

There seems to be little opportunity for a change in this condition. Los Angeles, according to one of the leading merchants, is a town which has little outlet after the demands of the local residents are filled. "We have really no immense canning industries here, such as they have in many cities of the East, where the representatives of the canneries appear on the market every morning, shortly after the hours of regular trade, and absolutely clean up the left-overs.

"In Los Angeles, the canneries buy very little from the markets. They buy directly from the producer in most cases. One exception is made in tomatoes at this season. The local manufacturers of catsup and canned tomatoes are taking the greatest part of the surplus at the inferior rate of $5 a ton, sometimes even a little less, but never more.

"We cannot ship extensively enough to carry away our extra product for the simple reason that all the surrounding country is producing country and, instead of taking our surplus, it frequently happens that the surplus from different places is shipped in here, causing an actual glut and then the dump heap. This year as an example peaches have been so plentiful that they could not be sold for any figure for a week or two. Every day saw several wagons of waste peaches go to the incinerator or to the pig pens. Thus it goes right along."

Last year one merchant was forced to throw away 1500 boxes of Symona plums after having purchased them and placed them in storage for several months. When they came out, they showed absolutely no keeping qualities and their rapid disintegration made it essential to find an immediate buyer, or what actually happened, to send them to the dump.

Last spring, before local tomatoes came on the market and before the canneries were open, one firm alone was forced to throw away two entire carloads of Mexican tomatoes on which, not only a heavy original price had been paid, but also a duty averaging 30 cents on the box, to bring them into the United States. Within the past two months, several cars of cantaloupes have found their way to the dump heaps.

PURE FOOD LAW STEPS IN.

Several years ago, when a glut of tomatoes struck the market, an enterprising firm of Italians purchased the entire surplus, approximating at least five cars. These they took and dumped into the cellar of an empty warehouse, having first built a temporary floor about a foot above the cement of the basement, and there they allowed the tomatoes to lie until about all of the juice had run out of them and the pulp and seeds were almost dry. This pulp they pressed into bricks, placed in packages and sold as conserve for soup purposes. Pure food laws have made such primitive and unsanitary methods impossible at present.

The question which naturally will arise in the mind of the general public, is why this surplus is not donated to charitable institutions, the Salvation Army, Volunteers of America, Sisters of the Poor or other worthy organizations.

There are several reasons why little of the fruit and vegetables is disposed of in that manner. In the first place, farmers who have raised products and sell on commission, do not care to have their products given away, not even if they are spoiling and the sale is impossible.

"We're sending you this stock to sell, not to give away," wrote one farmer to a merchant who had presented several crates of lettuce to a worthy cause.

OBJECT TO DONATIONS.

Various merchants have had the same sort of an experience. "We find it much easier to write 'dump' across the consignment slip than 'donation,' which usually must be followed with several letters of explanation.

"When the former word is written over the bill, they never stop to consider the thing," said one dealer. "This was proven correct just recently, when several growers made a kick because their cantaloupes had been given away, rather than thrown away."

No matter how close the buyers of produce may be, there are always times when there is considerable waste. The larger produce firms average from one to five hogsheads of waste produce a day, nearly half a ton. There is no line of produce or no variety of fruits of which this is not true.

One variety of scavenger overlooked, and the one least welcome among the stores, is the poor cholo and the low-class Russian, both nationalities being predominant among the single scavengers on the market. What may seem strange is the predominance of the women of these people, who like vultures swoop down upon the refuse barrels and with their clawed hands, root through the mess of decaying fruits, snatching some piece a trifle better than the average run and putting it away in a bag, basket or in a toy wagon, which is very frequently their method of transporting goods. Children are also plentiful. They are pictures of uncleanliness and filth, many of them knowing no use for water save to drink.

These scavengers are tricky and sly. They do not hesitate for a moment to steal whatever they may lay their hands on while no one seems to observe them. They have been known to cart off an entire crate of celery, bags of beans or potatoes, which they gather up while the proprietor is busy waiting on a customer.

Squabbles among each other are frequent and only fear of the market policeman keeps down regular revolutions. Health officers at various times have attempted to keep these scavengers at home.

SOLID.

CONCRETE TAKES PLACE OF WOOD.

THE NEW LINDA VISTA BRIDGE STANDS HEAVY STRAIN.

Viaduct Type Employed Is Severely Plain, But Looks Beautiful in Its Simplicity—Just Completed Jointly for the County of Los Angeles and the City of Pasadena.

The old wooden bridge which spanned the Arroyo Seco at the west end of Colorado street, Pasadena, for the last fifteen or twenty years has given place to a reinforced concrete, one of interesting and original construction. The cost of the new bridge was $22,054.67, or about $1.95 per surface foot of roadway and sidewalk.

The prevailing idea used now in concrete bridge construction provides for low, short girder spans and some forms of arch construction. The arch form of bridge is considered the most perfect, although the most expensive.

The site of the Linda Vista bridge, as it is called, is ideal for the arch construction, but as the funds set aside were limited it was necessary to design something new.

It was finally decided to use the viaduct type of building, long girders carried by towers. Previously there were only two bridges of this sort in use, one a railway viaduct, built in 1907 for the Richmond and Chesapeake Bay road in Virginia, and the other a highway bridge in Takoma Park, Ind.

The general specifications called for a structure 400 feet long, with a 20-foot roadway designed to carry a 20-ton roller. The height of the bridge above the river bed is about 65 feet. To save the cost of scaffold, the old wooden bridge was strengthened and used as a working platform and to support the new bridge in the building.

Although the Arroyo is dry nine months of the twelve, in the rainy season a volume of water sometimes six feet deep and of considerable force must be taken care of. A reinforced concrete bridge is one built for all time, so it was necessary to carry the foundations deep enough to avoid any chance of a washout.

Much water from the underflow of the stream was encountered in digging the excavations. With the pumping machinery on hand it was impossible to take care of all the water, and it was necessary to deposit the concrete under water. This is done with a tremie, or long tube with a hopper at the upper end, that permits placing the concrete in mass on the bottom of the excavation without its being washed away by the water.

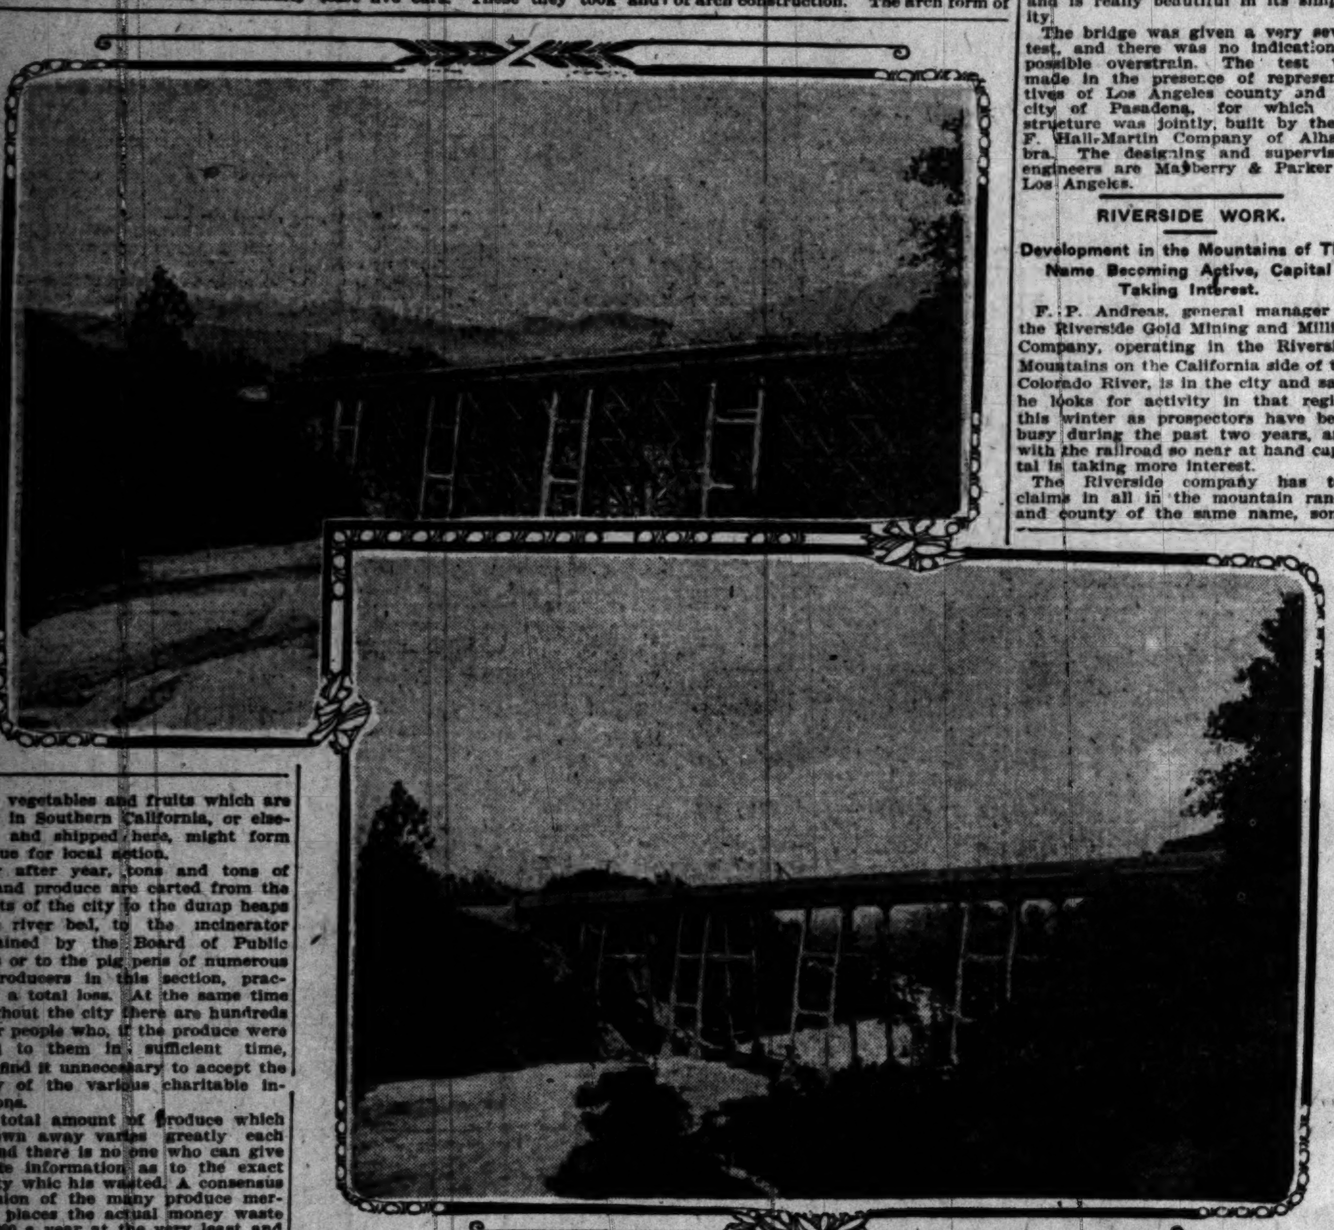
The deck of the bridge consists of a reinforced concrete slab, longitudinal stringers, transverse deck beams and girders. The stringers are 17 feet 3 inches long, and 6 feet on centers, with a cross-section of 7x19½ inches and reinforced with four 1-inch twisted steel bars. The deck beams between the larger girders have a cross section of 10x25½ inches and are reinforced with six 1⅛-inch bars. In the tower spans these transverse beams were increased to 12x30 inches to add lateral stiffness.

The large girders 15 feet 9 inches long, extending from tower to tower, have a cross section of 16x58½ inches and are reinforced with nine 1⅛-inch twisted steel bars in tension, and three 1⅛-inch round steel bars in compression. In the tower bend the longitudinal girders are the same size as the 50-foot girders and are reinforced with four 1-inch steel bars.

Corbels were used in the longitudinal girders and shear bars and stirrups were provided to care for all stresses. The sidewalk is carried by small cantilever beams or brackets at every panel point on the outside of the large girders. The rail is a 4-inch reinforced concrete slab designed as a cantilever.

The structure is severely plain. There was no attempt at ornament; art was sacrificed to utility in order to eliminate extra cost. Nevertheless the bridge presents a pleasing aspect, and is really beautiful in its simplicity.

The bridge was given a very severe test, and there was no indication of possible overstrain. The test was made in the presence of representatives of Los Angeles county and the city of Pasadena, for which the structure was jointly built by the J. F. Hall-Martin Company of Alhambra. The designing and supervising engineers are Mayberry & Parker of Los Angeles.



Concrete Versus Wooden Bridges.

The upper picture shows the wooden frame and structure, while that below gives a view of the spindle-shanked concrete supports and completed bridge.

RIVERSIDE WORK.

Development in the Mountains of That Name Becoming Active, Capital Taking Interest.

F. P. Andreas, general manager of the Riverside Gold Mining and Milling Company, operating in the Riverside Mountains on the California side of the Colorado River, is in the city and says he looks for activity in that region this winter as prospectors have been busy during the past two years, and with the railroad so near at hand capital is taking more interest.

The Riverside company has ten claims in all in the mountain range and county of the same name, some fifteen miles west of Parker, four miles south of Brownell station, on the California & Arizona Railway and eleven miles from Calzona, the new town on the California side of the Colorado River. The company's main office and Mr. Andreas' headquarters are at Kingman, Ariz., with a branch office at Chloride. The officers and directors are: John Ware, president, Kingman, Ariz.; John L. Hoffman, vice-president, Wilkinsburg, Pa.; F. P. Andreas, general manager, Kingman, Ariz.; James M. McMillan, secretary and treasurer, Chloride, Ariz.; Frank A. Bradway, San Diego, Cal.; Jacob A. Nieset, Gibsonburg, O.

The property is a tunnel or quarrying proposition. About 175 feet of drifts have been run, besides several shafts of fifteen to twenty feet. The Newman property that was recently sold has gone down 200 feet, the deepest workings in that vicinity. This is a mile and a half from the Riverside. The Rapineo is working twenty-five men near the mouth of the same cañon.

Mr. Andreas says the ore is gold and copper, select specimens in the district going as high as $2000. Surface indications, he says, are unusually good, the veins being large and well defined. As far as deep work has been carried on, he asserts, it has shown the veins to go down.

Submarine Cables Melted.

In overhauling the seven submarine cables between Italy and Messina several of them were found to be badly damaged by heat, the sheathing and layers of rubber being burned and in some cases the copper conductors fused. Owing to the great change in the "floor" of the strait of Messina, one of the cables was so deeply buried that it was necessary to abandon it.

GRAVE CHARGE.

ACCUSED OF COLLECTING FOR TOMBSTONES NEVER SET UP.

COLLECTING from the Woodmen of the World for tombstones he did not place on graves of deceased members was a lucrative occupation for Thomas Barlow until his treachery was discovered, according to officers of the organization.

F. A. J. Shaffer yesterday swore to a complaint in the Police Court charging Barlow with having obtained money under false pretenses. A warrant was issued for his arrest.

To Woodmen, Barlow's alleged acts appear to be a serious offense. It is part of their creed that the graves of all departed members shall be marked with suitable tombstones. They provide a fund of $100 for a monument for each grave.

In order to collect for placing the gravestones, the contractor is required to make affidavit and also to procure the certificate of two members of the camp to which the deceased belonged, stating that the stone has been set.

Barlow is a tombston emaker. He did a flourishing business with the lodge. He is said to have obtained thirty or more contracts.

The grave is held to be sacred by the members of the organization and for months they did not suspect that anything was wrong with the affidavits of Barlow.

One day a member of the organization went to visit the grave of a deceased friend, where he knew there should be a gravestone. He was surprised to find there was no marker on the mound. This led to an investigation. It is declared that Barlow collected for placing twenty-five stones which he did not furnish, netting emoluments of $2500.

He is said to have learned a week ago that there was trouble in the wind and to have placed seven of the monuments he had contracted for.

The specific case selected for bringing him to trial is in connection with the grave of Thomas E. Jacobs, a former member of La Fiesta Camp, No. 63, who is buried in Evergreen Cemetery.

Barlow is said to have collected $100 on May 29 for erecting a stone on this grave. Woodmen declare the grave is bare save for a covering of grass and some flowers planted there by friends.

They are bitter in their denunciation of Barlow, accusing him of being a "grave robber."

MODERN MARVEL.

LEADING POWER UNDER GROUND.

SYSTEM OF TUNNELS UNKNOWN TO AVERAGE CITIZEN.

Twenty-four Feet Below Broadway, Spring and Hill Streets Are Galleries Through Which Run Pipes Carrying Energy to Heat and Light Many Giant Buildings.

Twenty-four feet below the level of the ground at Broadway, Spring and Hill streets, there exists a system of tunnels almost entirely unknown to the citizens of Los Angeles. Yet they are essential to the life of twenty buildings, among them being several of the largest and handsomest in the city.

It rarely occurs to the mind of the ordinary busy man that the building in which he conducts his affairs has become, through the press of modern needs, a most complicated mechanism which requires careful and systematic supervision, the intricacies of which are managed by a large staff of experts. MODERN MARVEL.

LEADING POWER UNDER GROUND.

SYSTEM OF TUNNELS UNKNOWN TO AVERAGE CITIZEN.

Twenty-four Feet Below Broadway, Spring and Hill Streets Are Galleries Through Which Run Pipes Carrying Energy to Heat and Light Many Giant Buildings.

Twenty-four feet below the level of the ground at Broadway, Spring and Hill streets, there exists a system of tunnels almost entirely unknown to the citizens of Los Angeles. Yet they are essential to the life of twenty buildings, among them being several of the largest and handsomest in the city.

It rarely occurs to the mind of the ordinary busy man that the building in which he conducts his affairs has become, through the press of modern needs, a most complicated mechanism which requires careful and systematic supervision, the intricacies of which are managed by a large staff of experts. Occupants of the buildings usually find matters relative to elevator service, electric lighting, heating, ventilating, warm water service and other accessories so perfectly arranged that they generally have either no conception at all or but a very dim one of the magnitude of the mechanical plant all these comforts require.

Perhaps not one in a hundred is conscious of the existence under the building and quite a few feet below the level of the sidewalk over which he hurries, of a throbbing engine-room within which huge fly wheels are revolving incessantly, buzzing dynamos are dizzily whirling, and ponderous shafts and cranks are swiftly gliding over their fixed course amid innumerable polished metal bars, quivering pipes and mysterious mechanical devices, all pulsating with life and illuminated by incandescent lights.

Standing in the lobby of the Hotel Alexandria, one is easily aware of a steady pulsating movement of the floor and walls. Directly below, at a comfortable depth, however, is the engine-room of the hotel.

Beneath the Douglas, the Bradbury, the Wright & Callender and the Currier buildings are similar engine-rooms at depths averaging sixteen to eighteen feet. That of the new Story building will be forty feet below street level.

Several of these engine-rooms are also the source of power to a chain of buildings within as large a radius as 1100 feet. By means of a system of tunnels, heavy pipes carrying superheated steam, boiling hot water and cold water under heavy pressure for hydraulic power, are conducted beneath the buildings and led up through them systematically, according to their purposes. But the tunnels are not mere holes through the earth designed for piping only, but large and well-ventilated passages about four feet in width and six in height, reinforced by a coating of concrete twelve inches in thickness, and electric lighted throughout the whole course.

The tunnel radiating from the Bradbury building is the longest of its kind in the city, its maximum length being 1140 feet. It furnishes all the power required for the maintenance of the Laughlin, Byrne, Exchange, Blackstone, Trustee and Y.W.C.A., besides giving temporary power to several smaller structures. It commences under the Bradbury building, at a depth of twenty-four feet, and going in a northerly direction, crosses Broadway and over the Broadway sewer to the Byrne building. It continues its course under this, and runs west to Hill street in a straight line, passing under the Columbia Trust building, then under the Exchange building and over the Hill-street sewer and finally into the Y.W.C.A. building.

Within the tunnel, the temperature is close to 115 degs. Farenheit, and the rumble of the cars and wagons passing overhead can be distinctly heard. The plant cost more than $20,000, and supplies power to seventeen elevators.

The power plant in the Douglas building makes connections with ten other buildings, including the Stimson block, the Henne block, the Lankershim, the Currier, Spencer and Muskegon buildings. The Wright & Callender plant operates the Grant building by means of a tunnel more than 400 feet long. The last-named building was not long ago operated by an independent plant, but this was abandoned for the present arrangement.

The Coulter power plant not only operates the building of the same name, but the Blanchard, the American National, the Merchants' Trust and the Frost buildings, besides other minor establishments.

Two of these tunnels were completed within the last few months. The power plants are entirely automatic in their operation.

CLEAN-CUT CANDIDATE.

Would-Be District Attorney of San Francisco Makes Fine Impression at Club.

Charles M. Fickert, Esq., candidate for District Attorney of San Francisco, running against Francis J. Heney, was guest of honor of the Stanford Club at the Hollenbeck yesterday.

It was a banquet-luncheon with about fifty Stanford men present.

In an informal way, as between college friends, Mr. Fickert spoke of his ambition to be District Attorney of San Francisco and told of his plans for the conduct of that office.

The sore-headed supporters of Heney have made Fickert out to be the wretched tool of the moneyed interests of California; but he proves to be an exceptionally clean-cut, straightforward young lawyer.

He emphatically disposed of the viciously circulated stories that, if he is elected, graft prosecution will stop.

He declared his intention of prosecuting every proper case brought before him, whether it affected rich men or poor men, powerful men or obscure men. On the other hand, he said, that if elected, no cases will be prosecuted by his department which are based on spite and no cases will be sent to trial without sufficient evidence to secure a conviction.

FROM FAR ISLE.

SENDS VOLUMES ON EUCALYPTUS.

GIFT RECEIVED HERE FROM AUSTRALIAN AUTHOR.

Director of the Botanic Gardens at Sydney Accepts the Office of Honorary Vice-President of the Forestry Society of California—Forty-four Books in the Donation.

J. H. Maiden, F.L.S., government botanist for Australia, director of the Botanical Gardens at Sydney, and world authority on eucalpytus culture, has written to the Forestry Society of California, consenting to become one of its honorary vice-presidents.

With the word of his acceptance of the office, Mr. Maiden has forwarded a complete set of his writings on eucalyptus to be placed in the forestry library. The list comprises his "Revision of the Genus Eucalyptus" and other writings in pamphlet form relating to research data, agricultural lectures, and his lectures before the Linnean Society in New South Wales.

The publications number forty-four, and will be accessible to the interested public any week day at the Forestry Society headquarters in the Delta building.

Several of the pamphlets may be found in the Public Library, besides other single copies in the city, but the matter sent by Mr. Maiden is the only complete set on the Pacific Coast. Dealing with the eucalyptus culture, the works are invaluable to the Forestry Society and California, in view of the fact that the cultivation of eucalyptus for commercial purposes and as a means of reforestation seems destined to assume vast proportions in this State.

Mr. Maiden has been accepted as the man who knows more about the eucalyptus tree than any other one living, and he is known wherever forestry is an issue. He was the first man to realize the value of eucalyptus cultivation for export purposes, even in its native land, and his advice and suggestions concerning the growth of the tree in its native country will be of special benefit to the Forestry Society which has at heart the vital question of reforestation through the eucalyptus.

A copy of the resolutions drafted in appreciation of the gift has been sent to Mr. Maiden. The letter received from him will be placed in a frame and hung in the society's office.

Some of the honorary vice-presidents of the Forestry Society are: Gov. Gillett, State Forester G. B. Lull, Abbot Kinney, Benjamin I. Wheeler, president of the University of California; Charles S. Fee, passenger traffic manager of the Southern Pacific; Henry E. Huntington, Ernest Braunton, Hon. William E. Smythe, author of the "Conquest of Arid America;" Representative S. C. Smith and Mrs. Minna E. Sherman, State lecturer.

TO HOLD RIVER SAFE.

Levees to Be Built by People of Santa Maria Valley to Lessen Flood Danger.

A reclamation project, which will involve the expenditure of nearly $200,000, and which will bring enormous benefits to the great agricultural interests of the entire Santa Maria Valley, is about to be started by the business and farming interests of that district.

Special representatives of the population of the Santa Maria Valley, delegated from the three cities of Santa Maria, Betteravia and Guadalupe, have decided upon the formation of a reclamation district in the valley to protect it from the ravages of the flood waters of the Santa Maria River, which last year wrought great damage to more than 1000 acres of rich farming lands. As a result of the decision, a board of directors has just been elected for the purpose of supervising the construction of a system of levees along the river at the points of greatest danger, and to float enough bonds to cover the expense of the work. The members of the committee are J. W. Atkinson of Betteravia and Messrs. Goodwin and Rice of Santa Maria. Their position is legalized by certain special State laws, which regulate their action in the matter. It is expected that the bonds will be taken up by Los Angeles and San Francisco banking institutions.

In the Santa Maria Valley there are more than 3500 acres of rich lands, cultivated principally to sugar beets and beans, and the damage inflicted to these crops by the last floods made the present project an imperative necessity. The construction of some of the levees will involve difficult engineering feats.

There are three points in the valley along the river banks at which the Santa Maria broke out during the last season's rains. At Fulger's Point 300 acres were washed away, and here the river threatened to cut a new channel to the towns of Guadlupe and Santa Maria.

Below the Suuy Crossing another 300 acres were washed away, and an island formed. Above Guadalupe, the river nearly succeeded in cutting another course for itself and spreading on both banks, washed away hundreds of acres of rich loam. At each of these places powerful levees will be built to hold the flood in check.

Plans are now being completed for the entire system, and actual work upon the project should commence within two weeks. F. C. Finkle of Los Angeles is the consulting engineer in charge of the construction, and in a few days he will be upon the scene of operations.

HELPING THE HELPLESS.

Great Work Accomplished by Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

The Los Angeles Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has just issued its thirty-second annual report, setting forth in much detail the equipment of the society and the work performed.

The home for sick and disabled animals on Mimosa street, the ambulance and fine team of horses for transporting them to the home, the drinking fountains for animals, and other things receive due attention from Superintendent Zimmer.

During the year the society investigated 2208 cases, examined 4949 animals, 783 of which were destroyed in accordance with the law. Those destroyed were divided as follows: Horses, 268; cats, 346; dogs, 128; mules, 26; cattle, 15. There were suspended from labor, to be given time to recover from various ailments and injuries, 406 horses and 115 mules. Arrests for cruelty during the year, 356; convictions, 319; acquittals, 15; dismissals, 18; cases pending at close of report, 4. Some of the leading causes of arrests of drivers were working animals with sore necks or shoulders, 118; when lame and crippled, 140; when infirm and emaciated, 28; mutilating, 12; beating, 12; overloading, 5; overdriving, 3.

Superintendent Zimmer gives the details of a number of the cases in which those responsible for the cruelty were convicted, and all persons interested in the subject should have a copy of his report. The State law on the subject is also given in full in this report, and is invaluable to those who have a desire to protect dumb brutes from cruelty.

FOR FLOOD SUFFERERS.

Concert to Be Given at Y.M.C.A. Auditorium for Victims of the Waters in Mexico.

On Thursday evening in the auditorium of the Young Men's Christian Association, a concert will be given for the aid of the Mexican flood sufferers. As the reports of the terrible results of the floods in Mexico continue to come in, it becomes more and more apparent that the need is very great for immediate relief.

Master Vernon Bettin, the boy soprano, has tendered his services, as has also his brother, John Bettin, pianist, and a splendid programme has been arranged. As the Young Men's Christian Association has consented to give the use of the hall without charge, it will be possible to turn over the entire proceeds from the sale of tickets to the sufferers.

Considerable interest has already been shown in the concert and it is expected that a large audience will be present on Thursday evening. Tickets are on sale at the office of the Young Men's Christian Association and in the hands of the members of the boys' department.

Editorial Pen Points

Dr. Cook's life, for many weeks to come, will be one delirious round of dinners.

Let us rejoice in the fact that the end of summer in Southern California is still a long way off.

Hop-picking in Oregon isn't what it used to be before the prohibition tidal wave struck the country.

Things are going ahead all right. A French aviator has been arrested and fined for "reckless flying."

According to Cook the North Pole is no larger than a two-bit piece. No wonder it was so hard to find.

Los Angeles need not store up her smiles for Mr. Taft. Los Angeles has smiles for everybody all the time.

The North Pole appears to have taken the gas out of the balloons and the wind out of the aeroplanes.

A Chicago woman has declared that a happy marriage is well worth waiting for. Yes, but why wait for it?

An eastern paper speaks of "The Bryan Democrats in New York." It seems that the tribe is not yet extinct.

We think a man is an awful fool to kill himself for just one girl while there are so many other girls in the world.

Young man, don't be afraid to marry the girl who gets lonely for her mother. They are the best kind of girls.

Hailstorms are reported from Montana, showing that the winter is starting in on time in that part of the country.

Dr. Cook is welcome to all the newspaper space he may desire while it lasts. It will soon be needed for some one else.

We have every reason to believe that the Eskimos are a fine people even if they do eat whale blubber for breakfast.

Gov. Johnson's appendicitis record now exceeds his gubernatorial record. He has had his appendix removed four times.

We now look for some American to bob up, most any old day, with the announcement that he has discovered the South Pole.

It seems a little cruel that no newspaper reporter has thought it worth while to interview Walter Wellman at this particular juncture.

As we understand the situation, the size of women's hats is now to come down a little and the price is to go up a little, or maybe more.

Happily Mr. Harriman is rapidly recovering his health, but even had it been otherwise the country would have kept on going, just the same.

San Francisco is hurt because Mr. Taft will spend only one day in that city. San Francisco can't realize that it is no longer the whole thing.

When Dr. Cook lectures in Colorado and Montana, next winter, he will meet men there who will tell him that he never knew what real cold meant.

The Vanderbilts are getting out of the railroad business, entirely. There are other and more congenial channels in which they can use their steam.

We trust that the time will come when prosperity in this and other countries will settle down into a steady habit instead of side-stepping around in spasms.

Just to show how dearly Los Angeles is beloved, every other citizen of the town is willing to accept the office of Councilman-at-large from the hands of the voters.

One thing Los Angeles must do is to absolutely refuse space for what are known as "slums." There is plenty of room for everybody between the mountains and the sea.

One of the greatest bores of the present age is the fellow who believes himself to be in possession of "a fund of entertaining stories," which he loses no opportunity to unload.

Every morning that an American now opens his eyes from his night's slumbers it does him good to think of Old Glory snug and tight up there in a brass tube at the apex of the earth.

If Dr. Cook wept at the sight of a bouquet of flowers when he reached Skagen, what would he do if he were to come to Los Angeles any day in the year between New Year's and Christmas?

It is only about one husband out of ten who meets a woman's idea of what a husband ought to be, but every girl, old maid and some widows think they can pick the tenth fellow out of the bunch.

When a real American visits California he experiences a thrill. When he spends his time on a trip to Europe he gets very little more than an awful and persistent smell of garlic in his nose.

We are pleased to note that our esteemed and other contemporaries throughout the length and breadth of the land are adopting our custom of using his military title when speaking of Roosevelt. It is no more than proper, and, besides, he is a real colonel.

The first man of the Rothschild family to get rich declared that it is good policy to hire a man to attend to the details of business. One of his descendants has now kindly turned over his whole business to a chorus girl for whose sweet sake he blew out his brains with a pistol.

EQUALIZATION OF TAXES.

County Assessor Hopkins rendered the people of Los Angeles county a very important service in a very able way when he appeared last Tuesday morning before the State Board of Equalization, here for the purpose of looking into the percentage of value represented by the figures of the Assessor on real estate. Mr. Hopkins's remark was an entirely frank and proper one when he said that absolute equalization of taxes was a thing impossible.

Let us see what his figures show as to the assessment of real property in this county for a series of years. Not to go back too far, but taking the time of such very great development of values as has taken place here in the last six years, the Assessor showed that in 1903 the total assessment on Los Angeles county real estate amounted to $164,716,785. The next year the Assessor's figures showed an increase in round numbers of $30,000,000, the next year of an equal amount, the next year an increment of $72,000,000, the next of $76,000,000, last year of $24,000,000, and this year of $21,000,000. The assessed value of property in the county the present year is $420,002,550, an increase in seven years of over $225,000,000, or of $68,000,000 more than the total assessment of any other county in the State except San Francisco. These increases have gone on during the past two years in spite of the general depression ruling all over the world.

Going to San Francisco and beginning the same year as in Los Angeles, 1903, the assessed value of the property in that county that year was $545,866,445. The year following, instead of increasing by $30,000,000 as our assessment did, that of San Francisco decreased $43,000,000. Skipping over the year of the great disaster and the immediate following year of rebuilding, the assessment there for the present year is $492,865,197, $53,000,000 less than in 1903, as compared with our increase of $225,000,000 during that period. Here is a difference of valuations between the two counties for the seven years amounting to nearly $300,000,000.

The State Board of Equalization is relying upon figures prepared for it by some agents of its appointment who, posing as intent upon an honest purpose, were really prying secretly into the conditions in real estate in this county; in fact, in all the counties of Southern California. We were informed on Friday morning that in spite of the exposure made as to the utter incompetence of the agents of the State Board of Equalization, that board is still relying upon the figures of its agents. During the hearing in this city it was shown that the three agents appointed by the State Board of Equalization differed radically in their assessment of identical pieces of real estate. The members of the State board then attempted to get their agents together on a compromise. This was finally done, one of the agents (the one, by the way, making the lowest estimate,) stating that he had been forced into the compromise against his judgment. Now the figures furnished by these alleged experts upon one piece of property on the corner of Fifth and Main streets were $257,300 by one expert, $300,000 by another, and $150,000 by another. The Assessor's figures upon this same piece of property are $165,000. The Los Angeles Realty Board placed an estimate upon it of $167,500, and the property is on the market for sale, with no person buying it, at $162,000, $3000 less than the Assessor's figures, $5500 less than the estimate of the realty board, nearly $100,000 less than one of the State board's experts and nearly $150,000 less than another of these experts. Another piece of property on the market for sale is appraised by the Assessor at $239,000. One of the experts' figures are $348,000, and the property is for sale at $250,000, a very little more than the estimate of the County Assessor, although his figures are for the ground alone, and the price at which it is offered includes the buildings. Note the price at which the property is for sale is $118,000 less than that of one of the State board's experts.

Still, the State Board of Equalization threatens to raise the assessment of all property in the county of Los Angeles. The only recourse they have is in a horizontal raise which will affect every piece of property in the county. They contend that the counties of Southern California are in a conspiracy to cheat the State in this matter of taxation. Of course any robbery of that kind would be by assessing our property at a lower percentage of its real value than that of the other counties. Now take a single instance in the city of San Francisco, on behalf of whose property owners most of these allegations of robbery on the part of the southern counties are made, and see where we come out. The San Francisco Call has been pursuing one of its sensationally yellow campaigns in this matter of the inquiry of the State Board of Equalization. The building in which that paper is published, owned by the owner of the paper, a piece of San Francisco property, was assessed last year for $535,000, this year for $635,000. The estate of the late Claus Spreckels has been recently in the courts and the court appraisers placed their estimate upon the Call building. Is it higher or lower than the figures of the County Assessor of San Francisco, or is it anywhere near those figures? The court appraisers set the value of that property at $1,992,000, on a little over one-quarter of which amount the property is paying taxes.

It is difficult to tell just what procedure to take. If the State Board of Equalization, all but one of whom live north of the Tehachepi, are intent upon raising our assessment horizontally we suppose there is no way to stop them. But however it may be, any such increase of taxation on the property of Los Angeles county would appear to be a very gross injustice. The southern counties may have to submit to this injustice for the present, but if it be persisted in a day of reckoning will surely come. Such a course would do more than anything else possible to force a division of the State.

But we do not believe that there is any general sentiment prevailing in the North that approves such injustice. The substantial men there are fair and honorable. They will not indorse a course of petty meanness. Furthermore, there is too much common sense in that section to permit the approval of such a shortsighted policy. The ultimate reaction can be too plainly foreseen. The work is that of a clique of petty-minded men with the mistaken notion that they will win favor in their own community by taking advantage of what they think to be an opportunity to injure this part of the State.

Incidentally, these same men are gratuitously advertising their belief that Southern California is growing in wealth and importance much more rapidly than their own section of the State.

THE MAKING OF FREIGHT RATES.

The recent decision of Judge Peter Grosscup of the United States District Court in what is known as the "Missouri River case," that is, the injunction suit brought by the western trunk-line railroads against the Interstate Commerce Commission to restrain the commission from enforcing the Denver rates, has cleared the atmosphere for the Pacific Coast jobbers.

The case will undoubtedly be carried to the Supreme Court, and if Judge Grosscup's decision is sustained the Interstate Commerce Commission will not be a rate-making power, but simply a commission for the purpose of preventing discrimination in railroad rates.

The decision has, in a way, taken the wind out of the sails of the Los Angeles jobbers for the coming session of the commission, which is scheduled to take place here about September 22. That is to say, the argument which the Los Angeles jobbers were to make to the commission for a repeal of the Spokane ruling will not be made, because it will not be necessary.

If the commission cannot make and establish rates then the Spokane decision will not be maintained and the railroads will have the power to make rates.

The railroads have made the rates to the Pacific Coast and they are adjusted on certain combinations, and so long as those rates are maintained and every one gets the same rates as every one else, the commission has nothing to do.

The Missouri River case or the Denver-Missouri River case is a matter wherein the Interstate Commerce Commission, after a hearing of various shippers, decided to order through freight rates established between New York and Atlantic seaboard territory and Denver regardless of the combination of rates from the seaboard to Chicago and the Mississippi River, the Mississippi-Missouri River rates and the Missouri River-Denver rates. The through rates were to be lower than the combination of the local or basic rates, consequently the jobbers on the Missouri River, Mississippi River, Chicago and intermediate jobbing centers were cut out of the Denver business and the railroad's figures after years' standing were wiped off the board.

Judge Grosscup issued an injunction restraining the establishment of the through rates.

The Spokane ruling is a ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission whereby the freight rates from eastern points to Spokane shall be less than the rates from eastern points to the Pacific Coast plus the haul from the Coast back to Spokane.

On application of Pacific Coast jobbers this ruling was suspended until further hearings were had. In the meantime jobbers at Phoenix and Reno filed complaints with the commission, asking that the Spokane ruling be enacted and a hearing will be had this month with the Phoenix and Reno jobbers. The commission will hold a session in Los Angeles at the same time for a hearing on the Spokane ruling.

If the injunction is upheld the hearings will be useless. In the meantime the Los Angeles jobbers are lying low because the injunction has placed victory on the Spokane ruling in their laps.

THE Y. M. C. A., TOO.

That is a piece of good news which comes to us from Silver City, N. Y., on beautiful Lake George, through Cincinnati, to the effect that "Hogopolis" is disposed to give up the fight for next year's convention of the Y.M.C.A. and concede Los Angeles's right to that gathering.

It is good news for the delegates of this great organization all over the United States as well as for us. They will see more of the country and more interesting parts of the country by coming to Los Angeles than by going to any other city on the continent. The extra money involved in the round-trip ticket will be money excellently well spent. It will be many times repaid in the enlarged views these tourists will get in crossing the whole continent. They will come to the only part of the United States which has a past, which has a civilization that is dead and has beautiful ruins standing for it. Here, whatever date is set for this convention, there will be a certainty of delightful weather in which the delegates may attend to their business in comfort and enjoy the many points of interest to be visited. To the members of this organization who live in the center of the continent the trip will be particularly interesting. It will lead across the great backbone of the American continent with all its marvelous scenery. It will traverse the home of the old Aztec civilization and come to the land of the Padres of a century ago who carried the Christian religion to the heathen Indians. If they went to Boston or any other Atlantic seaport they would have an opportunity to enjoy marine scenery, but by coming to us they will see the great Pacific, the ocean of Balboa, and the ocean of the future as well as the ocean of the past. The Pacific is to be the highway of the greatest commerce the world has ever known. The trade is now in its infancy, but will grow with great rapidity in future years. The history of the century is to be made on the shores of the Pacific, and those who visit us during these opening years of the century will in the coming years have a better conception of events as they read of them in the paper from having acquired a personal knowledge of the localities.

It will be a good thing for us if we secure this convention of the Y.M.C.A. next year. If we get the bankers' convention, as we hope to do, we shall have the great financial powers of the country gathered here to study our resources and possibilities of development, and if the Y.M.C.A. convention is secured we shall have the representatives of that great democratic and moral organization from every part of the country coming to see for themselves this land of all delight, the land of the sunset, the land of perpetual flowers. On their return home they will report what they have seen and not what they have heard about, and will turn new minds to the Great Southwest as the land of opportunity for the future, the land of comfortable living for all time, where the years are more likely to be prolonged than elsewhere, and where all the years, long and short, may be passed in greater enjoyment.

The local Young Men's Christian Association is a large body of influential men. They will be liberally sustained by the whole community in anything they may ask for in the way of entertaining their brethren who shall come as delegates to the convention. Southern California liberality and hospitality are well known and are well worth enjoying.

We hope those at Silver City who are pulling for Los Angeles will pull strongly enough to make their efforts successful, and we can promise the members of the convention if they come surely "the time of their lives."

THE GRAMMAR-SCHOOL COURSE.

The public school teachers of California, some of whom were recently in session, are raising a very important question as to the course of study in the grammar schools. One of these educators, highly experienced and holding an important office in the State schools, sets forth that the six years between the ages of 8 and 14 assigned for the grammar-school course are entirely too short to complete the studies of the eight grades to graduate from the grammar schools. It is this teacher's experience that instead of six years to complete the course it would be impossible for many pupils to do it in eight years; that those who can do it in six are an exceedingly small percentage of the total attendance. The result of this crowding so much study into so short a space of time is to leave a large proportion of the pupils year by year behind in a grade they have already gone through, thus bringing them to the age of 14 before they have anywhere nearly reached the end of the eighth grade. Those who do squeeze the course into the short period are overtaxed mentally and physically, and but very few of them are proficient in even half the studies embraced in the course.

There is probably not a teacher, thoughtful and observant, who has had even a few years' experience in educational work who does not know how exactly true these statements all are. Pupils reach the age of 14 away behind in these studies, as a rule. The few who do complete the course with anything like satisfaction to themselves, their parents and teachers, are often broken down in health by the time they get through the grammar schools. Some of the most important branches of education, because the most fundamental ones, are not half conquered.

The trouble, according to the observation of those who have had experience enough to form an opinion worth while, has been for years that too much is undertaken in the grammar-school course. There are studies in the course which, if they were all gone through and the pupils were proficient in them, would be comparatively useless to nearly all of them in after life. Teachers are ambitious and they often spend more time upon these useless branches of education than upon the most fundamental ones.

The remedy would seem to reasonable people very easy of discovery. Cut out all these branches of study that are of only problematic value and devote all the time of the six years to a few fundamental, necessary, always useful branches of study. For ourselves, it is our opinion that the study of the English language should take precedence of all other studies. This study should embrace a pretty exact understanding of the words of the language, with the nice shadings of meaning of its many synonyms. Facility in speaking and writing should be the main object of the grammar-school education, and the use of the language should include not only an exact use of the words, but a harmonious, musical construction of sentences, especially in writing. Next to these should come the fundamental rules of arithmetic. All branches of mathematics reduce themselves finally to the mere business of counting. Multiplication is nothing but a short method of addition, and division is only a short method of subtraction. The simplest, most fundamental rules are the most important because the most useful, and out of them can be built the whole mathematical structure if it is necessary.

Added to these tools by which a livelihood may be made, we would add a carefully-arranged course in hygiene. Of course that would include a general knowledge of the anatomy of the body, but it should be very broad and general. The same amount of knowledge of physiology should be acquired, but hygiene should be the main object. The purpose of this would be to teach the pupils in the schools how to care for their own bodies and thus conserve their physical strength through life.

If these three branches of study were thoroughly acquired, it is our opinion that more would be done for the welfare of our young people than by acquisition of any number of other bra study usually packed into the grammar course. We would add one more with unq commendation. Every pupil in the lower gr the schools ought to be taught the art of simple melodies. If the public-school auth will undertake to turn out at the age of 14 an age boy and girl who know how to speak and the English language accurately and musical perform the fundamental processes in arith understand their own physical nature suffici guide them in caring for their health and them as nearly universally able to sing as the man people are, enough would be attempted f six years between the ages of 8 and 14.

Dr. Cook, who has been sojourning at the North Pole during the hot weather, is probably eagerly imagining the triumph that awaits him in his own country, which gains a slice of territory by his discovery.

No doubt, as he sits in his steamer chair, he can see carpets of rose petals, loving cups, cheering crowds and a world bent double with admiration.

He will get home to find his beloved fellow-citizens hotly arguing the rival theories that he never discovered the North Pole at all, but wrote his narrative in the cellar of an icehouse; that he just thinks he discovered the North Pole, mistaking some other stick for the long sought for.

One of the most gleeful recreations of the American people is pulling down heroes. And the same is true of a good many other countries.

Dr. Cook may not have discovered the pole—but they might at least have waited for him to land before getting narty about it.

There is a lively possibility that the glory of his achievement will be lost in a miserable mud duel between his friends and Peary's friends. It will be worse than the Sampson-Schely controversy.

One can only hope that when Dr. Cook reaches home he will silence his [illegible] friends.

Poor Peary.

I have an idea that Commander Peary will also "discover" the pole. Every one will be discovering it now.

Things go that way. Long no one could succeed in making an automobile that would work; then a dozen inventors solved the problem all at once.

The flying machines and the wireless machines, and the telephones all came the same way.

Now that one man has broken through to the North Pole, they will all find it to be suddenly easy. No doubt they will have a summer hotel up there, and will be roaring if the mail from the States is an hour late, and if cantaloupes are not served for breakfast.

Peary will probably discover it this summer. No doubt he is already on his way home, and pretty soon will come bursting into civilization shouting, "I've found the North Pole!"

Poor Peary!

He will find that he has arrived the day after the fair. He will get a pleasant mention in the personal columns.

Cook's achievement will go down as one of the great world dramas. There will be one sorrowful and tragic figure in it—and that will be Peary.

His fate is to have wasted a brave life of terrible suffering and almost impossible hardships.

The comparative ease with which Dr. Cook seems to have cantered up to the pole and back, is like mockery of Peary's sufferings.

Year after year, Peary starves and freezes, and endures living deaths a hundred times, and always comes back older, more worn, and more haggard, but empty-handed.

The Brooklyn doctor starts on a fishing trip—gets a notion to look up the pole; takes it in an easy hand gallop, and comes back with an airy account, saying that it's real lonesome up there; but there's fine bear hunting farther south.

Forgotten Heroes.

In some glorious Walhalla, filled with succulent whale bones and seal steaks, I hope that the two flat-faced Eskimos will get their reward. They will never get it in this world.

Miss Annie Peck, the woman explorer, hires two Swiss guides to climb up the highest mountain in South America and to pull her up after them with a rope. And she is hailed as the discoverer!

Dr. Cook persuades two heroic native boys to take him to the North Pole and they endure every hardship that he endures. It can't be said exactly that they will be forgotten. They will never be thought of at all.

Keeping Your Face Straight.

A recent magazine fad is to be vastly concerned about our national sense of humor.

But this is all unnecessary; for humor is not really the "saving sense."

If a sense of humor, in the truest meaning, had been a general gift there never would have been any great men.

If Napoleon had had enough humor to see war as George Bernard Shaw sees it in "Arms and the Man," he never could have fought a battle.

To be truly great, you have to be rather solemn and not too clever.

Some of the men best equipped to lead life's battle have, I imagine, been cursed by always seeing the sawdust in the doll at the crucial moments; and so have died unknown.

Everything is ridiculous in a certain sense. The problem is to shut one eye and only see the solemn side. Men of achievement are mentally one-eyed.

War is ridiculous; funerals are ridiculous; joy is ridiculous, and grief is sometimes utterly absurd. George Bernard Shaw, who disturbs our most cherished emotions, has shown us, to our alarm and discomfort, that patriotism and love and marriage are all a sardonic joke.

The man who leads armies; overthrows countries, releases slaves from thralldom, is the one who can't see the joke.

Mortal success lies in the art of keeping your face straight.

Do you think if Dr. Cook had been a man of humor he would now be coming home as discoverer of the north Pole?

Spanking a Jokester.

Some obscure and anonymous editorial writer in Boston has been severely paddled by Richard Harding Davis for making a joke about the recent militia maneuvers.

This editorial writer made a joke to the effect that the Boston public was a good deal more excited about the outcome of the baseball game than about the result of the attempt to capture Boston.

Mr. Davis says that men like this joker are enemies of the people and stand in the way of this country's military future. He says the man with the editorial pen attempted to show a sense of humor, and showed only a thick skull.

Whew! All for a poor little jok!

At the same time, Mr. Davis is right. These great autumn militia maneuvers are the forlorn military hope of an otherwise almost defenseless country.

One of the able tactical experts sent by the War Department to instruct the officers and men of the Seventh Regiment at Bay City this summer, was asked if the National Guard would actually become our "second line of defense" in time of war, and he replied bitterly: "No, because we have no first line. Our regular army is only a joke."

Mr. Winter's Seriousness.

The old New York Tribune has been harpooned in nearly every daily paper, and now the weeklies are starting in to pound the battered carcass—all on account of the resignation of William Winter, the veteran dramatic critic.

Mr. Winter is a distinguished old man, and his name will always be honored in the history of the American stage.

To attempt to criticise the critics of William Winter calls for considerable impudence.

At the same time it seems to me he took the stage and its productions from an entirely too deadly-earnest a standpoint.

What does it matter anyhow?

You go to one play and it's tough and tiresome, and you try another and that one is moral and dull. And what's the difference, anyhow? If you find it too dull, you can stay at home and be dull all by yourself. They are only plays, you know—an evening's amusement.

Mr. Winter seemed to take the theater almost as a matter of life and death. He railed and scolded the stage and every one on it or in it.

Some of his brilliant, classical attacks used to impress me about as it would to see a battleship firing ten-inch guns at bluebottle flies.

Everything he said about them may have been true; but it wasn't important. The only thing important about going to a theater is whether your wife has to wear an old hat or has a new one.

SOLDIERS' HOME CHARGES FALL.

GRAND ARMY COMMITTEE MAKES REPORT.

Recent Newspaper Statements About Mismanagement of Institution and Ill Treatment of Veterans Are Not Sustained by Findings of Body Which Investigated.

The recent newspaper charges of mismanagement and ill treatment of veterans at the Soldiers' Home are not sustained, according to the report of the G.A.R. committee which has investigated.

The committee was appointed by Department Commander Daubenspeck upon the first publication of the charges. The report of this committee is signed by O. H. Coulter, chairman; J. S. Wilson, secretary; R. Heffelfinger, E. E. Clough and E. W. Clark. The report is addressed to the Department Commander.

The Commander-in-Chief of the G. A.R., the report recites, visited the Soldiers' Home April 27, in company with other officers of the G.A.R. He told the members of the Home that if they had any complaints to make to reduce them to writing and file them with the department committee. He explained that these would be investigated by that committee and reported on through the Department Commander to the Commander-in-Chief. He assured the veterans that if any wrongs were being perpetrated upon the members of the Home he would use the entire prestige and strength of the national organization to right the wrongs.

"There has not been a complaint filed with this committee up to date," (August 4) the report says. "However, on account of the many harsh and cruel statements relative to the management of the Home and the treatment of its members, published in the Los Angeles Herald and given out to the Associated Press, and further fomented by verbal stories circulated by two or three comrades and Rosecrans Camp of the Sons of Veterans in Los Angeles, and three or four comrades of the Home, we have made as thorough an investigation as possible up to this time, and we are still at work in an effort to verify or produce tangible evidence to refute these statements."

It is further stated in the report that a meeting of the full committee was held at the office of Commander Daubenspeck July 14. The report says: "Maj. Walker of Los Angeles, who is not a member of the Grand Army, but who has been especially busy seeking out and exposing alleged wrongs at the Home, also Past Commander Case of Stanton Post, who had reported that he had a number of statements and affidavits to submit to the committee, were notified to meet the committee. Walker did not show up nor submit any evidence. Comrade Case was present, but had no written statements or affidavits, nor even any names to submit."

The committee adjourned to meet at Sawtelle July 20, and issued a notice to the commanders of the posts at the Soldiers' Home to have present all comrades who had complaints to offer. There were only three comrades who presented themselves before the committee. Two had personal grievances more prominent than complaints against the affairs of the Home. The third stated that he had been a member of the Home fifteen years, had always had plenty to eat there, and had no complaints to make.

Timothy Sullivan, commander of John A. Martin Post, sent word to the committee that he could not be present, but was handed to the committee a written statement that neither he nor any member of his post has any complaints to make.

"Commander Enderlin of Uncle Sam Post," the report says, "made a great many statements in reference to the affairs of the Home. His most positive statements pertained to conditions existing several years ago rather than to the present. His answers to many of the questions of the committee evaded the issue, making his testimony of little real value.

"Referring to the charge made in the Los Angeles Herald that eight new restaurants had been opened in Sawtelle (because of alleged lack of food at the Home) the committee summoned M. T. Young, the Marshal of Sawtelle. He stated that instead of new restaurants being established two had closed in the last two months and three lunch counters had gone out of business and no new ones had come in."

In stating its conclusions the committee says:

"The committee finds that the only shortage in the food supply in the last three months occurred during two weeks just before the close of the fiscal year when the meat supply of thirteen ounces, the usual meat ration, was reduced to eleven ounces. The other rations were up to the standard adopted for the use of all the national homes.

"The report that 'the old boys could not wear the Grand Army buttons on their coats' is entirely without foundation. No such restricting order has ever been issued.

"The Associated Press statement that the Woman's Relief Corps of Los Angeles had solicited food is false and malicious in every particular.

"Your committee finds that the resolution passed by Rosecrans Camp, Sons of Veterans, in reference to Memorial Day arrangements at the Home is false in every particular and without any foundation whatever, except the malicious statement made by one comrade of the Home."

Upon their return from Santa Barbara, where the young people are supposed to be spending their honeymoon, they will live at No. 4523 Budlong avenue, in a pretty bungalow which is the gift of the groom to his wife.

Age Made no Difference.

The lady had carefully inspected the bathroom, bedrooms, electric bells, and all the other conveniences of the new flat she thought of renting, and appeared satisfied.

"Have you any children?" asked the porter.

"I have," she replied.

"Then you cannot have the flat," said the man in uniform, and in a decided manner.

"But you do not understand," said the lady. "My youngest child is five-and-twenty years old, married, and lives in Australia and the other two are in France!"

"That makes no difference," said the porter. "I have orders not to let this flat to any one with children, and I won't."—[Spokane Spokesman-Review.

If You're Just Back From Your Vacation, Telephone Us For Pure Full Weight Ice, Superior Service

You ought to have this Measuring Rule and Table of Weights. Every Ice Consumer should have them.

We'll send them to you Free—whether you are one of our customers or not.

To guarantee full-weight ice is one thing. To place in the hands of ice consumers an easy method of testing that guarantee is quite another.

Yet this is exactly what we do. If you take ice from one of the "Orange Wagons," we supply you with the means of quickly determining the exact weight of the ice delivered.

Few families have scales suitable for weighing ice. Few people want the work and trouble of weighing the slippery, heavy mass, anyway. We realized this, so we devised a Table of Ice Weights by means of which you can ascertain the exact weight of ice delivered merely by MEASURING IT.

This new system works out most satisfactorily, both to us and to those whom we supply with ice.

We give our customers the Free Measuring Rules, together with the Table of Weights referred to. Just measure your ice with the Rule and figure its weight by the Table. The process is simple, easy, exact.

Another feature of our service that appeals to our customers is the courtesy of our employees. Our Drivers show a consideration for your requirements, that makes ice service from the "Orange Wagons" quite different from the old-time variety.

When you take ice of us, you get pure ice, full-weight ice—and the courteous service to which you are entitled.

The Free Rule and Weight Table are yours for the asking, remember, whether you are one of our customers or not.

Supply yourself, for your own protection. And let us serve you with ice, too.

PUBLIC SERVICE—OFFICIAL DOINGS.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY.

The petition for the annexation of the west side territory has been found sufficient and the election will probably be ordered for the middle of October.

Judge Wilbur sent a communication to the Supervisors yesterday recommending the purchase of the Wills property, on Buena Vista street, as a site for the proposed new Detention Home.

Action was brought in the Superior Court to dispossess Julia F. and Miles A. Long of certain property on Temple and Buena Vista streets, alleged to have been wrongfully secured by deed from the late William A. Riley.

Lionel R. Hare was discharged from custody yesterday by Judge Hervey, on taking the debtor's oath in open court. Mulcted investors in Hare's Alaska mining deal secure $20,000 of their $74,000 investment.

T. J. Spencer, plaintiff in the two cases involving the legality of the proposed school bond issue, gave notice of his intention to move for a new trial in these actions.

Mrs. W. J. Danford yesterday accused her husband, a disbarred attorney, and two of his friends, of beating up her detective, retained to get evidence for use in divorce proceedings.

A warrant was issued yesterday for the arrest of Will C. Prather, a real estate operator and builder, on a charge of having obtained goods under false pretenses.

AT THE CITY HALL.

SIXTH ELECTION IN ONE YEAR.

TO VOTE ON ANNEXATION IN MIDDLE OF OCTOBER.

Petition Filed by Those Advocating Addition of Ten Square Miles West of City Is Found Sufficient and the Council Will Act on It Tuesday. Many Voters Added.

An election to vote on the annexation of ten square miles of territory west of the city, containing 10,000 people and 1500 voters, and bringing taxable property worth $12,000,000 to the city, will be held about the middle of October.

This territory extends from the Santa Monica branch of the Southern Pacific Railroad to the limits of Hollywood, and is from one to two miles in width. It is well built up, and is in all senses a part of the city, except in government.

That the election will be held about October 15 was made certain yesterday, when the City Clerk informed Deputy City Attorney Wilson that the checking of the petitions indicated that the required 6258 signatures would be found on the Great Register, and make the calling of the election mandatory on the Council. The petitions have been filed in three batches, and the Clerk's force has been comparing the signatures with the register all week. The petitions contain 8551 names, but the count will be stopped when 6300 have been verified, and this will undoubtedly be Monday.

Wilson went ahead preparing the ordinance describing the territory to be annexed, so that the Council may pass it Tuesday, and fix the date of the election. Because there must be four weeks' publication of the notice of the election a date earlier than the middle of October is not likely.

Consolidated precincts will be used, and this will give eighty precincts altogether. There will be sixty-nine in the city, six in the new territory, which must also vote on the question, and five in San Pedro and Wilmington. City Hall officials are interested in knowing how large a majority the recently annexed harbor regions will extend to their neighbors to the west of Greater Los Angeles.

The annexation election will be the sixth in this city since January 1. The first was the school bonds election. Then came the charter amendments, and next the recall election. The last two were the Wilmington and San Pedro consolidations last month. And the annexation election will not be the last in the course of the year, for the nominating primary election will be held in November, and the regular municipal election in December. Then, too, there is the probability that the double election for aqueduct power and harbor bonds will be held before the year is out. If they should all be held, the voters of Los Angeles will have broken all records for American municipalities in one year—nine elections.

It is estimated that the cost for elections for the year will exceed $75,000, the largest expense being the primary and regular elections in November and December. Consolidating precincts and reducing the number of election officers have been economy in the others.

There is a political phase to the annexation. If it carries, 1500 voters will be added to the Great Register, and they will participate, along with the harbor region's 1200 voters, in the primary nominating election. Just how the politicians will view the scheme has not been disclosed, but all that have been heard from so far seem to favor it.

Want Safety Laws.

Highland Park or that region of it through which runs Marmion way wants the Santa Fé Railroad subjected to discipline. By a petition filed with the Council yesterday, an ordinance limiting the speed of the Santa Fé trains that run along Marmion way to ten miles an hour is asked, because the trains far exceed that speed now, and menace, in the view of the petitioners, human life. They would also have the railroad required to place safety gates at the Pasadena avenue and Avenue 50 crossings and an alarm bell at the crossing at Avenue 60. They say travel at those points is so heavy that the precautions against accident are necessary.

Ask Some Attention.

Residents of the Burck tract, bounded by Slauson, Florence, Moneta and Vermont streets have been in the city three years, and allege in a petition to the Board of Public Works, filed yesterday, that they have had nothing done to their streets in all that time. They ask that attention be given to them as some return for the taxes paid. The board has asked Inspector Humphreys to investigate the petition and learn whether the people want Vrooman Act improvements or repairs by the street department.

Furniture Gone?

An inventory of the furniture at the City Hall, in San Pedro, was filed with the Board of Public Works, likewise an inventory of Wilmington, which showed no furniture. This was challenged by Gen. Chaffee of the board, who said when the board took charge, a week ago, he counted 128 chairs, some typewriters, and other furniture. At his suggestion Inspector Humphreys was directed to investigate what has become of the Wilmington furniture.

Water Company License.

The Los Angeles license ordinance is proving something of a revelation to public service corporations of San Pedro, and particularly to the Seaside Water Company. The ordinance requires water companies to pay a license fee of $150 monthly, and Tax Collector Johnson is preparing to demand this fee for the present month. It is understood that the company is discussing appealing to the Council to amend the ordinance and reduce the fee. Other corporations affected are the gas and electric companies, which must pay $100, and the telephone companies, which must pay $50.

AT THE COURTHOUSE.

BRING SUIT TO BAR LONGS OUT.

HEIRS SEEK TO HAVE DEEDS DECLARED VOID.

Valuable City Real Estate Left by Late William A. Riley Is in Litigation—Temporary Restraining Order Issued Enjoining Defendants from Disposing of Holdings.

The initial steps to dispossess Julia F. Long and her husband, Miles A. Long, of property alleged to have been illegally secured from William A. Riley were taken in the Superior Court yesterday.

The action was brought by the heirs of Riley, against the Longs, asking that the deeds conveying the property at No. 418 Temple street, and on Buena Vista street, near Ord, be declared void. A temporary order restraining the Longs from disposing of the property in question was issued by Judge Bordwell, returnable on the 20th inst., in Department Five before Judge Conrey.

The contest of the will of William Riley, instituted by the surviving devisees and legatees of William Riley, will be heard in Judge Rives's court, Tuesday. The suit for the recovery of the Temple-street property is brought against Julia A. Long, and her husband, Miles A. Long, is joined in the action, which for the Buena Vista tract the defendant is given as Miles A. Long.

The petition alleges that William Riley died, February 23, last, intestate, leaving a number of heirs. It is further said that at the time of his demise Riley was possessed of lots Nos. 7, 14 and 15, block B, of the Mott tract (located on Temple street,) and also of lot No. 2, block 34, of Ord's survey (which is the Buena Vista-street property.) It is further declared that November 16, 1907, Riley was prostrated by two paralytic strokes, and confined to his house, under the care of Julia F. Long and Miles A. Long, the defendants in the case.

It is alleged in the petition that the Longs, with intent to defraud William A. Riley, and taking advantage of his weak and sick condition and their confidential relations with him, secured the deed to the real estate in dispute, November 19, 1907, or three days after he was stricken with paralysis. It is further alleged that the deeds had been made out in favor of the Longs since 1902 and that they compelled Riley to take them out of his strong box, and surrender them.

The petition further alleges that the deeds were never delivered to the defendants by the consent of Riley; that they were never intended to be operative, and that Riley did not voluntarily surrender the control of his property.

The two pieces involved in the complaints filed in the Superior Court yesterday, are estimated to be worth not less than $75,000.

NEW TRIAL MOVED

IN SCHOOL BOND CASES.

Notice of intention to move for a new trial in the cases of T. J. Spencer against the Los Angeles city school district and the Board of County Supervisors, involving the legality of the school bond election, has been filed with the County Clerk.

It states that the motion will be made to vacate and set aside the decree of Judge Bledsoe, issued some time ago, and grant a new trial on the following grounds:

First—Irregularity in the proceedings of the court, by which the plaintiff was prevented from having a fair trial.

Second—Abuse of discretion of the court in refusing to allow the plaintiff to amend his complaint, by which said plaintiff was prevented from having a fair trial.

Third—That the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision of the court.

Fourth—That the decision of the court was against the law.

Fifth—Errors in the proceedings occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the plaintiff.

HARE GOES FREE.

TAKES DEBTOR'S OATH.

Lionel R. Hare, the Alaska promoter who confessed judgment to the amount of about $74,000 by reason of a fraudulent deal involving a mining proposition on a river of an unpronounceable name in that country, was ordered released from custody by Judge Hervey yesterday.

His faithful wife, who has stood by him through all his trouble, warmly embraced and kissed him as the court pronounced the fateful words that made him a free man for the first time since the middle of June.

The investigation of Hare's affairs on Friday convinced the San Francisco attorneys who were here trying to find out what he did with the $115,000 he secured for stock in the Alaska mine, that nothing further was to be gained, for after an exhaustive and searching examination, they were unable to find anything but about $7000 worth of holdings, which Hare cheerfully turned over for the benefit of his creditors.

Pending that hearing, Hare offered to turn over to the attorneys two lots in Marin county, a mortgage for $900, and a note for $2900, secured by property in San Francisco, but the offer was rejected. It was supposed that something of more value could be procured.

But after a day spent mostly in hearing about the around-the-world trip of Hare and his wife in 1907-8, in which he managed to spend the bulk of $29,000, entertaining a number of prospective heirs to dukedoms in Europe, it was concluded that the best thing to do was to accept everything in sight, seeing that there did not seem to be very much within the visual range.

So both sides came into court yesterday prepared to settle the matter. The San Francisco attorneys of a number of the creditors agreed to take in addition to what was tendered Friday the other property described. It was also agreed that Hare shall be credited with $20,000 on the indebtedness by reason of the holdings given to his creditors, the balance of the $74,000 to stand as a civil judgment against him. It was stated in court that the home of the Hares at The Palms, worth $6000, has been homesteaded by the wife, and it could not be touched for the debts of her husband.

But Hare was not allowed to go free until he had stood up and repeated after the court the following oath: "I do solemnly swear that I have not any estate, real or personal, to the amount of $50, except such as is by law exempt from being taken in execution; and that I have not any other estate now conveyed or concealed, or in any way disposed of, with design to secure the same to my use, or to hinder, delay, or defraud my creditors, so help me God."

Hare followed Judge Hervey eagerly through the lines, and seemed beside himself with joy when the court said: "An order will be entered discharging you immediately from custody." His face fairly glowed with enthusiasm.

HONORS FOR BORDWELL.

IS CALLED TO PRESIDE.

The departure yesterday of Judge Wilbur, presiding judge of the Superior Court, on a six weeks' vacation in the East, made it necessary to name a successor to act during his absence. By the unanimous vote of his colleagues on the local bench the honor was accorded to Judge Bordwell of Department Nine. He will serve until the week of October 8, when he will have to take up the celebrated tidelands suit, involving the ownership of property at Wilmington and San Pedro. It will then be impossible for him to act as presiding judge.

During the absence of Judge Wilbur, Judge Willis will have the determination of the juvenile court cases, and this will be enough to keep him busy, to say nothing of his criminal calendar in Department Eleven.

Judge Wilbur went East, but his exact destination is not known. He left word with his clerk to have his mail sent to Washington, D. C., for the next ten days. It is understood that Judge Wilbur will visit a number of cities for the purpose of gathering data having to do with the management of juvenile courts. This is a department, the work of which is increasing very fast in Los Angeles county, and it need occasion no surprise if a movement is not soon started looking to the creation of a separate department of the Superior Court having charge of these cases.

PRODS M'CARTNEY.

ATTORNEY WAXES SARCASTIC.

On account of the pending return to court of the Broadhead jury, the appeal cases brought by offenders found guilty by Justice Chambers of violating the pure-food law, that promised to make an extended hearing, were postponed by Judge Davis until next Friday morning.

The foundation for the attack on the law is its alleged unconstitutionality. The statement was made in open court by the attorney for the defendants that there are fifteen hundred people interested, who are making no pretense in this city of obeying the law. He charged the law with being the pet measure of Senator McCartney, who, as deputy district attorney, has charge of the prosecution of the cases, and some words were used in a hot line of conversation between the two.

E. Junior Bennet, who had been robbed by George Thompson, the actor-burglar, was yesterday given a lot of jewelry Thompson had taken from his apartments, held as evidence against the accused. Two other charges of burglary against Thompson will likely be taken off the calendar, as he is now in San Quentin undergoing a five-year sentence.

The case of Albert Ryan, charged with the killing of Otto Miller and Harry Snyder, at the United States Hotel, July 16, was continued until December 6, by reason of the crowded condition of the calendar.

Thomas Galvin, charged with stealing $12, the property of José Castro, pleaded not guilty, and his case was postponed until Tuesday, to be set for trial.

Harry Gensenleiter, who pleaded guilty to stealing 100 cowhides from an old lady at Newhall, made an application for probation. His case will be disposed of next Saturday.

R. J. Hensley was sentenced to eighteen months in Folsom, for forging a check for $7.50, on the First National Bank, which he succeeded in passing upon S. Kinderman, a clothier of East First street. Hensley said his trouble was due to whisky, and the court reminded him that he will have plenty of time to cut out the liquor when he goes to the penitentiary.

JUVENILE HOME IDEA.

RECOMMENDATION IS MADE.

Judge Wilbur transmitted to the Board of Supervisors yesterday the recommendations of the Probation Committee, of which he is a member, in regard to the location of the proposed new Detention Home.

It has been decided unanimously to favor the Wills property, which has a frontage of 432 feet on Buena Vista street, 296 on Broadway, and 202 feet on Fort Moore Place. The price of this property has been put at $60,000, but the statement is made that it can be had for $50,000, one-half payable this year the other half the next year, with 6 per cent. interest on deferred payments. To build a proper Detention Home on the property would require $30,000, in the opinion of Judge Wilbur, and the structure could be planned so as to add additional rooms if necessary.

He thinks there should be three buildings, one for the Detention Home proper, not only for the care of children under 16 years of age, but all children under the jurisdiction of the Juvenile Court; the other two buildings, one for the boys and one for the girls, to be used for children who have demonstrated their trustworthiness to be allowed to go out and work, to the end that the cost of maintenance could be furnished by that means.

The judge does not think it should be planned to use the present building as the Detention Home proper, but it could be utilized as an office for the probation officers and a courtroom for the Juvenile Court. It is his purpose to hold sessions of that court there if it is purchased by the county, making the suggestion that in his view it will be but a few years until there will be separate juvenile courts in all of the large cities of California, and also throughout the Union. The rooms in this building not occupied for the purpose indicated can be used by boys and girls who are working and have no good place to room and board.

In closing his communication to the Supervisors, Judge Wilbur says:

"The other sites suggested, while large enough, are decidedly unattractive. The one most available on Yale and College streets, being 535 by 165 feet in size, while probably amply large, is, as compared with the property above mentioned (which lies within a block of the Courthouse) comparatively undesirable.

"I would suggest to your honorable body that in the event you feel disposed to purchase this site, you enter into negotiations with Attorney John D. Polk, representing Miss Wills, and with Dr. LeMoyne Wills.

"I have not said much in this communication as to the necessity for a Detention Home, and the expenditure of a reasonable amount of money therefor, for I thoroughly understand that your honorable body is well aware of the importance of at once procuring a Detention Home here, and that you have taken active steps so to do." The law with reference to the matter is quoted.

PRICE OF REALTY.

DETERMINED BY JUDGE.

Judge Bordwell yesterday rendered a decision in the case brought by the city of Los Angeles against the Kerckhoff-Cuzner Mill and Lumber Company and others to condemn property for the extension of Augusta street from its westerly end through to Chavez street.

A part of the strip sought to be condemned was, on September 11, 1908, owned by the first-named defendants, and the remainder of the strip was owned by the defendants, Griffith Brothers Company, and then subject to a lease to the defendants, R. H. Herron Company.

To the report of the referees awarding damages an exception was filed averring that the award to the defendants, Griffith Brothers Company, and R. H. Herron Company, was in each case excessive. The defendants filed exceptions on the ground that the award was too low.

The evidence showed that the most advantageous use of the property in question is for manufacturing purposes. The court found that when a part of a tract is taken by a municipality for public use, the problem as to the amount to be awarded the owner for the damage he will suffer, may be solved under competent evidence by the consideration of three factors:

First—The market value of the whole tract.

Second—The market value of the tract sought to be taken.

Third—The market value of the remainder, irrespective of any benefit that may accrue by reason of the public improvement.

Applying these rules, the court finds that the value of the strip to be taken is $5000, and the damage to the part lying north of the strip is $2000. No damage will accrue to that part of the tract lying south of the strip. The evidence directed to the values of the property, as of the date of the cause of the action, shows that the two portions of the tract remaining could be separately sold for sums, the aggregate of which added to the amount herein allowed as damages, would equal the value of the entire tract.

Judge Bordwell, speaking of the decision, said: "There are a great many people who inflate the values of their properties when they are sought for some public improvement, not recognizing the fact that their neighbors owning contiguous property within the assessment district have to pay the bill."

ORPHAN REMEMBERED.

TAKES BENEFACTOR'S NAME.

A few days ago the petition of Felix Sevenans, asking to have his name changed to Felix Sevenans Kempton, was granted in Judge Wilbur's court. No one seemed to know just why the change was asked for, but the matter went through in due course.

The answer appeared in the probate department of the Superior Court yesterday, when A. F. Merrill filed a petition for the probate of the will of Aurilla Kempston of Pasadena, who died in Seattle August 30. It is alleged that the estate is worth $13,000, consisting of realty in Los Angeles, mining stocks and shares in the New York and New Haven Railroad, and the Wamsutta muslin mills at New Bedford, Mass.

The will accompanying the petition bequeathes $500 each to Lizzie G. Howard, Fair Haven, Mass.; Agnes H. Howland, New Bedford; Minerva W. Platt, Texas; Susan A. F. Dunham, Attleboro, Mass.; Lucy B. Chase, Tucson; Lamire M. Wilson, Havilah, Cal.; Ross Wilson and Mary E. Shepherd, Monrovia. An additional sum of $2000 was left to a sister, Ella V. Smith, Lincoln Park, South Pasadena.

The sum total of these items is $6000, and the balance of the estate, real and personal, is given to "Felix Sev-

FREE BOOK ABOUT TEETH

We can only outline the story of the Rex Dental Co.'s Alveolar Method in these short talks.

In any event, no one should give up until we have had a chance to pass on the case, for many cases that the average dentist would pronounce hopeless are curable through our methods.

THE OIL INDUSTRY.

EL CERRITO GOING DEEP.

Wildcat Down Nearly Four Thousand Feet.

Hundred and Sixty Feet of Sand Reported.

Coalinga-to-McKittrick District Active.

Oil men are watching with interest the wild-cat operations at Devil's Den, where considerable excitement exists. A number of strings are running, and some fair showings have been made, according to Allen McL. Bennett, a Coalinga operator, who is in the city for a few days.

The Devil's Den Consolidated struck a gas pocket August 30, but there is no indication of a flowing well, and it is probably a blowout. A hole was drilled near this well, some three-quarters of a mile away, several years ago. It went to 1200 feet, and while some oil was baled, none was found in sufficient quantities to justify pumping, and the hole was abandoned.

The Pluto is drilling east of the formation, and is down 640 feet with its second hole. The first was abandoned after several hundred feet had been drilled, on account of the hole being crooked. In the second it has passed through the tar sand, and expects to finish at about 1600 feet.

El Cerrito, formerly the Andrews Oil Company, is down between 3900 and 4000 feet, with 160 feet of sand. It made several good showings prior to that depth, but continued for lighter oil. It has not been determined just what it has secured; the well has been cemented, and will be cleaned and tubed.

Between the Pluto and El Cerrito Mr. Bennett owns 640 acres. He has ordered lumber for four derricks, and will build this month. One will be rigged immediately; the others as developments show favorable indications. Mr. Bennett will first drill a water well, as the water supply is limited, and that secured very hard on the boilers. He says drilling is difficult on account of the heavy expense in hauling fuel oil. The original cost of 70 cents per barrel is increased to $2.70 by the time it is delivered. The building of the independent pipe line is expected to reduce materially this cost.

North, on the Kreyenhagen property, operated by Smith and Brysen, one string is running. The old Black Mountain well has been cleaned, and is pumping oil for fuel. The well drilling is down about 700 feet. Several light surface sands have been encountered, but nothing of importance.

A great many portable rigs are putting down holes; the Marathon, Mt. Vernon, Cosmos and Treseritos are down approximately 400 feet. Work is slow; these have gone through the tar sand, but are going deeper.

In Jacalitos Cañon there is considerable activity. The Azores is down 1700 feet, with a good showing. The Hub has a 600-foot hole, and the Alpha, drilling for two months, is down 400 feet. The People's Associated has a hole approximately 2000 feet deep. The Esperanza Land and Oil Company has put down 1500 feet of ten-inch casing. It is reported that the Gold Crest has reached the sand it has been seeking around 1900 feet.

Many derrick sites have been picked and material is on the ground; some are up waiting favorable news from the holes drilling. If any good wells are brought in it will mean a big stampede and much activity.

OKLAHOMA CONDITIONS.

POSITION OF THE STANDARD.

BY A. T. ROBERTSON.

So much of error as to Oklahoma oil conditions has appeared in Washington dispatches, that perhaps a correct statement from one familiar with facts, and who is now and has been for years resident in the oil country and employed in its development, may not be out of place.

It is stated that the government objects to the reduction in price from 41 to 35 cents a barrel. The government at Washington has no more to do with fixing the price of crude petroleum in Oklahoma than the Governor of California has to do with fixing the price of crude oil in this State. The Interior Department is the lawful guardian of all Indians, minors and adults, of more than half blood, and no lease can be secured on the lands of three-quarter or full-blood Indians without the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, who has fixed the royalty at one-eighth, or 12½ per cent. The leases stipulated that the royalty is to be collected by the Indian agent on the basis of the "market price." For three years the Prairie Oil & Gas Company (Standard) has paid 41 cents per barrel, while the Texas and the Gulf Pipe Line companies, operating independent pipe lines from Oklahoma to Beaumont, and other independent purchasers, paid any price from 28 to 35 cents.

The Interior Department insisted upon payment of Indian royalties on the 41-cent basis, and this was paid by the producer, not by the pipe line companies. This was the price paid for 30 per cent. of the production.

The statement that the three pipeline companies are in collusion is very far afield. The two lines to the Gulf go through Texas and there has been no more aggressive, no more relentless foe of Standard Oil than that State. Frequent investigations, both by the State and national governments, up to this time, have not adduced one single fact tending to show any connection whatever between the Standard and the other companies, either in the form of stock ownership or a working agreement.

The Gulf Pipe Line Company is owned by the Mellon interests of Pittsburgh, ancient foes of the Standard, and the Texas Company by John W. Gates and associates, and both pipe lines were laid under permits issued by James R. Garfield and approved by Theodore Roosevelt, who surely cannot be accused of any friendly feeling toward Standard Oil or any of its works. In fact, it has been frequently and freely asserted in the oil country that the Gulf and Texas companies, through powerful influence at Washington, were largely responsible for the opposition to the Standard.

The Interior Department on December 27, 1906, issued pipe-line regulations so drastic that the Prairie Oil and Gas Company (Standard) has laid only twenty-eight miles since that time. It was provided that pipe lines must be common carriers, that they should not own production and a violation of these regulations subjected the pipe lines to confiscation on ten days' notice by the Secretary of the Interior without appeal to the courts. These regulations were aimed at the Standard and remained in force until a month ago when they were revised by Secretary Ballinger at the request of the producers. In the meantime Statehood has come to Oklahoma and the government's jurisdiction over Indian lands has been largely curtailed and vested in the State. The last Legislature passed a law fully as objectionable and confiscatory as the governmental regulations of 1906, at the instigation of a few politicians over the protests of the oil producers. This law prevents foreign corporations laying pipe lines across the highways of Oklahoma.

Recently the Prairie Oil and Gas Company, in view of the fact that the State prohibited further pipe-line construction, at least on its part, reduced the price from 41 to 35 cents, the amount paid openly by its competitors.

Oklahoma's troubles are not due to any collusion or agreement on the part of the pipe lines but to legislation and regulations attempting to abridge or negative the law of supply and demand.

There is in storage in Oklahoma more than 50,000,000 barrels in excess of the maximum daily capacity of all the pipe lines and railroad facilities. Had the pipe lines been permitted to go ahead and provide necessary facilities, had the same conditions prevailed as in California, had pipe lines been permitted to go unhampered, Oklahoma oil would be bringing more than $1 a barrel and $100,000,000 would have been added to the taxable wealth of the State.

Operations at Coalinga.

The Silver Tip is in the sand, around 2300, and all indications point to a big well. The Blue Moon expects to bring in a well on 6-21-15, in what is known as Lucile territory, this month. Southeast of Coalinga, the Blair started drilling two weeks ago, after a year's shut-down. The Southeast Limited, on the Wilcox properties is down 120 feet, with a rotary in an open hole.

FIRST BANK AT PARKER.

Angelenos Interested in Financial Institution for Fertile and Promising Section.

The "Parker Bank and Trust Company" is the name of the first financial institution to be established in the mining town of Parker, on the Colorado River. Its capital is $100,000 and the incorporators are: M. H. Holliday, president of the Merchants' National Bank of Los Angeles; Marco W. Hellman, vice-president; Carl F. Schader, a well-known mine and real estate operator of Parker; G. C. Dunne, formerly of the Eldorado National Bank, Eldorado, Kan., and B. F. Vaughn, a real estate operator of Needles.

This bank will operate in the agricultural valley known as the Parker Indian reservation, a tract of 280,000 acres to be shortly opened to settlement.

The Parker townsite of 900 acres will be opened within the next sixty days. To the present time the only title has been a lease from the Indian agent, but many substantial buildings have been erected, including two general mercantile houses with stocks ranging from $50,000 to $100,000.

Within six months the government will, it is thought, open the first 40,000 acres of the reservation and install a pumping plant four miles above Parker, at what is known as Headgate Point. As soon as the Laguna dam project, above Yuma, and the Roosevelt dam, in the Tonto Basin, are completed, sufficient machinery will be on hand and an appropriation of $150,000 is expected to install the Parker plant.

The Indians will be allotted five or ten-acre tracts, aggregating about 2000 acres. The remainder of the valley will be subdivided into forty-acre farms by the Reclamation Service and opened to settlers.

Parker, in addition to being in the heart of a fine agricultural region, is destined to become a big mining center for the Colorado River section.

TORPEDOES.

ragut were "at quarters."

Up on the bridge, the young commander seized the handle of an indicator and swung it across a dial that stood like a clock, only with "Stop," "Full speed ahead," etc., instead of the hours.

The old Farragut jumped through the water like a yellowtail. You feel the swish of the sea along the steel sides and see the boiling wake churning out behind.

Back in the stern, they were getting a torpedo ready for business.

It lay across a little four-wheeled cart, smeared and greased like some savage old warrior, ready for battle.

They fastened a tackle under its middle; hoisted it to the level of the gaping torpedo tube, and heaved it in.

The tube, which looks like a big stove pipe, swung slowly and gently around until it lay at right angles to the ship.

A young man in overalls, the gun pointer, took a long, anxious squint through the telescope.

We heard some one order "Fire," and braced ourselves for the concussion.

OFF FOR THE MARK.

But the only report was a sort of a stifled cough, and the torpedo plumped into the sea.

Out across the water we saw a little red flag and a row boat bobbing about in the waves. These were supposed to be the target. They represented a battleship about to be assassinated.

The torpedo went under water like a sea lion, and a long ribbon of pale green, bubbling like soda, began unwinding through the blue depths—a bee line in the direction of the bobbing little red flag.

The Farragut slowed down; then came to a dead stop. The captain hurried down from the bridge; officers and men crowded together to watch the shot. The torpedo shooter has the singular privilege of watching his bullet in its flight.

If there can be such a thing as deliberate swiftness, it describes the flight of a torpedo.

There was something deadly and terrible in the spreading of that pale green bubbled wake through the sea. The row boat lay directly in its path.

DIVING UNDER THEM.

It must be a fine job for the sailors who sit in the row boat and watch the deadly approach of the torpedo.

I remember that I excitedly punched the torpedo officer in the ribs.

"Those men in the boat," I protested. "They are going to get killed by that torpedo."

He reluctantly disengaged his attention from the swim of the projectile. "They are perfectly safe," he said. "The torpedo is aimed in such a way as to dive in under the boat."

"Aimed by this stove pipe here to dive under that speck of a boat out there?" I gasped.

"Certainly," he said stiffly, "it will go five feet under."

"But does the torpedo know all this?" I asked. He disregarded this civilian remark.

Meanwhile the tearing wake of bubbles had almost come to the row boat.

NOT A HIT—TOO SLOW.

"Gee whiz!" I cried. "Suppose you didn't aim that torpedo right?"

"That boat'll be kindling wood," said the torpedo officer. "That thing is kind of in a hurry, you know.'

I didn't want to be in on any murder scenes and turned away my head. When I looked up, the men in the row boat were waving to show that they lassoed the torpedo as it dived five feet—count'em—under the row boat.

The gun pointer looked around with a slow smile. "I guess that was going some," said the gun crew.

The men off duty from the engine-room were buzzing with admiration.

Only the commanding officer failed to enthuse. His face wore the expression of an artist whose painting has been skied by the committee.

The shot hadn't made a hit with him.

He went back to the bridge and the big propeller began to churn again as the Farragut turned and darted over toward the target boat.

As she came alongside, the torpedo was floating on the water, spitting fire from the head and smoking and rolling like a captive monster of the deep.

The tackle was fastened on and the big fish was hauled on deck again—in disgrace.

The shot had been as true as a rifle bullet; but the speed had not been satisfactory. The lieutenant in command ordered the torpedo practice stopped and set the gun crew at work taking the machinery apart.

Auto owners are not the only ones who have troubles; gentlemen who shoot torpedoes for recreation also have breakdowns.

SHIP SPRINGS LEAK.

While the torpedo was being overhauled, a man poked his head up from the mysterious regions under the deck and told Lieut. Metcalf that the ship had sprung a bad leak.

And this was no war-game fiction.

The landlubbers present began to look around with interest for the life-preserver trunk; no one else seemed to take any particular interest in the episode. The commanding officer went below and examined the wound. He remarked pleasantly when he came back on deck that it was a pretty serious leak. Then he went on the bridge and the Farragut turned her head leisurely toward the inner harbor, presumably to report her condition.

She was then taken to Mare Island, where she will be dry-docked for repairs.

The Farragut is an old boat now; she was one of our early crops of torpedo boats—named for the admiral who said: "To hell with the torpedoes; go ahead."

When she was built, the Navy Department proudly called her a torpedo boat destroyer; now she is reduced in rank to a plain torpedo boat. The Farragut is nearing the end of her career.

VOYAGE IN A "TIN CAN."

Fussing around with torpedoes in the still smooth waters of San Pedro Bay is rather good fun; but a voyage at sea in a "tin can," as Bill says, is fierce.

The officers and men are jammed into the most tiny quarters and the toy ship rolls around in the heavy seas like a cigar.

They stand for being packed in a tin can, however, because the sailors all love the torpedo service. There is a certain dash and cameradorie about it—like cavalry.

The young officers like it because it gives them important commands. On a battleship ensigns are so thick they are used for fuel in times of emergency. On a torpedo ship there are only three officers and two of them are ensigns.

The young lieutenant in command of this flotilla—Mr. Kerrick—is a sort of little admiral.

The young officers also like the torpedo service because in it they escape the old-time sea customs and rituals grown hoary with age in the navy. It is an "open secret" that the younger officers are beginning to rebel against the "customs of the service." They hate the ceremonies.

PRACTICAL LIFE.

Life on a torpedo boat is a mighty practical proposition. It is stripped down to cold-blooded business.

The men simply adore the job. No bugle calls to send them dancing around; they are not eternally rubbing brass work. Officers and men are thrown together in a more intimate way than on the larger warships. Discipline is not so rigid. There is less saluting and standing at attention. And they frankly enjoy monkeying with that torpedo.

To the young officers, not long from Annapolis and full of enthusiasm and with the latest wrinkles in naval science at their fingers' ends, torpedo practice is a delightful opportunity for study and experiment.

The girls at Catalina state that these young torpedo officers are about the best ever on a ballroom floor; but when you see them in greasy blue overalls, anxiously watching the torpedo tearing through the water, you have to realize that the navy officer today is a young professional person, desperately in earnest over his job.

The nearest that the torpedo fleet seems to have come to mingling with summer-resort society was one day last week, when a torpedo from the Goldsborough became rambunctious and, deserting the target, turned and went swashing and snorting in among the bathers at Terminal Island.

ANOTHER SIDE.

There is, however, another side of the picture.

"Do you intend to serve on one of these things in war time?" I asked one of the young officers.

"Sure; I hope so," he said.

"Why not take rough-on-rats?" I suggested. "It would be so much less bother than going to war in one of these—cans."

"Oh, it isn't so bad as that," he said cheerfully. "The German navy officers have carefully calculated this whole thing out. They figure that if a flotilla of six torpedo boats attacks a fleet, at least one boat has a chance to escape."

Fine! This must be the next best job to sitting in the row boat and having a torpedo shot at you. One whole chance in six to escape!

The torpedo boat is meant to sneak up like a ghost in the night into the midst of a battleship fleet; send two or three torpedoes plumping overboard; then go down in the waves—a heroic suicide.

These boys off San Pedro are carefully training themselves, day by day, for that heroic suicide.

And, amidships, on the Farragut, sits a little wizened-up old Japanese mess steward who watches the greased torpedo go plumping overboard, day after day, and smiles a queer, inscrutable smile.

LOTUS SEEDS AS NEW FOOD.

Sacred Flower from Ancient Egypt Is Here.

Nile Plant May Soon Bloom in Los Angeles.

Great Beds of Blossoms in Lake Erie Marsh.

BY MAUDE E. M'VICKER.

The Egyptian lotus as grown in the United States has received considerable notice recently in press reports, and the statement has been made that specimens of the Egyptian lotus grew in a river in Illinois as the only place where these plants thrive except in the River Nile. The fact is, they grow in many places, and will in Los Angeles.

Neltje Blanchan, one of America's leading botanists, in a recent and authoritative volume on wild flowers, says that the American lotus is also known as water chinkapin or wankapin. He says that this is found "locally in Ontario, the Connecticut River, some few slow streams and ponds in New Jersey, southward to Florida and westward to Michigan and Illinois, Indian Territory and Louisiana."

The scientific name of the American lotus is Nelumbo lutea. The Egyptian lotus is the Nelumbo nelumbo, formerly Nelumbium speciosum.

The most extensive beds of this beautiful plant are along the marshy shores of Lake Erie, near the city of Monroe, Mich. At that point the river Raisin empties into the lake. In the early 50s that city was an important shipping point and the national government expended large sums of money in harbor improvements. Thomas [illegible], a civil engineer in government employ, visited the locality and while there planted the Egyptian lotus seeds, which he received from the Smithsonian Institution.

WONDERFUL BLOSSOMS.

The flowers bloom in July and August in that section, being at their best usually about August 10. The blossoms vary in size, measuring from six to ten inches in diameter. They remind one immediately of a yellow form of the white water lily (Nymphaea odorata,) except that the petals are fewer in number, not so pointed at the top and gradually pass into an indefinite number of stamens. The petals are of a waxy texture, delicate yellow, tinged with green, with numerous orange colored stamens at the base of the large pod which forms the center of the cup-shaped blossom. But the sweet perfume of the water lily is missing.

According to Blanchan "the flowers which are female when they expand (except for a pollen-laden guest [illegible] into the center, are afterward male, securing cross-fertilization by this means, just as the yellow pond lily does, only the small bees [illegible] themselves here with pollen [illegible] it pleases the destructive beetles and the flies perfectly."

It is a fact generally observed that this flower is a favorite feeding booth for insects and worms and many a beautiful perfect blossom is found to be worm-eaten inside. These little pests, however, in turn have their foes and it is no uncommon sight to see the sprightly little rice birds perched on the lotus flower and filling his little crop with the worm and insect gourmets growing fat on their squatter rights in the blossom.

The flower rests at the end of a long, stout stem, a foot or more above the water's surface, the stem reaching down through several feet of water into the soil. Both flower and leaf stems have several air canals and are filled with sticky, milky substance.

LIKE UMBRELLAS.

Almost as attractive as the flowers are the leaves. They are perfectly round, with stem attached direct in the center, like an umbrella handle. They are of large size, sometimes several feet in diameter, are of a tough, leather-like texture, rough and hairy underneath, but glossy and smooth on top, at times under the water's surface or floating, but generally raised several feet above.

They are a deep, rich green in color, strongly ribbed, the upper surface being absolutely waterproof, so that when water is dashed upon them it resolves itself into many little globular portions, like quicksilver.

Left undisturbed for many years, except by the muskrat, they flourished and spread until now they are found in almost any place in the marshes between the city and the lake. From a few plants they have increased until fully five hundred acres of the marshes are completely filled with this lovely plant. There are other large beds in the vicinity.

Several years ago the crop almost failed and the gathering of a boatload of blossoms meant half a day's hard work through mud-encumbered waters that barely permitted the passage of even a flat-bottomed boat. Whatever the reason for the shortage, it seems to have been removed, for there are numerous beds in the marshes now, so large and expansive that it is a very easy matter for a stranger to become lost in them, and his puzzled endeavor to find his way back to the open water often merely takes him from one of these beds to another, and it has happened more than once that such bewildered unfortunates have been compelled to spend the night among the lotus.

The flowers are especially abundant this year, the reason being that in that section the muskrats were hunted diligently last winter. This rodent of the marshes is a strict vegetarian, and the roots, or rather tubers, of the lotus are considered by him a very fine food. Perhaps the institution of the annual muskrat banquets by the Monroe Yacht Club, which caused their being hunted by the hundreds, has been the means of saving of the lotus for it is within the past few years that the beds have increased rapidly after becoming almost extinct.

But it is not the muskrat only that finds food in the lotus. The seeds are relished by many people. The pod is in the form of an inverted cone, filled with a sticky, spongy substance, in which are imbedded the seeds in little pits. When ripe they are gathered, dried and eaten, and some fancy them as much as they do chestnuts.

Aquatic birds feed on the seeds extensively, and it is thought their carrying the seed has spread the lotus from the southern countries to the north.

It is estimated that fully fifty thousand people annually visit the Monroe beds during the month of August. In this way the plants have been distributed over considerable territory, some of the plants having been grown successfully as far north as Maine. Some of the seeds are now in the hands of the Los Angeles Park Com-

Nile Lotus in America.

Seeds from this ancient Egyptian sacred flower may be planted in the park lakes of Los Angeles.

LOOKS AHEAD.

THE FORESTER IS OPTIMISTIC.

MAKES AN ADDRESS AT THE CITY CLUB LUNCHEON.

While Proclaiming Himself Not an Alarmist, Pinchot Seizes Opportunity to Give Warning Against the Tendency to Concentration of Power in Hands of Few.

Three hundred members of the City Club filled the main dining-room of the Westminster Hotel at luncheon yesterday to hear Gifford Pinchot, Forester of the United States, speak on the "Conservation of Our National Resources."

He was introduced by F. G. Finlayson, vice-president of the club, as the man who had aided the Los Angeles aqueduct project most in some of its difficult problems. And Pinchot, in acknowledging the greeting that was given him, declared the aqueduct to be "the boldest and wisest project of any American city." He said he had had assurances just before coming to the meeting that the aqueduct officials would coöperate with the forest conservation projects heartily, and he praised Southern California for its past intelligent assistance in the same line.

His address was a warning that unless something is done, the great power interests will soon be in control not only of the power, but of the industries of the country. What had been possible in the corporate control of oil was possible in other industries and resources, and the drift was very fast toward the concentration of all industrial power in the hands of a few, who might be dominated by one man.

The speaker declared he is a "congenital and confirmed optimist, and not an alarmist," and that he never believed the condition hinted at would obtain, but the tendency is toward it, and it is a time when men should stand up and be counted for equal opportunity for all, against the perpetuity of special interests.

The Roosevelt-Taft policies, which had been adopted in the minds and hearts of the American people, mean the conservation of all natural resources for the descendants of this generation, he said, and he thinks the greatest question that Congress will have before it at the next session will be the decision as to whether the great water power of the nation shall be held for the people, or given to private exploitation.

After the address, Mr. Pinchot left for San Diego, where he is to rest and fish for a few days.

FILE TOBACCO ORDINANCE.

Measure Intended to Stop Use of Weed on Street Cars Is Handed to the City Clerk.

An ordinance has been prepared and handed to the City Clerk to be presented to the Council, Tuesday, making it a misdemeanor to smoke cigars, cigarettes or pipes or to chew tobacco or use it in any form on public trolley vehicles.

The ordinance has been indorsed by the W.C.T.U., the Church Federation, Young Men's Christian Association and several thousand individual citizens.

Members of the W.C.T.U. have interviewed most of the members of the Council about it. They say they have the absolute indorsement of two Councilmen, that two others have promised to favor the ordinance and others have said they will support it if it is amended so as to permit the use of tobacco on the rear seats of the cars.

IMPRESARIO LEVY.

Caterer Signs Rigo, Princess Chimay's Hungarian Virtuoso-Affinity, for Season Here.

Al Levy yesterday signed Rigo, the famous Hungarian violinist who eloped with Princess Chimay, for a season at his café.

Rigo has been playing with his gypsy orchestra in San Francisco, and is said to have created quite a furor there. He is accompanied on his travels by the Princess, who is said to be as much of a beauty and as phenomenally successful a dresser as ever.

Rigo and his orchestra are engaged by the local caterer for two weeks, commencing September 16. His band is composed principally of strings, and has been very successful in the rendition of classical music, and has proven particularly at home in the Hungarian national melodies.

Rigo himself is a violinist of great technical powers, playing besides with unusual temperamental abandon.

TAPPING RICH MINING COUNTRY.

DISCOVER COPPER DEPOSITS IN AJO SECTION.

El Paso and Southwestern Railroad Company Will Soon Begin Work on Extension from Benson to Yuma, Ariz.—Line May Push on to Tidewater.

The building of the extension of the El Paso and Southwestern Railroad from Benson, Ariz., to Yuma is no longer a guess, but is soon to be a reality. It is more than probable that the line will be continued to tide water on the Gulf of California.

For some time this company has had two engineering outfits in the field between these two points, and it is said they have decided on a line to run south of the Southern Pacific through the old mining camp at Ajo.

Several good discoveries of copper have been made in the vicinity of Ajo recently by various companies operating in that district. The Copper Queen people and the Calumet and Arizona men have extensive interests in the Ajo field. Many have asserted that the old Spanish mining district in that section is likely to rival the Bisbee district.

At Yuma the El Paso and Southwestern will connect with the San Diego and Arizona. It is not known which company will build the bridge over the Colorado at that point, but it is generally believed that the bridge will be built at Hanlon's Junction. The survey of the San Diego and Arizona ends at that point, and the right of way on the Arizona side to that point is owned by Karr & Kestler, contractors. Negotiations are being made for the use of this right of way, it is understood.

INCREASED CAPITAL STOCK.

According to the papers filed at Santa Fé, N. M., a few days ago, the capital stock of the El Paso and Southwestern has been increased from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000. This will give the company $8,000,000, with which to build the road, with all necessary improvements.

The El Paso and Southwestern is said to be the only railroad of any consequence built with private capital. It has always been a close corporation. The line was built a piece at a time, and paid for as built, by Phelps, Dodge & Co., and the Copper Queen Consolidated Mining Company, both of which companies were financially the same. The first link of the line ran from Benson to Bisbee, so that the Copper Queen could haul in supplies and haul out copper to the mines at Bisbee. When the Copper Queen people bought the old Pilares mine, at Nacozari, Mex., it was found necessary to build a line to that point. It was first intended to build from Naco, but later it was found that a better route would be to enter Mexico at a point where Douglas is now located. The road was then built from Bisbee to Douglas and down to Nacozari.

When the building had been accomplished that far and great quantities of steel, coke and other supplies were being received, all of which was handled over the Southern Pacific to Benson, Prof. Douglas, president of the Copper Queen, concluded that the Southern Pacific was charging too high a freight rate on his materials. He approached the Southern Pacific people for a lower rate, and not being able to get one built his own road on through to El Paso, where he could have competition.

NEW PROFESSOR HERE.

Dr. Burt Will Fill Chair of Biblical History at Occidental College.

T. J. Burt, Ph.D., one of the new members of the faculty of Occidental College, has arrived from the East to take up his work.

Dr. Burt comes from Park College, Parkville, near Kansas City. He was formerly professor of history and German, and last year held the chair of Biblical history. He is to fill the chair of Biblical literature at Occidental.

Five years ago Dr. Burt went abroad and spent the year, mostly at Leipsic, where he made a special study of German.

With his wife he expects to like Southern California and his work at Occidental, as he has entered into negotiations for the purchase of a house and lot at No. 5323 Altadena avenue.

NGELENO EXAMINES PROPERTY IN THE NORTH.

Nevada and Sierra Counties to Draw Southern Capital for Investment—Another Resident of This City Buys the Cleveland Mine. Farmers Fight the Smelters.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

NEVADA CITY (Cal.) Sept. 3.—Benjamin Fenton, a Los Angeles real estate and mining man, has been in this section several days looking over mining properties and other interests. He is highly impressed with the mining possibilities of the Nevada City and surrounding districts, and expects to interest many capitalists from the southern metropolis in local properties. Fenton owns some claims at Meadow Lake and will take steps for their development in the near future. A number of other Los Angeles and Pasadena capitalists are also in this city looking over Nevada and Sierra county mines. It is understood that they are negotiating for several properties in the Alleghany and Forest sections, in addition to inspecting others in the vicinity of this city.

H. T. Bragdon, M. I. Ish, Sol Camp and other Goldfield men have struck phenomenal ore in the claims above Downieville they recently purchased from Fred Busch. It is reported that fully $40,000 was taken out in a few hours, but full details are lacking at present, owing to the distance of the properties from this point, and the apparent unwillingness of the owners to give out complete information. Miners arriving from the scene of the strike state that the discovery is one of the most sensational ever made in the Downieville section, and that the claims give every promise of developing into bonanzas.

It is reported that Capt. W. R. Wharton of Los Angeles has closed a deal whereby he has secured the famous Cleveland mine, a short distance below Sierra City. This property is equipped with a small mill and modern power plant, and by local experts is regarded as one of the best properties in Sierra county. It has been extensively developed and has a splendid production record. The ledge is one of large size, with values running fairly high. It is the intention of the new owner to run a lower adit, which will open the property to great depth, and move the mill to the portal of the new tunnel. This will facilitate the operation of the mine at a fraction of former costs. Owing to the high altitude of the Cleveland, extensive work will not be pursued until next spring, operations during the winter being confined to developments by a small force.

The famous Idaho-Maryland mine at Grass Valley is again in the limelight with important discoveries in the lower workings. On the 400 level the ledge ranges from twelve to sixteen feet wide, practically the entire body being milling ore. On the 500 level the ledge is coming in strongly and in anticipation of the vein going down, chutes for the conveyance of the ore have been placed on the 700 level. Work beyond this point will be rushed, and within a few months it is expected to place the mine among the largest and most profitable producers in California. Twenty stamps are in action, and more will be placed in commission as soon as possible. Manager Bray Wilkins has tendered his resignation, and has been succeeded by Robert Nye. Many eastern and southern people are interested in the famous property, which was formerly the largest and richest mine in California. Its productive record is close to $17,000,000.

FARMERS VERSUS SMELTERS.

The trouble between the Farmers' Protective Association and the Shasta county smelters has taken on a serious aspect, and it seems as if a determined attempt will be made to regulate the operation of the Mammoth and Balaklala plants. The farmers have decided to proceed against the operators if the fumes are not overcome by October 1, or arrangements made to compensate the agriculturists for their losses. The operators have shown every desire to treat the farmers fairly, but maintain that their opponents are carrying matters too far. In some cases it is asserted that scarcely any injury has been caused, although exorbitant damages have been asked.

In the face of the unfriendly attitude of the farmers, the smelters are going ahead with extensive improvements and preparing for larger operations. The Mammoth has added a furnace to its plant, in an endeavor to recover larger copper contents from the ore, and is steadily increasing its force of workers in the Quartz Hill property. The Balaklala is operating two furnaces at full capacity, and announces that the third unit will be blown in shortly. This will place the Balaklala at the head of California smelters. The Bully Hill is also preparing to maintain a larger production. On the Summit work will shortly be commenced with a number of diamond drills.

RADIUM AT M'CLOUD.

The discovery of a ledge of mineralized ore, believed to be pitchblende, about twelve miles from McCloud, is attracting much attention. Such tests as have been made indicate that the ore contains radium, but nothing of a definite nature will be conclusively known until the State University reports on the samples submitted. The deposit has been traced for 1500 feet and ranges from twenty to eighty feet wide. The ore also gives indications of sylvanite. The locators believe they have a valuable property and are arranging for extensive work. The region is located in an extremely mountainous country, and is difficult of access.

COPPER AT IONE.

The Peyton Chemical Company has practically arranged for the acquisition of the Newton mines, near Ione, and will at once proceed with the comprehensive development of the group. The properties contain large deposits of good grade copper and have been opened to a considerable extent. Fuel oil will be used for motive power and it is probable that a number of surrounding properties will be taken over later. The copper mines in the Ione district are considered among the most promising in Central California, but have been held back because of lack of capital. Los Angeles people are interested in the new owning concern.

TO DREDGE THE YUBA.

A strong company, reported to include prominent San Francisco and Los Angeles capitalists, is arranging to dam the Yuba River two miles below Bridgeport and dredge the river bed for gold. A large force of men under J. F. Littlefield has been put to work and developments will be pushed with the utmost celerity, in order to complete the plans before the winter rains set in. The Yuba drains one of the richest gold mining sections in the world, and the promoters of the enterprise are confident that the bed will prove a phenomenally rich placer ground. The Smartsville section in Yuba county is attracting much attention. Southern California capitalists are said to be arranging to work a number of gravel and quartz properties in the old district.

Arrangements are being perfected for the introduction of electric power in the Alleghany-Forest district. The Yuba Power and Hydro-Electric Company is back of the plans and expects to have its lines in the district about November 1. Hand-drilling is the only method possible at present at Alleghany, and developments are naturally greatly restricted. With the advent of ample power and the installation of machine drills the camp will be in a position to pursue work on a large scale.

The rush to the camp still continues. Both auto lines are taxed to their full capacity to handle freight and passengers, and it is likely that more cars will be placed on the road before the end of fall. But for the litigation affecting the Sixteen to One and Bonanza King mines, there is no question but that the camp would be making a remarkable production.

The Gold Cañon is the latest mine to make good, several thousand dollars having been taken out in the tunnel during the past few days. The rainbow, Red Star, El Dorado, Morning Glory and others report the ore shoots holding out splendidly and conditions improving. Driving for the vein in the lower adit of the Tightner is progressing.

INYO SHOWING WELL.

The mines of Inyo county are showing splendidly. The rich copper deposits recently encountered in the new shaft of the Keane Wonder are showing well with comprehensive developments. The mill is running steadily on good gold-bearing ore. The Skidoo mines report good ore in the lower levels. The Casa Diablo has completed the installation of compressors, machine drills and other machinery. It is reported that the company will build a railroad to connect the district with the main line of the Southern Pacific. The Bishop Creek Company is steadily pushing extensive work.

PARAFFIN OIL?

The sand pump at the water well of the Terry Lumber Company at Bella Vista, Shasta county, has brought up a small quantity of paraffin oil and a company has been formed to bore for petroleum. The discovery is considered the most important yet made in the search for oil in the North, and has given an impetus to drilling at several points. The oil was found at considerable depth and is reported to be of good quality. Boring for oil has been started near Red Bluff by strong interests.

AUSTIN.

WILL REOPEN FAMOUS UNION.

MILLION AND HALF FROM ITS FIFTH LEVEL.

In Former Years Held Record as Great Producer—Now All Filled With Water and Long Idle, But Believed to Be Full of Wealth. Working at Lovelock.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

AUSTIN (Nev.) Sept. 3.—The Austin Manhattan Company has decided to reopen the famous Union mine, which achieved a record for generations as one of the richest producers in the State. The old workings will be unwatered as speedily as possible, the débris cleared away, and the workings retimbered. This will uncover a great amount of ore in the old levels, and the work will not end until the Union has been made one of the model working mines of the State. Careful consideration was given to the problem before it was determined to reopen the Union. Even after plans had been suggested and approved by a group of engineers, including some of the most eminent men of the profession, others were called in to pass upon the details agreed upon. In the history of the old mine there is no more thrilling chapter than that telling of the extraction of over $1,500,000 from the fifth level in a very short time. The mine is filled to the 350-foot level, and the new pumps that have been brought to the scene will be taxed for weeks before the water is reduced to the area that will be subjected to development. When the workings are cleaned out a fine mining plant will be installed, and miners will begin to break ore on the 625-foot level and on the 700, to which point a winze has been sunk for the purpose of reaching the immense bodies of ore that are known to exist on these levels.

Southeasterly from the Union is the Ophir, which is down to a depth of 280 feet. From the lower levels of the former a drift will be run into the Ophir and an upraise will open the Ophir to the same level. When this has been accomplished, the Ophir will be made the main working shaft. The reason for the preference is that the Ophir shaft is in solid rock, and better adapted for heavy mining operations.

The big shaft, at the junction of the Frost and the tunnel, is practically completed, and sinking of the Frost to the 1100-foot level will be begun within a few days. The station has been pronounced a model of deep-mining work by all who have examined it. It is equipped with a sixty-horse-power gasoline hoist, geared and reversible, double-drummed and double-action cylinder, and driven by compressed air. A section of several hundred feet of air pipe has been delayed in arrival, and as soon as this comes to hand the machine drills will start.

Ore running $90 in gold and $125 in silver has been struck in the south end of the district, on the Golden Eagle, by lessees, near the Hardy claim. The lessees are Antone Borrego, Sam McIntyre and Tom Dalton.

WORKING AT LOVELOCK.

Two Angelenos Operating a Tunnel in Humboldt County and Getting Out Values.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LOVELOCK (Nev.) Sept. 3.—W. R. Petty and Frank W. Bennett of Los Angeles are working on an extensive tunnel project in Humboldt county that may yet prove to be the close contestant for first honors. Surface values in shallow trenches led them to drive the tunnel for a distance of 300 feet, where vales varying from a few dollars to shipping worth have been brought to light. In the immediate vicinity are the famous Rye Patch, Emily and Chaffee mines, which have produced upward of $25,000,000, and which are still active. With the belief that another great property has been discovered, the Angeleños will keep up the work until they find what the location is worth.

NEW SMELTER READY TO RUN.

FURNACE WILL HANDLE FIVE HUNDRED TONS DAILY.

This Capacity Can Be Increased to One Thousand Tons When Found Necessary—Fine Copper Ore Body Opened at Bisbee—Smelter at Johnson to Blow in.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

PHOENIX (Ariz.) Sept. 3.—The new smelter of the Arizona Commercial Company at Globe is to be started late this month, according to present plans. The initial furnace unit will have capacity for 500 tons a day, but is designed for eventual expansion to 1000. Converters will be installed later. The ore bins will have capacity for 2000 tons and the coke bins are even larger. Oil fuel will be used. The power-house is equipped with the most modern machinery. A notably fine equipment of machinery is also being installed at the shaft heads, speed in hoisting being added to by double-decker cages. Slag will be handled by electric equipment. The ore for the smelter will be hoisted wholly through the Eureka shaft, which is 700 feet deep.

A fine Nordberg hoist has been installed on the main shaft of the Superior & Boston at Globe, of mechanism very different from any other in the Southwest. At this same shaft, the McCaw, operations for sinking to the 1000-foot level are being delayed pending the starting of a large air compressor, which is nearly ready.

Notably rich ore has been found in the Joe Bush shaft of the Inspiration mine, near Globe.

On the 1500-foot level of the Junction shaft of the Superior & Pittsburgh Company at Bisbee there has been cut a new sulphide ore body running from 7 to 15 per cent. copper. This find has encouraged the management to prepare for reopening operations at the near-by Briggs shaft, from which development is to be pushed toward the junction at extreme depth.

The oversupply of water in the older Copper Queen workings has fallen off and the new electric pumps alone are needed. The Sacramento shaft of the Copper Queen is about on the 1600-foot level, from which connection will be made with the Lowell.

Ore running 30 per cent. in the form of cuprite has been found in the Shattuck mine at Bisbee on the 600-foot level.

The 125-ton smelter of the Arizona United Mines at Johnson is to be heated for the first time within a few days, fires having been started already under the boilers.

It has been decided that the great concentrator of the Ray Consolidated is to be fireproof, built of concrete and steel, and it is told that so well satisfied is the management from experiments in reduction made in the the small concentrating mill that the new plant is to be built of maximum size, approximating a capacity of 5000 tons a day. It is believed that every phase of mining, transportation, and reduction has been considered and that the carrying on of the plans will inevitably mean the production of copper at as low a cost as is known in the Southwest. Though the ores are low grade, they will be readily and cheaply mined and most of the handling will be done automatically. As an evidence of the magnitude of the operations designed, the company has placed an order for 2,500,000 feet of lumber, to be used almost entirely around the mine.

All legal formalities have been closed in connection with the trustees' sale of the Troy-Manhattan mines in northeastern Pinal county, a committee of stockholders securing possession with a bid of about $200,000.

George W. Norton of Yuma has found a ledge of rock near Mohawk that carries pure silver in remarkable quantity. One shipment made by him gave a net return of $10,200.

Sixty-five miles southwest of Tucson in the Papago country lie mines owned and worked by the Afro-American Mines Company. A number of colored men have located five claims and are developing by the sinking of a prospect shaft, which is now twenty-five feet deep. They are sinking on a very promising ledge of silver-copper ore, said to run 525 ounces of silver to the ton.

Work is to be resumed on the Big Vein mines, nine miles north of Tucson, President W. H. Sterling writing that he has secured money in New York for the prosecution of development work.

Joseph C. Parker, W. B. Parker, Dr. H. E. Crepin, Alexander Spencer and R. R. Richardson, all residents of Tucson or vicinity, are participants to the extent of nearly $100,000 in the returns from the sale of iron mines in the Eagle Mountains in Riverside county, Cal.

IN SEARCHLIGHT SECTION.

Quartette in Better Shape Than Ever, With Two New Shoots—Contract's Plant.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SEARCHLIGHT (Nev.) Sept. 3.—It is reliably reported that the Quartette mine is in better shape than ever before in its history. Two new shoots have been found on the fourth and fifth levels, while on the 1100-foot level the ore is rapidly widening, its present width being eleven feet.

A new pump is to be installed on the lower level, preparatory to dropping the main shaft another lift. The cyanide plant is also being overhauled and improved.

A crosscut run from the 100-foot level of the Duplex-Contact has cut a foot of ore which is identical with the best of the camp. The ore is a heavily copper-stained quartz, and also shows considerable oxidization.

The object of the south crosscut is to reach the contact between the granite and porphyry, where it is expected that the main ore body will be found. While the ore cut is thought to be only a feeder, still Manager Knight is jubilant for the reason that its presence is clearly indicative of the larger results to follow.

The new plant recently installed, by the Contact is working finely, and since the new buildings have been added the property has assumed a decidedly mine-like appearance.

Larsen and Hall have opened a foot of high-grade ore at Nob Hill. Specimens are plentiful and the owners are preparing to make a shipment.

COPPER NEAR VICKSBURG.

Yuma Company's Secretary Tells of Its Successful Work in Developing Arizona Property.

T. C. Jobs, a prominent attorney of Prescott, Ariz., and secretary of the Yuma Copper Company, which is operating a valuable property near Vicksburg, is in the city, staying at the Alexandria.

Regarding the property, Mr. Job states that everything is moving along fine. The company has recently encountered a large body of high-grade copper ore, the ledge being about 100 feet wide and of 5 per cent. ore. This company owns thirty-one claims and considerable development has been done.

The strike was made in the old shaft, in a crosscut run on the 130-foot level into the foot wall. Sinking has also started on the perpendicular shaft and they expect to encounter another ledge lower down.

The Yuma Copper Company was organized last spring by Houghton (Mich.) copper men, headed by Capt. Sam Brady, and capitalized at $2,000,000, par value of shares $10. The company bought the property known as the Ironwood and Arizona mine, and has expended much money in development.

The company is well financed, and a large amount of development is planned. A well-equipped camp has been built and a millsite platted at the railroad, four miles away.

The property has been listed on the Houghton Stock Exchange. It started off four months ago at $1 and is selling above $3.

Consolidated Declares Intention of Shipping Regularly from Hampton Stope—Cherokee Prepares to Ship Carload Daily Out of the Puzzling Atlanta Estate.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

GOLDFIELD (Nev.) Sept. 3.—The most important events of the week may be summed up in the removal of the headquarters of the Daisy Mining Syndicate from New York to Goldfield, the Consolidated's declaration of the intention to ship regularly from the Hampton stope which carries gold values at the rate of $600 per ton. In developing this mine there is no trouble encountered in taking out between 100 and 200 tons each week if the management sees fit to adopt that policy. The third and greatest of all in a practical sense from a miners' and investors' standpoint is the Cherokee's cutting a shipping station on the Atlanta from which it is proposed to send out ore at the rate of a carload a day. As soon as the station is cut the leasers will crosscut to find the ledge that was cut in the upper workings, then stoping ground will be made and the real work of proving up a shipper on the puzzling estate will begin. W. P. Garrison of Pasadena has arrived and placed in commission the big hoist on the Four Metals lease on the same estate that is expected to make the next shipper. The shaft is down to 425 feet and every effort will be bent to making 625 feet with three shifts as fast as the new machinery can handle the dirt. The location makes it very probable that it will pick up the vein recently caught in the Cherokee, together with that picked up in the Nevada Eastern, and the Gold Bar vein will be also encountered. With the additional 200 feet of depth the Precious Metals will become one of the most promising pieces of ground on the Atlanta. The La Mance lease owned in Los Angeles is another very promising block on the same group.

The Diamondfield Daisy has adopted the leasing system after the company had spent tens of thousands of dollars in exploiting that rather mysterious vein system that has been in and out of ore more frequently than any other producer in the district. The management will insist as part of the leasing plan that every applicant must furnish a bond for the proper fulfillment of the contract that he assumes so that there will not be any delays once the work of sinking begins.

The first effects of the renewal of the leasing system on the Wingfield properties was a shipment of twenty tons from the May Queen on the western slope of Columbia Mountain, a district that has not been touched since the first consignments went from the Mohawk three years ago. The values derived from the shipment are not mentioned as the leasers are averse to advertising their good luck, but it has become bruited abroad that the rock was something out of the ordinary and the consequence has been that applications for blocks of ground have been pouring in on the Wingfield management.

An estimate of the August reduction of the Goldfield Consolidated Mines Company has been compiled by Secretary A. H. Howe. It shows so far as treatment is concerned that the company handled 22,160 tons during August, or the largest total in its history. It is estimated that the gross valuation is $602,000 and the cost of extraction, etc., $155,000, leaving an estimated net profit for the month of $447,000. It is the purpose to keep down the values treated at the mill rather than run through the straight high grade, as the ultimate result is more satisfactory to the owners. Better net returns can be had by feeding the mill with ore running about $30 than by running through the high stuff. Of the latter there is a world in sight but a mixture with the lower grade has proved to give much better result. The net July profit was $397,000.

Thomas G. Lister of Los Angeles, who some time ago secured a lease on the C.O.D., is about ready to start operations, having been successful in financing the proposition.

A setback to the developments of the Jumbo Lease is brought forward by the failure of the Muggley lease on the Jumbo Extension to make good. Muggley grew disheartened when he found that he had to reach for a depth of 1000 feet. In spite of the fact that he was within the acknowledged zone bearing the riches that broke out through the Clermont shaft of the Consolidated property he failed to preserve his courage to the end and retired.

In the outlying country west of Goldfield preparations are about completed by G. A. Tallmage for beginning operations on the Trent group which is controlled by Milwaukee parties. A steam plant has been erected on the Elva mine, one-half mile beyond the Woodruff-Goldfield property, and development is being carried on under the direction of Superintendent Rogers.

Out in the Rochester district, east of Goldfield, the Goldfield Eastern Company is working and will soon start work on some properties in the Montezuma district west of Goldfield. Manager Mutz has been away from the mine for over a year but has returned and is giving the property his entire attention.

The Burke lease on the Belmont is developing into one of the most important leasing propositions in the camp, a recent shipment of sixty-four tons from the ore body opened a few weeks ago, making a net return of over $11,000.

CHEAPER SMELTING.

NEW PROCESS OF REDUCTION.

ANGELENO INVENTOR OF PLANT THAT LOWERS COST.

Metallic Sulphides, Carbonates and Oxides Reduced Electrolytically. Mining Men Interested in the Demonstrations Under Way at an Experimental Mill Here.

Edward L. Anderson of Los Angeles has invented an electrolytic method of reducing metallic sulphides, carbonates and oxides with aqueous solution. The process refines metals, saving the by-products, sulphur, arsenic and antimony, without the use of heat, and at low cost. Using complex ores or compounds, four different operations are employed, which are described by the inventor as follows:

First, the reduction of metallic sulphides and other compounds with electrolytic hydrogen, which results in the formation of gaseous hydrogen compounds of certain elements; second, the dissolving of the reduced metals not carried out by the gaseous electrolytic hydrogen; third, precipitation in their respective condensers of the elements carried over by the gaseous electrolytic hydrogen; fourth, precipitation of metals from their solutions in a refined condition electrolytically.

For the first operation a reduction tank is used containing an aqueous solution of the electrolytic, with a carbon electrode on the bottom to serve as a primary cathode. On top of this last is placed the sulphide or metallic compound to be reduced. Suspended above the tank, partly immersed in the electrolytic, but not coming in contact with the ore or compound, are a number of carbon plates. In the case of copper sulphides the electric current of the proper electromotive force or density is caused to flow from the carbon anodes through the electrolyte towards the ore and cathode. The passage of the current decomposes the water contained in the electrolyte, the hydrogen being disengaged through the ores or compounds.

The electrolytic hydrogen combines with the sulphur in the ore and forms a sulphuretted hydrogen gas, which passes off through a collecting hood into storage tanks. The current continues to flow toward the ore until all sulphur is eliminated and the copper reduced to a spongy condition.

When the sulphur has been eliminated, the spongy copper reduced at the cathode, with the carbon anodes and electrolytic in which the copper is soluble, forms an electric couple that, connected to a voltmeter, gives out an electric current. To dissolve the reduced copper and form a soluble salt, the carbon anodes and cathodes ore connected with wire, completing the circuit and causing the copper to enter the electrolytic, but not depositing upon what were the anodes.

When a desired amount of copper has been taken up the solution is allowed to flow into storage tanks.

The sulphuretted hydrogen obtained is treated in the following manner: A certain amount is taken from the storage tank and burned with air, forming a sulphur dioxide, which passes into a condensing chamber.

An equal amount of sulphuretted hydrogen gas is taken from the other tank, pumped into the condensing chamber and allowed to react with the sulphur dioxide. The result is a precipitation of sulphur in the form of a fine powder.

This is carried out in precipitating tanks, arranged one below the other in cascade form. In these are a number of graphite plates that act as anodes, and thin copper plates that act as cathodes. Each tank contains more electrodes than the one immediately above. The copper solution flows into upper tanks between the electrodes and overflows by means of a pipe into the second, and on through the entire number.

The solution, in flowing through the tank, is subjected to an electric current of the proper electromotive force and density, the result being a copper precipitation in a refined condition upon the thin copper cathodes.

To electrically deposit the copper from its solutions and obtain a solid metal, the current must be decreased per square inch as the per cent. of copper decreases in the solution. This is accomplished by increasing the electrode surface as the copper in the solution decreases.

Where the treatment is confined to complex sulphides of copper, lead, arsenic or antimony, the process is slightly different.

The ore is crushed to about twenty mesh, and a certain amount placed in the reduction tank on top of the carbon cathode. It is then covered with a solution of 10 per cent. hydro-fluorsilicici acid to a height of eighteen or twenty inches. The anodes in position allow six inches to be immersed in the solution without touching the ore.

The metallic hood is so placed that the gases collect in the top; an outlet pipe leads to a pump, by means of which the gases generated are withdrawn. The anodes and cathodes are connected with a generator and current turned on as before.

The current dissolves the water into its component parts. Oxygen is evolved in and on the ore acting as a secondary cathode.

The electrolytic hydrogen unites with the sulphur and forms a sulphuretted hydrogen gas, which is pumped from the tank. The arsenic combines with the electrolytic hydrogen and forms an arseniuretted hydrogen or arsenic. The antimony, likewise, combines with the electrolytic hydrogen, forming stibine.

The electrolytic hydrogen, arsenic and stibine is pumped into a storage tank for further treatment.

There is left at the bottom of the reduction tanks in contact with the cathode, metallic copper and metallic lead in a spongy form.

The reduced copper and lead, with the anode, forms an electric couple, similar to a secondary cell, and when the carbon anode is connected with the copper cathode by a short wire, a current is started in the opposite direction that causes the metals to enter the solution, forming a chemical compound with the acid solution.

After a time the solution shows copper fluosilicate and lead fluosilicate. When sufficient metal has become dissolved the current is withdrawn and the solution drawn into storage tanks for further treatment.

To recover the sulphur, arsenic and antimony, the sulphuretted hydrogen arsenic and stibine are treated as follows:

The gases are forced through a burner and burned to form sulphur dioxide, arsenic oxide and antimony oxide.

The sulphur dioxide passes off as a gas, which can be collected and used in the manufacture of sulphuric acid; the arsenic and antimony oxides are precipitated as white powders.

The electrolyte carrying the salts of copper and lead is sent through the electrolytic precipitating tanks as in the first operation.

In passing through the tanks the copper in the solution is deposited in a solid form upon the cathodes, and the lead upon the anode in the form of lead peroxide, forming a hard thick coating upon the surface protecting them from oxidation or dissolving in the solution.

After a certain thickness is reached in this coating it may be stripped and melted into pig lead, the carbon taking on immediately a new coating of lead peroxide from the solution.

When the copper cathodes are one and a half to two inches thick they are removed and new thin plate is put in. The copper produced by this method is refined electrolytic, ready for the market. A small experimental plant has been erected here and is making demonstrations.

Radium Not Present.

KENNETT (Cal.) July 25.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am forwarding to you a sample of ore discovered on the McCloud River, north of here. The ledge is twenty miles up the McCloud River from the confluence of that stream with the Pitt River.

According to the reports of certain scientists who have arrived here, there is in this ledge, "Enough pitchblende to supply the world with radium for all time."

You will, therefore, readily understand the importance of the find—if the quantity of mineral is as stated; and, further, if it is pitchblende, as a matter of fact.

I realize the delicate position it places your "In the Earth" department in, to pass upon this mineral, for the reason, it has been pronounced pitchblende by quite a number of men.

The samples were given me by a prospector, and I will be greatly obliged if, at your leisure, you will give us your opinion through The Times' columns, and greatly oblige.

Yours fraternally, DR. G. B. A.

ANSWER: "Enough pitchblende to supply the world for all time," is quite an optimistic statement. The salts of radium are well known, but, as metal, it has never been obtained.

The samples were given you by a third party. Why not confirm the find, if possible, by visiting the locality, and, personally, gather a bunch of specimens?

The material submitted by you possesses physical and chemical characters as now follow: Iron black in color; of dull, metallic luster; streak, darkish brown; specific gravity, 4.5; hardness, 5.4; and before the blowpipe, in the oxidizing and reducing flame, the powdered ore mixed with borax gives a green bead. Wet methods prove, further, that the samples submitted are chromite (chromic iron ore,) excepting one small piece of mineral.

We will now proceed with this small piece of mineral referred to: B.B., heated with salt of phorphorus (phosphate of soda and ammonia,) on platinum wire, the salt and powdered ore yields, in the oxidizing flame, a clear, yellow glass bead, which, when cold, is yellow-green in color. Carefully note, however, that if the sample was copper ore the bead would be blue when cold, while chromium would be green in both flames, and green when cold.

Pitchblende (uraninite) occurs in octahedrons, massive, and botryoidal forms. Of brown, gray or velvet-black colors. Luster, dull. Black streak. Hardness, 5.4. Sp. gr., 6.45. Infusible B.B., alone; with borax a scoria of dark gray color is obtained. The powdered mineral dissolves slowly in nitric acid.

While it is impossible to pass definitely on the samples submitted, by reason of the mixed minerals, it would appear that the locality should be further prospected, as some known ores are present at the locality stated which resemble the pitchblende mines near Central City, Colo.

Bureau of Mines.

KOLA GOLD FIELDS (India) June 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] At my request I have, at intervals, during the past two years received copies of your valuable paper, in which I read with interest your department "In the Earth."

I know of no publication that so clearly and briefly sets forth descriptions of minerals as does the Los Angeles Times, and its knowledge of the many mining sections of the United States of America is all that could be desired.

May I ask that you determine what the inclosed rock is? It comes from near Bowringsprit.

Will you also state what legislation has been effected by the Congress of your country enabling the creation of a National Bureau of Mines.

Accept my thanks now for an expected reply.

Yours respectfully, K. G. M., Inc.

ANSWER: We thank you for your kind words.

The sample you forward is known as "Eagle stone of Kirwan," made up of an iron oxide shell, with an ochreous (oxide) lining. The boys in the hills refer to such mineral as "metal chocolate drops"—and no plainer, or more practical, definition can be given to it in "good old United States language."

No law has, as yet, been passed by Congress for the establishment of a National Bureau of Mines.

During the Sixty-first Congress, first session, ten bills were filed.

Three of them were offered in the Senate and seven by the House.

Senate Bill No. 6 was fathered by Mr. Heyburn. It is the most intelligent one of them all, and the only one showing actual knowledge of mining, and what, if anything further is needed than the U. S. Geological Survey, duties a department of mines should perform.

The paragraphs at the head of this column and the work done by this department covers much of the matter set forth in Mr. Heyburn's bill.

The remaining nine bills call for but little comment; their chief features being the creation of a quasi eleemosynary institution for the employment of

YOU may have noticed, here at home, or elsewhere as you travel about, that you can tell something about the character of a community by the way the people in it ress. Clothes don't make the man; t they're a pretty good index of s general characteristics.

We're all of us apt to forget this, to think out clothes as we do about food, without uch consideration of their influence beyond immediate moment of buying them.

But it's a fact that good clothes and the ltivation of a taste for good clothes does fluence a man and a community; and natally, since that's true, the better the clothes, better the influence; and in the end the tter the community and the men in it.

WILL INSPECT HIDDEN VALE.

People Ready to Entertain Three Thousand.

Literary and Musical Exercises Arranged.

Development from a Sheep Ranch a Wonder

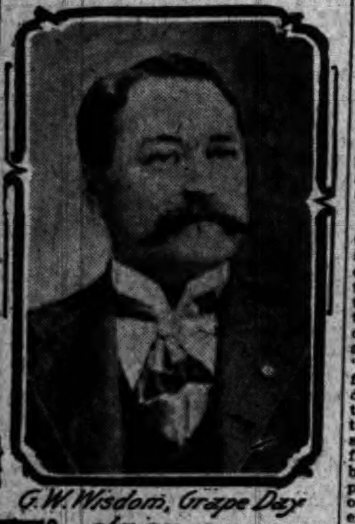
[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ESCONDIDO Sept. 3.—The second anniversary of its Grape Day, and the fifth anniversary of the burning of the canceled $350,000 bonds, issued at the time of the organization, under the Wright act, of the irrigation system, will be celebrated by Escondido next Thursday. Preparations are being made for entertaining 3000 people, the majority from San Diego and Los Angeles.

The citizens, through their Executive Committee, have issued hundreds of invitations to Southern Californians to be with them. Reports from San Diego indicate at least three special trains.

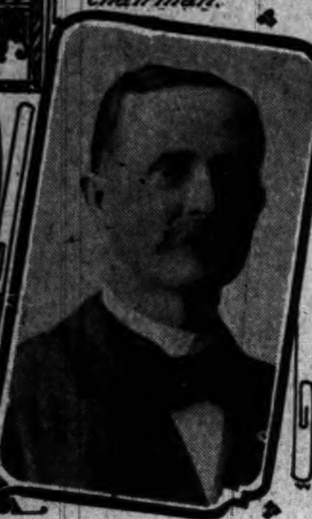
From Los Angeles many of the commercial houses will respond to the request of Escondido firms with whom they do business to send representatives. Between 400 and 500 are expected on the special train which will reach here at noon Thursday.

The feature of the entertainment will be to give everybody a look at the valley, and all the grapes they can eat.

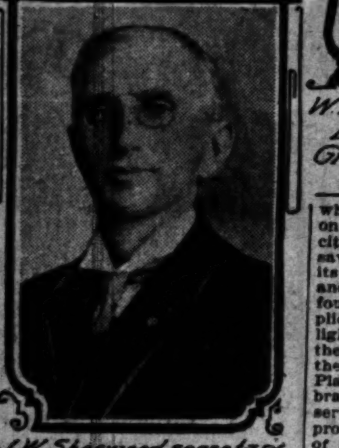


G. W. Wisdom, Grape Day chairman.

Sig. Steiner, Grape Day originator.



W. H. Baldridge, president Escondido trustees, Grape Day treasurer.



J. W. Sherwood, secretary executive committee.

Escondido Grape Day promoters. Men of the "Hidden Valley," who are prominent in arranging for the Admission Day festival.

The women of the churches will help the hotels and restaurants to feed the hungry. Automobiles, rigs and teams will be in readiness, upon arrival of the trains, to take as many people as possible on trips through the valley, to vineyards and citrus orchards. Free grapes will be dispensed from beneath a huge grape arbor, covering half a block, at Maple street and Grand avenue, where other products will be displayed. Grapes will also be disbursed from big drays, along the avenue. In addition to this each guest will be presented with a two-pound box when they take the train. Upon the arrival here they will be decorated with Grape Day buttons.

The literary and musical exercises will be held between 1:30 o'clock and 2 p.m. in the public square. Lime street and Grand avenue. W. H. Baldridge, president of the City Trustees, will preside, and the address of welcome will be by Rev. R. B. Larkin, pastor of the Congregational Church. Responses will be made by men representing Los Angeles, San Diego and other cities. Music will be given by the bands. Following the exercises there will be a competitive drill by squads of secret orders from San Diego, foot races and other entertainment.

Many of the visitors will attend the county fair at the Rock Springs farm, a short distance out, to which free transportation will be furnished. The special trains will get away early in the evening, that for Los Angeles being due to leave at 6:30, giving the visitors a full afternoon to look over the valley, and to get acquainted with the people.

STORY OF DEVELOPMENT.

The story of the development of Escondido dates from 1886, when the Land and Town Company bought Rincon del Diablo, consisting of 13,000 acres of sheep pasture, from the Stockton men who had purchased it a short time before from John Wolfskill. At that time the only frame house in the valley was the one built by Wolfskill in Reidy Cañon, in 1874, and which is yet occupied. The only store in the town was kept by Tom Adams, at the corner of what is now Grand avenue and Lime streets. All the lumber used in building operations had to be carted away from the main line of the Santa Fé at La Costa, twenty miles distant.

In 1888, with a $110,000 subsidy put up by the Escondido and San Marcos land companies, the Santa Fé made this the terminus of a branch line from Oceanside twenty-two miles west, and from then on the development of the valley was rapid. The sheep pasture was very soon the site of a pretty little village.

In 1894 the place had outgrown the water supplied by the land and town company wells in the river bottom near Hotel Escondido, and it was decided to take advantage of the provisions of the Wright act for the organization of an irrigation district. Bonds in the sum of $350,000 were issued and the system was installed, the water being taken from the San Luis Rey River, twenty-five miles east of the valley, and stored in an immense reservoir, seven miles east of the city. The plan, however, was disastrous to the valley and was abandoned in 1905, when the property owners included in the district succeeded in liquidating the bonds on the basis of 50 cents on the dollar.

Great as was the sacrifice to many, the step proved to be wise. Ever since then the valley has been forging ahead. A mutual water company was organized and is now in operation. Water is furnished to consumers at actual cost, and the supply is ample. Twelve thousand dollars is being expended on permanent repairs to the upper flume line. The system is one of the finest in the State, and is without a dollar of indebtedness. Water is supplied within the district for both irrigation and domestic purposes.

SUBSTANTIAL DEVELOPMENT.

The valley is now in line for substantial development. The population in the city and country is estimated at 3000. State Senator Wright expresses the opinion that it will be 10,000 before the next census is taken. The assessment in the city proper, which is 75 cents on the $100, is based on a valuation of over $600,000. The city has two national banks and two savings banks, with combined deposits of $400,000. It has eight churches and three school buildings, with a fourth in process of erection. Application for franchises for electric lighting and for a railroad between the valley and San Diego are pending, the sales to be conducted this week. Plans for a $7500 Carnegie public library are being drawn. The train service by the Santa Fé is to be improved October 1 by the installation of a gasoline motor car.

During the past year a $20,000 sewer system has been installed. A fire engine and street sprinkler have been bought, and an office building for the mutual water company erected. A $15,000 ice and refrigerating plant and a cement pipe manufacturing plant are among the new industries which tend to show the development of the valley. Two hotels, one having forty rooms, have been built this year; also a hay warehouse, as well as a number of residences. A second weekly newspaper and job-printing plant is being installed. The twenty-five stores of the city carry stocks aggregating $200,000. The city is the trading and shipping point for a radius of twenty miles, and of a population of between 8000 and 10,000.

It is estimated that of the 13,000 acres of the grant 10,000 are under cultivation. The land is adapted to the growing of citrus fruits, grapes, peaches, hay and grain and other products. The citrus fruit crop this year was about 400 carloads. The hay crop is estimated at 6000 tons. More than 500 tons of table grapes will be shipped to Los Angeles from one vineyard. The 1200 acres of vineyard, however, is chiefly devoted to raisin and wine grapes. In dairy products more than $50,000 worth of butter will be shipped from the San Pasqual creamery alone. Nearly that amount will be represented in the sale of eggs and poultry.

The idea of holding an annual grape day, originated with Sig Steiner, a merchant, who, with W. L. Ramey, chairman; G. W. Wisdom, W. N. Bradbury and Arthur B. Jones, composed the Executive Committee for the first anniversary last year. This year the committee consists of G. W. Wisdom, chairman; W. L. Ramey, A. B. Jones, W. N. Bradbury, Sig Steiner, J. W. Sherwood, F. C. O. Kelley, W. H. Baldridge and W. E. Alexander, who will be untiring in their efforts to provide entertainment for every one. The Santa Fé has made exceedingly low rates from all Southern California points.

ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The Southern California Academy of Sciences has issued its July Bulletin in the form of a neat pamphlet, containing much scientific information, as well as some things of more general interest. Abbot Kinney contributes an article under the title, "Eucalyptus for Hardwood;" A. Campbell Johnson writes on "Antiseptic Vegetation for Cuba," and Willis L. Jepson, on "South Limits of Coast Range Trees." H. O. Collins, writing editorially in the bulletin, of eucalyptus trees, says: "To most people, the title 'blue gum' appears to be the name for all eucalyptus trees, but this is only one of more than 150 species."

Trade That Pays.

Young men to learn to operate the linotype machine; a good trade that pays above the average. The Merganthaler Linotype Company is installing over 100 linotype machines per month. That means just so many positions to be filled at good wages.

The Los Angeles Times has installed a large auxiliary plant and has placed in charge an expert machinist and operator, making it possible for students who so desire to learn either trade (linotype machinist or operator,) in shortest possible time, in 6 weeks' course, 8 hours per day or night, $50. ARGUED AND SUBMITTED. The action brought by the Los Angeles Trust Company to change its name to the Los Angeles Trust Company and Savings Bank, which is being opposed by the Los Angeles Savings Bank, was argued before Judge Willis yesterday and submitted.

STRICT ORDER. Before leaving the city yesterday, Judge Wilbur issued an order regarding the Andrade estate that has been the subject of contention in the Superior Court for some time, demanding the attention at times of two departments. The style of the case was Stafford, executor, et al., against Hartman, executor, et al. "The court orders that said action for the appointment of a receiver be denied, and the motion for the injunction be granted on the same terms as the restraining order heretofore made, said order to prohibit the defendant from in any way petitioning the Probate Court for distribution, and from paying out any money on distribution, or upon any claim, or for any purpose, except upon the order of the court, or upon written consent."

TRIAL SET. In Judge Willis's court yesterday the trial of Tom Yorba, charged with rape, was set for November 2.

THE INFERIOR COURTS.

MORE TROUBLE FOR ATTORNEY.

MRS. W. J. DANFORD ACCUSES HER HUSBAND OF BATTERY.

Declares That Lawyer, Recently Disbarred for Shady Work in Federal Courts, Attacked Sleuth She Had Placed on His Trail to Secure Evidence for Divorce

Mrs. W. J. Danford accuses her husband, who was recently disbarred as an attorney, and two friends of his, with having beaten up her private detective, Harry Stiles. Her complaint was made to the Prosecuting Attorney yesterday.

Stiles was employed by her to gather evidence against her husband to be used in divorce proceedings. She says he was following Danford through the Third-street tunnel when her husband turned on the sleuth. Howard and "John Doe" Cline, friends of the former attorney, are said to have joined him in beating Stiles.

The attorney took the case under consideration until Tuesday, but indicated that complaints charging either battery or disturbing the peace will be issued.

The Danford household has been in a state of turmoil for several months. The trouble began shortly after he was disbarred for alleged crooked work in the United States courts. Several weeks ago Mrs. Danford complained to the police that her husband had beaten her severely. As she was the only witness, the case was not prosecuted.

Danford is not living at home, and is said to resent the fact that his wife is preparing to sue him for divorce.

Something for Nothing.

Justice Frederickson yesterday issued a warrant for the arrest of Will C. Prather, a real estate operator and builder, on a charge of obtaining goods under false pretenses.

Prather is accused of having procured window glass on various occasions from the W. P. Fuller Company, by representing that he was sent for it by the Los Angeles Cabinet and Fixture Company.

Charles W. Bandle, general manager of the latter firm, made the complaint to the Prosecuting Attorney. He said that his company had done some work for Prather several weeks ago, and he ascertained from the workmen where they bought their glass.

Bandle also alleges that Prather attempted to make a settlement and gave a worthless check in payment for the glass he had received.

Rolled Into Pans.

James Albert, an employé of a fuel company at Central avenue and Eleventh street beat up C. C. Albachton, keeper of a restaurant at No. 633 South Spring street, when he would not pay a bill, according to a complaint filed in Justice Frederickson's court yesterday.

Albert presented a statement calling for $3 at the restaurant, Friday night.

"I cannot pay that now; come around tomorrow; my money is in the bank now," Albachton told him.

"You'll pay it right now or there'll be trouble," Albert is alleged to have replied.

The restaurant keeper attempted to explain why he could not liquidate at that time and declares he received a blow in the jaw that sent him rolling into a pile of pans.

The cook heard the rattle of tinware, and ran out of the kitchen to find out the cause. He bore a frying pan in one hand and a butcher knife in the other. Albert took to his heels.

In the Wrong Bed.

George Demeny was made the defendant in a battery action by a complaint filed before Justice Frederickson yesterday, by Ella Wright. He has not been taken in custody.

Demeny roomed at the house at No. 441 Ruth avenue, kept by Ella Wright. When she returned home Friday night she found him asleep in her room. With great difficulty she awakened him and ordered him out.

"I'm going to stay right here, kid," she alleges he told her.

She ran for her chum, Miss Wright, who lived next door. They returned and again invited him out. He is alleged to have struck them and then made his exit.

Miss Wright exhibited a beautifully colored left eye when she appeared to ask for a complaint against Demeny.

By Wireless Next.

Justice Rose introduced the novelty of holding court by long-distance telephone yesterday.

George P. Arnerich appeared in the magistrate's courtroom in the Central Police Station Building, at 10 o'clock yesterday, to be examined on a charge of bribery. At that time the justice was wrestling with weighty problems in the San Pedro district, where he had sat during the week.

As the court and the defendant were twenty miles apart, it was impossible for the examination to proceed. The attorneys and the justice called the telephone into play, and the case was postponed until Tuesday.

Sailor Takes Affinity.

Imogene Sailor swore to a complaint in Police Court yesterday charging her husband, Eugene Sailor, with having deserted herself and four small children. He has been located in San Francisco, and will probably be arrested soon.

Mrs. Sailor declares her husband ran away with another woman nearly a year ago, taking all her wearing apparel and selling the furniture in the little home they rented. Since then she has been supporting the children by working. She lives at No. 173 East Jefferson street.

Takes Their Pants.

J. C. Henderson and J. Ladou were arraigned before Justice Frederickson yesterday on a charge of having disturbed the peace. Their cases will be set for trial Tuesday.

The disturbance was caused by a dispute over the ownership of a pair of old pants. Ladou declared Henderson had stolen the breeches from him, and the latter declared the wearing apparel as his property.

One was tugging at each leg of the trousers and they were talking in loud tones when a deputy sheriff came up to them. He took the pants as evidence and marched the two men to Police Court.

Must Answer Charge.

F. E. Ferris was held to answer in the Superior Court to a charge of forgery, by Justice Williams yesterday. Ferris is accused of having forged the name of the Babcock Plumbing Company to several checks for $21.40 each. He was captured August 28, after a chase on Spring street.

Inferior Court Notes.

William Edwards, who told a wild story when taken before Justice Frederickson Friday on a charge of having stolen bread, is declared by Police Surgeons to be insane. He will be taken before the Lunacy Commission.

J. E. Sneed, proprietor of the poolroom at No. 333½ South Broadway, will be tried before Justice Frederickson on the 13th inst., on a charge of having assaulted Percy A. Livingston with a billiard cue.

W. S. Smith was fined $10 by Justice Frederickson yesterday for having driven a horse with a sore back.

LOCAL HOUSES NOW OPENING.

THIS WEEK MARKS BEGINNING OF NEW SEASON.

Hamburger's Majestic to Be Opened by Kolb and Dill—Anniversary at the Belasco Tomorrow. Plans for Other Houses Are of Importance.

This week will see the resumption of complete theatrical activity in Los Angeles. And it will be activity on a larger scale than has ever been seen in the Southwest.

Commencing tomorrow, every first-class theater save one will be open—for the season, presumably. The exception is the Mason, dark for a week, merely on account of the routing of certain companies.

Hamburger's Majestic Theater will resound tonight to the tunes and jokery of Kolb & Dill, and while it is true that Manager Morosco could hardly get a better attraction for the opening of his new season, it is also true that Kolb & Dill could not get a finer house in which to "break in" their new plays.

Play-People, who will be prominent this week. The group includes Lewis S. Stone, who is returning to the Belasco stage after a summer vacation; C. William Kolb, who, with his team-mate, Dill, will present an entirely new company at the Majestic Theater tonight; Margaret Langham (Mrs. Lewis Stone,) who returns to the stage after three years' absence; A. Byron Beasley, in "Strongheart," at the Burbank; Eleanor Gordon, former local actress, who will be a stellar feature at the Orpheum; Monda Glendower, former stock favorite, who returns to the Los Angeles, and Misses Doris Wilson and Adelaide Harland, of the Kolb and Dill company.

and thoroughly settle themselves and their people in the parts which it is confidently expected will carry them throughout the winter.

The Shuberts, occupying the Auditorium, have done exceptionally well in their first week, and promise to follow the first play with a brilliant galaxy of successes and well-known stars.

The rumors and rumors of rumors have for a time ceased from troubling, and the policy of the year may be fairly well outlined.

Ferris Hartman, according to present plans, will soon try his luck for a second season in the Grand Operahouse.

The Belasco and Burbank theaters will adhere to their policies, and will undoubtedly give, as they have steadily given in the past, better stock performances than may be found in any other American city.

The Orpheum announces an unusually good line of vaudeville bookings. And if there is to be a Morris theater, it is yet to come.

In addition to the return of Lewis S. Stone, the Belasco Theater production of "The Squaw Man" tomorrow night will celebrate the fifth anniversary of that playhouse, while at the same time the presentation will serve to introduce several new members of the company.

Among them are Frank Camp, William B. Freeman, Harry Andrews, James G. Usher, William Harris and Mrs. Lewis S. Stone—or Margaret Langham, as she was professionally known a few years ago. She will make her reappearance in the important role of Nat-u-Ritch.

In honor of the event, the Belasco management promises the largest production it has ever displayed. Scenic artist Brunton and his assistants have been at work for many weeks on the settings.

At the meeting of the Gamut Club last Wednesday, a committee was appointed to meet in conjunction with the Music and Art Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, and a request was sent out for all the music societies of the Southwest to furnish a representative to coöperate with the committee, forming a joint body for the inauguration and the final carrying out of a full-sized music festival.

Percy Bronson, who was here last with Kolb & Dill, is said to be engaged as juvenile man with the Belasco company, the engagement to begin some weeks hence.

John Dunne, who is at the Orpheum this week with his wife, Mary Marble, is one of the original figures of interest in "Florodora," which as a piece of colossal success-misfortune—if such a compound word may be used—will hardly be equaled again in the annals of the show business. "I am convinced," said Dunne in his dressing-room the other day, "that there is a lot of fraud in the world, but it doesn't always hurt the man who is defrauded. Now, take that 'Florodora' deal. You recall, perhaps, if you are old enough, that 'Florodora' made the greatest hit and the most money of any musical show till 'The Merry Widow' eloped with the record. Associated in its original production were John C. Ficher, Thos. C. Ryley and myself. Dunne, Ficher & Ryley was the firm. Well, things went along till it became a tremendous success; then Ficher and Ryley froze me out."

That's the way Dunn tells it. As a matter of fact, a lawsuit followed some dispute over the golden-egged goose, and in the end, a compromise.

"Sickness was upon me," he said, "and after litigation became burdensome, I compromised, and took a neat sum in cash. Of course, it was small—ridiculously so, considering the wonderful gold mine it proved, but—do you believe in compensation?"

"Sometimes," was the uncertain reply.

"Well, I believe the sum paid me was the only 'good' money ever realized by the trio of us. It made a million dollars, did that opera, and my share of it was infinitesimal. But, like the chap who was offered $50 a week and refused because he 'got' his $125, I have my share now. Ficher and Ryley haven't a cent left of their huge profits. They went in on other ventures, lost heavily, and—well, I have a home in West End, Long Branch, N. J."

"Yes, he means WE have a home," said the smaller and better half of the family. "And we call it 'Florodora,' too."

Dunne is intimately connected with earlier theatrical days hereabouts. He and Ryley were playing in San Francisco during the genesis of "Florodora," and Ficher had made some money as manager for Modjeska, and built a theater in San Diego. Joe Eppinger financed Dunne's end of the "Florodora" transaction. The opera was running in London—that was in 1900—to tremendous business, but was so thoroughly and blasé-ly English that American managers wouldn't touch it. Frohman and Klaw & Erlanger both turned it down! George Lask, also well known on the Coast, was sent to London, and he took the play there; Frank Pixley, ofttimes a resident here, tinkered the Briticisms out of the book, and—the rest is history. It went on at the Casino, New York, failed for some weeks; then the sextette bounded into fame in one night, all Gotham was talking about it, the girls became noted; and the crop of "Original Florodora girls" has since exceeded that of George Washington's body servant and the last of Napoleon's Old Guard.

"I believe I have a Christian disposition in the matter," said Dunne; "I would not have compromised the suit, had I not been ill at the time; I had won the first points, and felt sure of the final result. But—well, I——"

"You mean we," came the still small voice.

"We have our home; that's the final answer."

"And we love it," said the tiny Mary, with a chuckle. And by the way that isn't altogether a property chuckle that ripples out over the stage when "leming" pie is mentioned. It is more than half genuine. Of course it is accentuated for stage purposes, but it is all there in friendly conversation, just the same. It is one of Mary Marble's trade marks, just the same as "Little" used to belong to Sam Chip, the third of the trio.

"Used to be," for Chip no longer clings to that adjective.

"It got tiresome," he put in, when it was mentioned. "I know I'm little, but I'm a man, and folks all thought I was an infant in arms. So I had to drop the soubriquet. So I got a valet instead."

Now prepare for Chip's valet story; it is his stock in trade:

"Being small, I bethought me of the joys of contrast, so I secured me a Hungarian giant, to dress me. Just why I needed a dresser, I don't know, but—I got the valet anyhow. He developed one trait—just one—a marvelous capacity to forget. I said nothing for awhile, but finally I got mad, rose to my full height of four feet one, and abused him shamefully. Instead of kicking me out, he—wept! Pitiful salt tears streamed down his countenance as he assured me that his lack of memory was caused by a suit just brought by his wife for divorce, and his absorption in that. I apologized. In a week, he forgot my shoes at a matinée, and I became real rude. This time, his baby had died. I apologized again. The third time it was another child. I stood it till he had killed seventeen, and then, he quit. Oh, yes, by my invitation. Since then, I have been Sam Chip, minus a valet.

Ellen Beach Yaw will appear in concert, with her assisting artists, at Simpson Auditorium, on Tuesday evening, September 14. The concert will be under the auspices of the Pico Heights Congregational Church. The seat sale will open the coming Tuesday at the Bartlett Music House.

Leona Hastings, pianist, 13 years old, will be heard in recital at Gamut Auditorium on Tuesday evening. She will be assisted by Mrs. Helen Guilford-Stadden, soprano. Miss Hastings is a sister of Ray H. Hastings, organist of the First M. E. Church.

THE LOCAL WEEK.

Lewis S. Stone will return to the Belasco stage Monday night, after three months' vacation. Mr. Stone's return will be made in the first local stock production of Edwin Milton Royle's successful play of the West, "The Squaw Man."

Mr. Stone will be seen in the role of Jim Carston, the young Englishman, who to save the good name of his cousin, leaves England and settles in Wyoming, where he marries a young Indian girl, who saves his life on two separate occasions. Miss Thais Magrane will be seen in the role of Diana, the part originally played by Julie Opp. Every member of the Belasco company will be seen in the performance of "The Squaw Man" and in addition there will be two score of specially engaged players seen in the production.

Following the production of "The Squaw Man" the Belasco company will give the first performance anywhere by a stock company of Robert Edeson's "Classmates," in which Mr. Stone will be seen in the Edeson role.

Kolb & Dill, who will open their season at the Majestic Theater tonight in "Dream City," a new play originally produced by Weber's Theater, New York, say they have surrounded themselves with the best company they have ever brought to Los Angeles. There is a new prima donna who is considered a statuesque beauty, Doris Wilson. The leading man, Boyd Wilson, made a hit with Fritzi Scheff in "Mademoiselle Modiste," and will essay the leading juvenile role with Kolb & Dill tonight. There are also several old members of the company, prominent among them being Miss Olga Steck, Maybelle Baker, Carlton Chase, Sydney de Grey and Bud Duncan. Other new members are Adelaide Marland, who created the role of the chorus lady in last year's production of "The Land of Nod;" Robert Stanton, John Phillips and Charles Whitney. The chorus will number thirty-six girls and twelve men, being the largest Kolb & Dill have ever brought to Los Angeles.

"Dream City," the opening bill, is from the pens of Victor Herbert, who wrote the music, and Edgar Smith, who wrote the libretto. It tells the story of a lazy farmer who has a dream in which he sees his quiet down East farm turned into a great city, and himself the owner and Mayor. The play affords both Kolb and Dill unusual opportunities for their well-known talents, and it is claimed that the part assigned to Mr. Dill, which was originally played by Joe Weber, is one of the best this actor has ever appeared in. Kolb also has a good part, but this time he is the feeder for his smaller partner.

"Going Some" will enter upon its second and final week at the Auditorium on Monday. This concoction of Rex Beach and Paul Armstrong has been attracting record crowds for this season of the year.

Next week John Mason and most of the original company in "The Witching Hour" will be seen upon the Auditorium stage.

One of the best American plays is William C. de Mille's "Strongheart," which was originally produced here by Robert Edeson.

This excellent play, comprising a cast of about twenty people, will be the offering of the Burbank stock company for the week beginning this afternoon. In the cast none but young people will be employed, except one character, that of an old Indian. The play is unique in this respect, as there are no other character parts in it, all the roles being those of young college students or young society women. A. Byron Beasley will play the title role, and should give an excellent performance of the part, as he is thoroughly acquainted with the play, having appeared in the leading juvenile role with Robert Edeson for several seasons.

The story of Strongheart, briefly summarized, tells of a young, educated Indian, handsome, and of a personality that wins for him devoted friends among the whites. He is a student at Columbia University, and figures prominently in all the athletic sports, being the hero of the gridiron. Through his winning personality and manly qualities he becomes a general favorite with the young select set of women, as well as the exclusive set of men, and not until he falls desperately in love with the sister of his chum, does he learn the meaning of the word "prejudice."

The coming week at the Orpheum will bring back to Los Angeles Eleanor Gordon, who was the first "heavy" with the Ulrich stock company at the Grand, five years ago. As such, she created a powerful impression, and acquired a following. After leaving here Miss Gordon went to San Francisco, and then East, finally becoming leading woman of the stock company at the Chicago Operahouse, and ranked as the best leading woman in the country. This is her first tour in vaudeville, and she certainly will be warmly welcomed here, as it is also her first reappearance since she left, five years ago. Her present vehicle is "Tips on Tap," a racing comedy by Edgar Allen Wolff, full of bright situations and strong lines. It tells the story of a woman who taps her husband's pockets for racing tips, on which she plays. One sent to him as a joke, because supposedly impossible, falls into her hands—and the denouement tells a story of woman's luck, which wins out when pitted against the most skilled work of mere man. Supporting Miss Gordon comes Joseph Sullivan and a competent little company.

"La Petite Revue" is a novel handling of an old idea, brought down to date, a review of old and new theatrical successes presented in an original fashion. A youth in reverie beholds many of the stage celebrities of the past; the scene changes and he gets a glimpse of favorite vaudevilleans of today; another change, and he sees a miniature "Pinafore," and a finale is a "Slumberless Serenade."

Lena Pantzer, assisted by Sam Mint, will do some dances. Though clever on her feet on the floor, Miss Pantzer is equally at home on a wire, a shovel or a broomstick, and her terpsichorean evolutions on these unaccustomed materials will prove of interest.

The five Avolos are unusually skilled on the xylophone.

The coming week will be the last one of the stay of Sam Chip and Mary Marble, in "In Old Edam;" of the six American dancers, Matthews and Ashley and Conroy, LeMaire & Co.

Dustin Farnum,

In "Cameo Kirby," an unusually well-spoken-of production soon to be seen at the Mason Operahouse

Two vaudeville acts out of the ordinary and which have never before appeared in Los Angeles, and another of the breezy one-act comedies which have become popular with Unique patrons compose the bill at that house for next week, beginning with usual Monday matinée. In the comedy acrobatic act of Pongo and Leo, which is given the top-line position, there is promised something entirely new in this line of work.

The Del Costa Duo has a singing act which has been successfully presented in the East, and lovers of good singing are promised a rare treat. The act is said to be fully up to the standard maintained by the Unique.

The little playlet, in which the Unique players will appear, is entitled "The Mysterious Mr. Smith," and is from the pen of Edwin T. Emery, whose offerings the last two weeks have been excellently received. Mr. Emery, Denton Vane, Al Franks, Albert Cramer, Miss Douvee, Miss Constance and Miss Salmon are all cast parts which have been written especially for their individual talents. New and original song numbers will be interpolated during the action of the play. The motion pictures and the illustrated song will complete the programme.

Monda Glendower Glendower and Raymond Manion head the new bill which opens at the Los Angeles Theater Monday afternoon.

Glendower and Manion, as they are known in vaudeville, will present the one-act playlet, entitled "A Christmas On the Comstock," by the well-known author, Harry Cottrell, which the Seattle Post-Intelligencer claims is the best of his dramatic works. The scene of the playlet represents the cabin of "Old Bill," miner and gambler, situated on the Comstock, in Nevada, in the early sixties. The sketch is said to contain a strong vein of comedy and much pretty sentiment, and gives both Miss Glendower and Mr. Manion excellent opportunities to display their recognized ability. Miss Glendower was one of the most popular ingenues that ever played with the Burbank company.

One of the amusing features of the bill promises to be the offering of Ross and Shaw, heralded as musical mendescripts, who will present their musical comedy, "Down in Jungle Town." Gaynell Everett, a pretty young woman, late of the "Gingerbread Man" company, will present fifteen minutes of characters, songs, lightning changes and buck and wing dancing.

Two of the comedy spots of the programme will be furnished by Jack Symonds, monologist, and Scott and Davis, singing and dancing comedians. Harry Tyler, xylophone soloist, and a series of new comedy motion pictures complete the bill.

Grand Operahouse stock company will give the first production in this city of Harry H. Earl's "A Wife's Peril."

The play is full of good action, startling situations and strong climaxes, and give many of the members of the company exceedingly good opportunities for strong acting. As Fannie Merry Weather, one of the principal feminine roles of the play, Grace Rauworth will have a part well suited to her talents. George Webb will be seen in the role of the Italian artist, Ravolo, and Harry Earl should do excellent work as Lord Augustus Chumley. Jack McDonald will play the role of George Fane, while Lillian Hayward will be seen as Mrs. Fane. The management has promised an excellent scenic equipment for the production.

The Mason Operahouse will be dark this week, but will reopen next Monday night, with "Cameo Kirby," a production said to be remarkably good, featuring Dustin Farnum, McKee Rankin and May Buckley.

David Belasco—indeed a newcomer in the syndicate fold — will present Blanche Bates in "The Fighting Hope" a week later.

—o—

In the Spotlight.

William Faversham has purchased the rights to the new play that Stephen Phillips, the English poet and author of "Herod," has about completed. The theme has not been made known, but it is understood that the story has been laid in modern times. The author of "Herod," "Nero" and "Ulysses" heretofore has confined his dramatic efforts to ancient times and to either fabled or historic people.

Lee Kohlmar, who was the original lovesick German youth with David Warfield in "The Music Master," has been engaged by Lew Fields for a similar role in support of Blanche Ring in "The Yankee Girl." Frederick Paulding, the actor who vacillates between tragedy and musical comedy, and writes plays between times, also will be a member of Miss Ring's company, as will Halliday and Curley, a vaudeville duo remembered for their work in "The Battle of Too Soon." "The Yankee Girl" will be a September offering. George V. Hobart and Silvio Hein, who wrote "The Boy and Betty," are responsible for the libretto and score.

When "The Bachelor's Baby" is given its first formal presentation in Atlantic City on October 14, and calls for "Author, Author" are heard in the land, Francis Wilson, the comedian, will lead Francis Wilson, the playwright, out by the hand and with a bow leave him to the tender mercies of the audience. One thing is certain, and that is that if the play is a failure the playwright will not be likely to cast the blame on the actor or go so far as to insinuate that even a novice could have made considerably more out of the part than the one intrusted with it. Undoubtedly the advantages are many in writing plays for yourself, to suit yourself. Mr. Wilson has chosen as his fellow guardians of "The Bachelor's Baby" Edgar L. Davenport, E. Soldene Powell, Adelaide Wilson, Edna Bruns and Lillian Lawrence.

John R. Rogers, who is to pilot Eddie Foy and his "Mr. Hamlet of Broadway" company, has made a particularly happy hit in one of his big posters. Eddie is in a class by himself, and evidently his publicity procurer is ditto. Within an hour after the signing of the Shubert-Rogers contract, Rogers had ordered a large poster, displaying all the late great and acknowledged Hamlets—Edwin Booth, Edwin Forrest, Edwin Adams, etc., with Edwin Foy placed in the center of the group. Beneath the lithographer's work are these words: "The great Hamlets, each having their individual admirers, and the world admitting that 'acting is a matter of opinion,' some say one Edwin was best, some say another. But my opinion is that the greatest Hamlet is IS Edwin Foy. He is alive and the others are dead."

"Detective Sparks," a four-act comedy by Michael Morton, with Hattie Williams as the stellar figurante, was given a promising send off at the Apollo Theater, Atlantic City, last Monday night. The story follows the tendency of the day and takes two of its characters up into the air. An imprudent young woman goes ballooning with a gay young man, the balloon is wrecked and the two disappear. The public becomes greatly interested in the mystery surrounding the identity of the pair. The police go to work and the newspapers offer rewards and the family of the young woman work just as diligently to prevent the names being made known. It is said the interest is maintained until the fall of the last curtain and, furthermore, that no play in some time has been so crammed with surprises. Miss Williams's support embraces Julian Royce, an English actor, and in the American contingent Frank Burbeck, David Torrence, Louis Massen, Edward Nicander, and Vira Stowe.

Festival visitors to Bayreuth at the end of July were treated to an unadvertised "side dish" in the form of a Liszt memorial concert. This took place in the old operahouse of the town on the eve of the anniversary of Franz Liszt's death (July 31.) The programme contained three Liszt symphonic works, "Les Préludes," "Mazeppa" and "Tasso," and with them Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll" and Richard Strauss's "Death and Transfiguramembers of the enlarged Murenberg Philharmonic Orchestra. Perhaps most interesting of all to the audience was the programme book with its excellent illustration of the memorable festival performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony under Wagner's baton at the time the cornerstone of the Festival House was laid, in May, 1872. The soloists of that performance were Lilli Lehmann (then at 23, just on the threshold of her great career;) Johanna Jochmann-Wagner, the incomparable Niemann, and Betz.

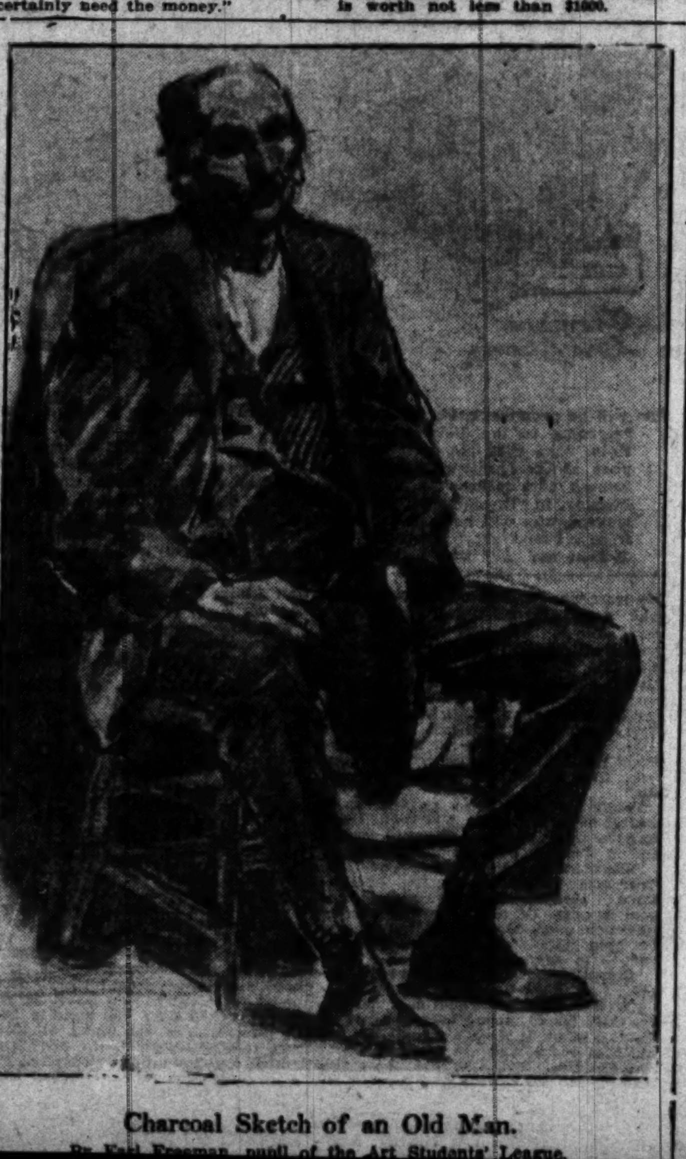
There is to be still another Wall-street play and Lillian Russell has hurried back from comedy by Edmund Day, author of "The Round Up," and "The Widow's Might" is the title. It might have been "The Widow's Mite," but then there would have been thirteen letters in the name, and as Miss Russell will present the play first at the Liberty Theater on September 13, she was just a little dubious as to the possible effect of the double hoodoo, and, anyway, "The Widow's Might" sounds just as euphonious. The comedy involves four brothers and the village belle. One married the belle and then comes to New York and Wall street. After being shorn in the usual fashion, he dies. Then the play begins. The brothers withhold from the widow the fact that her husband was financially deflated and they give her a fourth portion of all their profits, for they, too, have acquired the Wall-street habit. Later she discovers the deception, and also hearing of her husband's failure blames the brothers, innocent though they are. But truth is mighty and will prevail and in the end the widow's mite and might unite in restoring the fortunes of the entire family.

It is becoming quite the fad to be concerned in an automobile smash-up, and Geraldine Farrar, writing from Europe, tells of her fashionableness: "Being away on my holidays, it was one of those rare occasions when I could conscientiously indulge in such a luxury. But, of course, that would be the one time in my life when I didn't take cold," she writes. With their guests, Mrs. Humphreys, the Farrars had been motoring through Italy without trouble to their means of locomotion, till one afternoon, when about five miles from Milan, they met a load of hay. That is considered no very great sign of ill-luck; but, nevertheless, while gallantly allowing the right of way to said load of hay, the Farrar machine tilted over in a very ungentlemanly-like manner, spilling the party into a babbling brook which ran alongside. After considerately waiting until all had scrambled out of the way, it then toppled in itself with a big splash. The automobile has been in the repair shop. "Meanwhile," continues the singer, "while we are cooling our heels here awaiting the machinist's return to health, I have been taking advantage of the sore throat which I did not get, by singing a few more songs into the phonographs, for my instinct tells me that when my bill from the garage comes in I shall certainly need the money."



Charcoal Sketch of an Old Man.

By Earl Freeman, pupil of the Art Students' League.

A VIOLIN.

Chicago Business Man's Opinion of Instrument Changed Mightily in Short Time.

In Chicago there is a business man who owns a violin. He inherited it from his father, who was a musician. The business man does not play. One of his friends is a lover of violin music. That friend often had told the business man the violin was a good one, and that he ought to treasure it. The business man regarded the advice as that of an enthusiast. One day, according to the Chicago Inter-Ocean, the argument became so warm the friend insisted that the question be settled at once by carrying the instrument to a professor of music who is admittedly an authority on violins.

"Why, I wouldn't carry that violin through the street for anything," the business man said. "My friends would think I had gone music mad in my old age."

"I'll carry it," his friend said quickly. "I'm not ashamed to carry a violin anywhere. Come along."

They went. The professor was at home.

The back and the belly, the neck and the bridge, the tail piece and the sounding post all passed beneath his critical eye. "It looks all right," the professor said. From the case he drew the bow and ran the hair several times across the cake of rosin. Then, striking A on a near-by piano, he proceeded to tune the instrument which for so many years had been held in so light esteem by its owner. After the violin was in tune he tested it, string by string, chord by chord, and harmonic by harmonic, in all positions. Then he began to play. The fullness, the richness and sweetness of the tone appealed even to the matter-of-fact business man.

"It is a genuine old Italian instrument, and I'll give you $1000 for it," the professor said. The business man gasped.

"I'll tell you frankly, it is worth more than that, but that is all I can afford to pay," the professor continued.

"I can't think of selling it," the business man replied, with a halt in his speech. "You see, it came to me from my father. It is an heirloom. I thank you, however, for the test you have made and the good opinion you have expressed."

The two started away from the home of the professor, the business man carrying the violin.

"Let me take it," his musical friend said. "You might meet some one you know."

"I'll carry it," the business man retorted. "I don't care how many friends I meet. And, besides, you might drop it." Which serves to demonstrate that money talks just as loudly in the realm of music as anywhere else. The despised violin, which merely is an incumbrance, when it is thought to be worth not more than $10, becomes the chief ornament of the household when an expert says it is worth not less than $1000.

The Sea.

I will go back to the great sweet mother,
Mother and lover of men, the sea.
I will go down to her, I and none other,
Close with her, kiss her and mix her with me;
Cling to her, strive with her, hold her fast;
O fair white mother, in days long past
Born without sister, born without brother,
Set free my soul as thy soul is free.

Rare Old Gems.

When Alfred Benzon, whose remarkable performances in psychology and legardemain have made him famous the world over, recently asked me if it would give me pleasure to look at his collection of antique jewelry, I heartily assured him that it would; for, though I can hardly pose as a connoisseur in gems, still, beauty is beauty wherever found, and the colors of cut jewelry, seen in the harmony of lines that make up their setting, have always appealed to me as the most exquisite things in art.

So, with Mr. Benzon at my elbow to answer questions, and to add his intelligent enthusiasm to my own, I spent a happy afternoon in gloating over the treasures spread out before me. Mr. Benzon had assured me that his collection was a good one, and I was prepared to wonder, but the size and beauty and variety of the antique gems, most of which had been reset in modern designs, transcended by far all my expectations.

The first jewel which I looked at, fascinated, was an emerald of enormous size, in a most gorgeous setting, as a ring. Then I gazed into a pigeon-blood ruby weighing, without exaggeration, over four carats.

I spent some time over a wonderful collection of pearls, chief among them being an abalone pearl weighing 128 grains and having a beautiful luster. There was also a fine salmonpink pearl of large size.

Mr. Benzon's collection of old miniatures would be hard to duplicate. One set, a series of portraits of Louis XVI set in sleeve buttons, etc., would be a rare possession in itself, to say nothing of Mr. Benzon's silver miniatures of the Jacobin period, and many others. Next in importance after the Louis XVI miniatures were the porcelain miniatures of the early part of the eighteenth century, one set of which, painted by Marceau, contained exquisite portraits of Rubens, Rembrandt and Vandyke.

Mr. Benzon then introduced a collection of mosaics of the old Italian school, an absolutely lost art, examples of which, the collector assured me cannot now be procured, except by happy accident, for love or money.

I was shown many odd pieces. One that interested me greatly was an old Wedgewood ring from the Duke of Cumberland's collection.

If one jewel can be said to be more beautiful than another—where all is beauty—the distinction must go to the opal, with its myriads of iridescent lights and its hidden fires. Mr. Benzon's collection of these gems is a veritable dream of far Cathay. I felt the spell of black opals, of Australian, Hungarian and Mexican opals, each one perfect of its kind. Mere words could not do justice to the radiant splendors of this portion of the collection. The gems must be seen to be appreciated.

Art School Exhibition.

The Art Students' League was founded some years ago for the convenience of young artists who wished to study together from life, and who had not the time to spare for traveling back and forth to the then only existing schools of art, which were in the outlying districts of the city. A downtown studio was rented, commodious and well lighted.

The new school grew rapidly. Others besides young artists applied for admission, classes in painting and composition were started and women as well as men were admitted. Painters well known, and themselves well instructed in New York, Paris and Munich, became the league's teachers.

Kills the Dandruff germ
Stops Falling Hair
NEWBRO'S
HERPICIDE

I am feeling fine. Do I look good? Just washed my hair and put Herpicide on it. The worst thing about washing hair is that it is flyey and unmanageable. By using Herpicide Soap for shampooing and then applying Newbro's Herpicide you won't have any trouble. Herpicide allows it to dry quickly and the hair is just as light and fluffy as can be. You can do it up as nice the first day as the second.

Herpicide is the finest thing for the hair I ever saw. It is not greasy, does not stain or destroy the natural oil. It is just right.

I believe Herpicide is a sanitary necessity to every woman's toilet. Besides being a most delightful dressing, it saves the hair—prevents it coming out. Loose hair in the comb is the sure sign of danger. The dandruff germ does that, kills the follicles and throws up the scarf-skin that is so horrid.

Herpicide kills this germ, keeps the scalp clean and allows the hair to grow as it should. It makes beautiful hair—hair that has that nice gloss and lustre.

You can get a large bottle of Herpicide from your druggist for a dollar. Use it as directed and if not satisfied, go back and get your money. The Company that makes Herpicide are so sure that it will do as they claim that they guarantee it.

If you have not read it, you should send for their book—"The Hair and Its Care." It is sent to anyone upon request. You can also get a nice big sample of Herpicide with the book by sending ten cents in postage stamps to The Herpicide Company, Dept. 29B., Detroit, Mich.

The best barbers and hair dressers all recommend Newbro's Herpicide.

For sale at all Drug Stores.

Preparing For Removal

Important Announcement

New Goods Bought for Opening Display of Our New Store Added to Our Present Stock and Now on Sale at Cut Prices.

¶ We thought, when we began our Removal Clearance in the spring that it would be a big task to close out all goods then on hand so we could open our new building in the fall with an entirely new showing. And it was a big undertaking—but the pace at which it was accomplished has completely upset our plans.

¶ The selling has been so much heavier than we figured upon, that in order to keep our assortments complete we have been compelled to add new goods—and keep on adding and adding—until at last, in the extremity of the situation, we have been forced into another "move" which we did not count upon.

¶ In other words, we have now been obliged to throw open wide the doors of our warehouse and place in our present stock carload after carload of new goods just recently arrived which were bought especially for the opening display of our new store.

¶ These new goods, together with many other carloads now arriving almost daily, will be included at the same special reductions which have made this sale such a notable success. Such an unexpected piece of good fortune for the furniture seekers of Southern California to buy very newest products of the present season, we know will be received with enthusiasm and generously responded to. It is your opportunity—take advantage.

Remember, Every Piece of Furniture For Household Use, Reduced in Price

—furniture for every room in a home—for every sort of a home, from least pretentious bungalow to most palatial mansion; furniture in practically every style and wood that one would be likely to call for.

—furniture of all grades—to meet the demand of those who wish for most inexpensive qualities, or of those who can be satisfied only with the finest examples of the master craftsman's art.

Of Particular Interest to Those Who Admire and Seek Furniture of Real "Quality" and Character

—This Removal Clearance includes a class of furniture which is not offered in the average store—furniture which is rarely purchasable at reductions; this furniture embraces all our large and splendid collection of highest class bedroom suites and individual pieces, beautiful living room pieces, and chairs for dining-room, library, parlor, etc.; furniture of genuine mahogany, rich Circassian walnut, old English oak, etc. This furniture, of this superior sort, is all included in the removal reductions. It is an opportunity for lovers of really artistic furniture and owners of fine homes to furnish or add to their furnishings to unusual advantage. A visit will disclose many exceptional values at this time.

The event is big and bold enough to be heralded from the house tops. New Fall suits—beauties, every one of them—here right in advance of the Fall season, at a price that is so far out of reason, considering the quality of the garments—the tailoring—the beautiful materials and the finish—that every woman of Los Angeles who sees them will wonder how it is possible for us to produce them.

Just the result of good fortune, combined with timeliness on the part of our representative, who is now in the market.

We have illustrated two of the styles. We predict that every woman who needs a new Fall suit and will take the trouble to investigate this offer will be quick to take advantage of the sale.

Materials are new Fall homespuns in light gray Oxfords, tan and blue. New worsteds in dark gray stripes and satin striped cloths in gray, blue, black and reseda. Garments are full satin lined, 38 to 42-inch coat lengths. Pleated models predominate.

The suits are made of high class hard finished material, and for style, fit and finish surpass any previous offering of ours at the price. Added to this purchase we include eighty fine suits from regular stock that have sold at $12.50, $15.00, $17.50, $19.50, $22.50, $24.50 and $25.00.

Plenty of salespeople to wait on you. Sale begins Tuesday morning and continues Wednesday and Thursday if they last that long. Choice, $10.00.

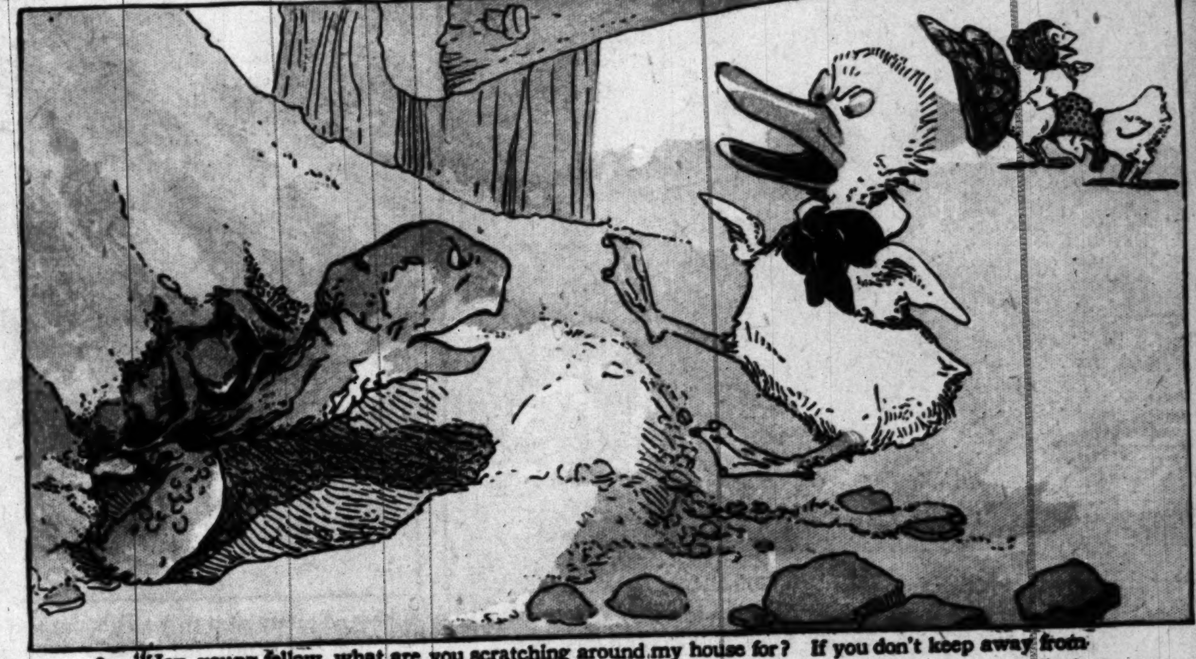
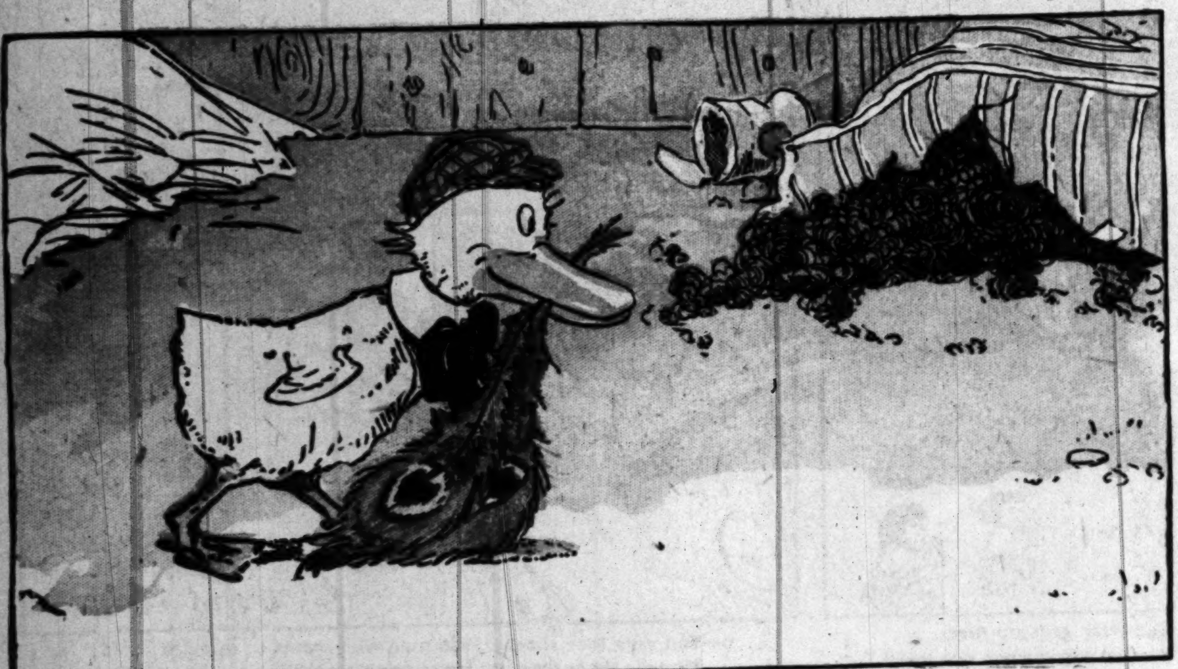
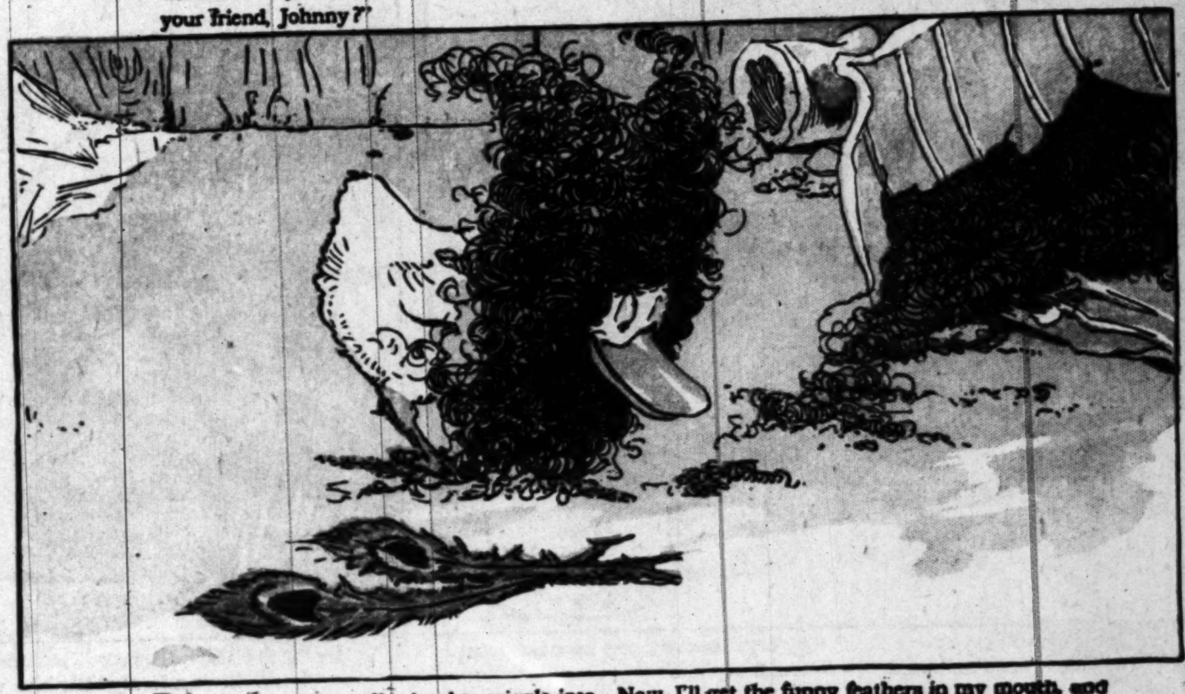
1.—"That's the place it went in. It was a dandy worm, too, Johnny. Better dig fast before he gets away."



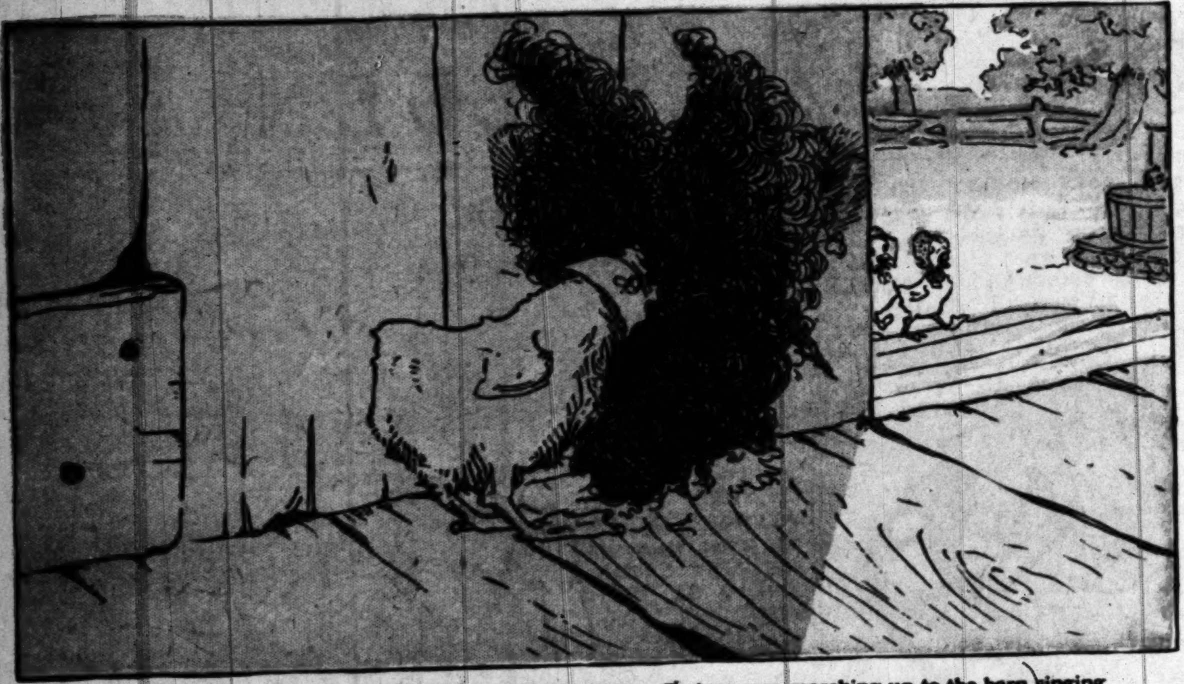
2.—"Hey, young fellow, what are you scratching around my house for? If you don't keep away from here I'll bite your head off!" And then the Twins screamed with delight and said "Who's your friend, Johnny?"



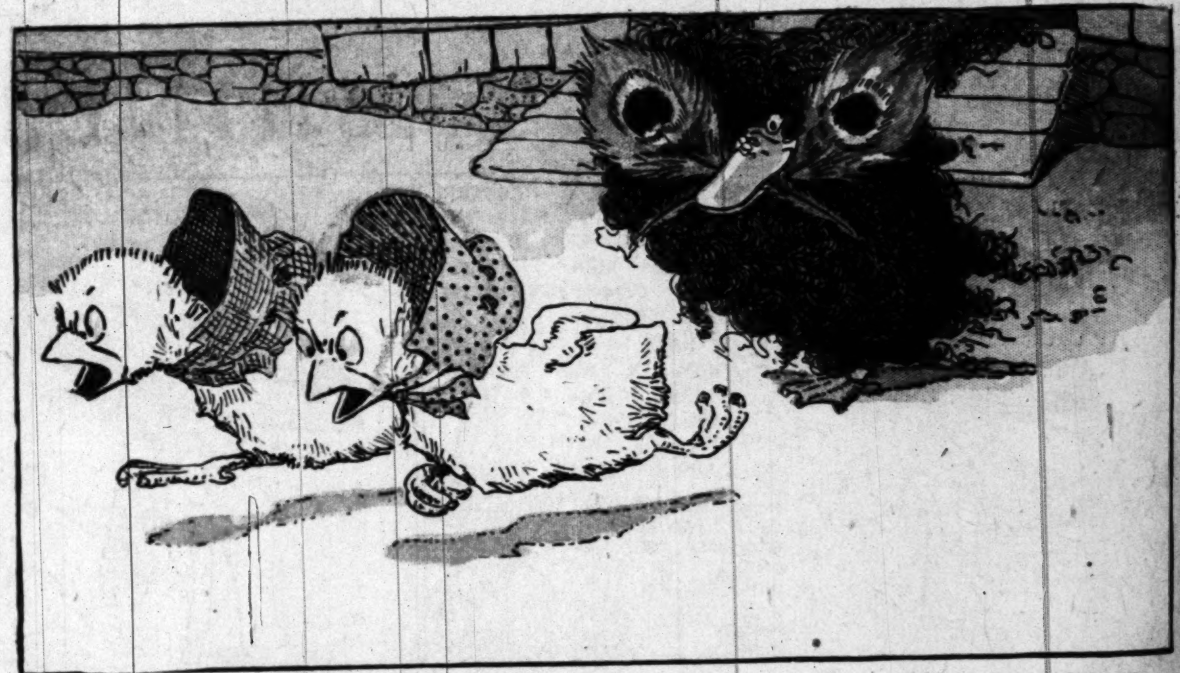
3.—"Well, they certainly frightened me that time, but I think I can fix up something that will give them a good scare!"



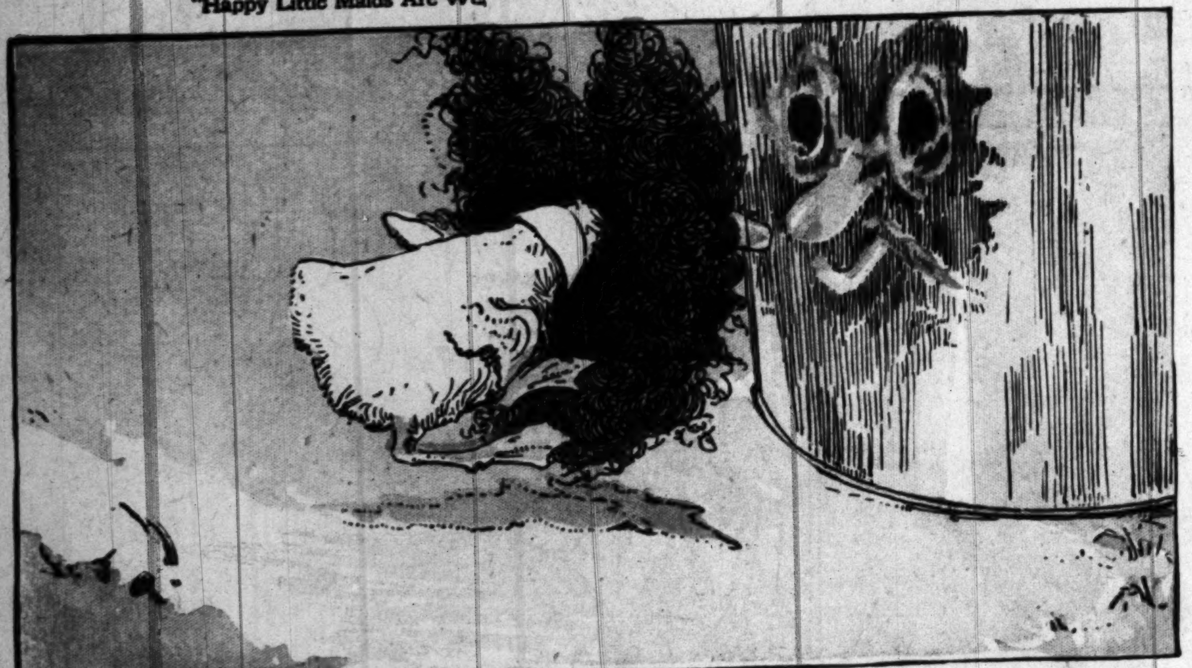
4.—"Whew, this curly stuff is hard to wiggle into. Now, I'll get the funny feathers in my mouth, and then I'll be ready for an introduction to those young ladies!"



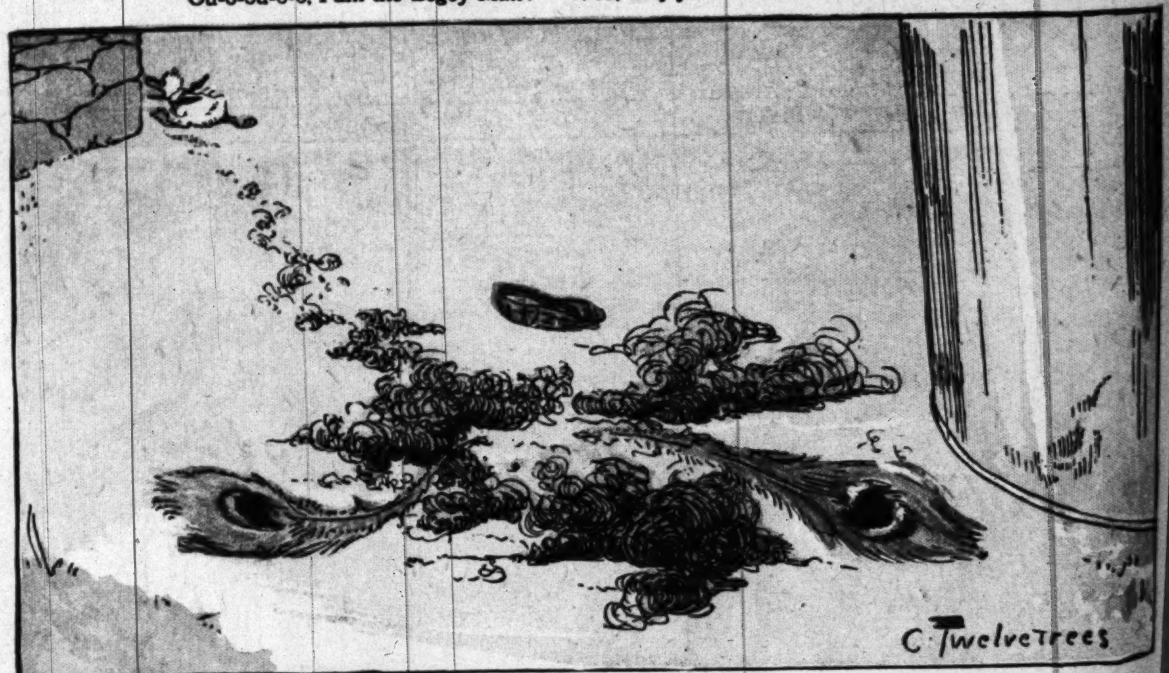
5.—Johnny waited, oh, a very long time, and finally the Twins came marching up to the barn singing "Happy Little Maids Are We!"



6.—Johnny rushed out and chased those poor Twins all over the place, and when he howled "Ou-o-ou-o-o, I am the Bogey Man!" Well, they just fainted.

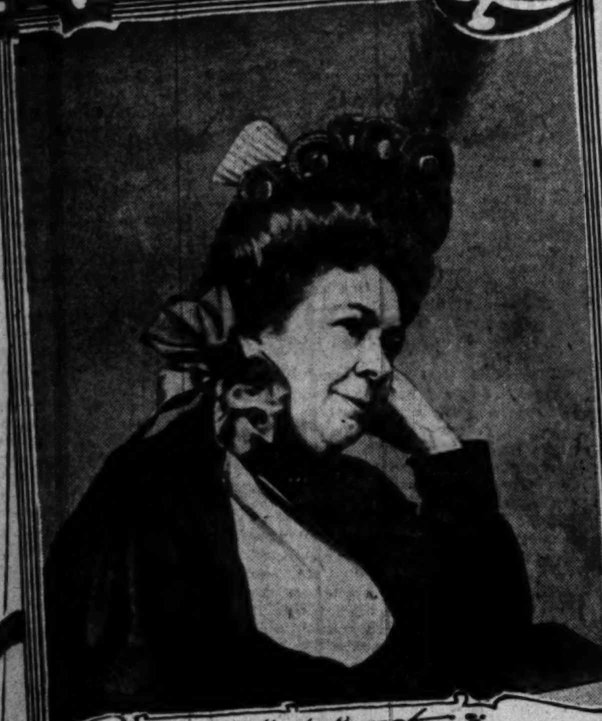


7.—And he went around frightening everybody; but when he saw his reflection in the new milk pail he nearly jumped out of his skin with fright.

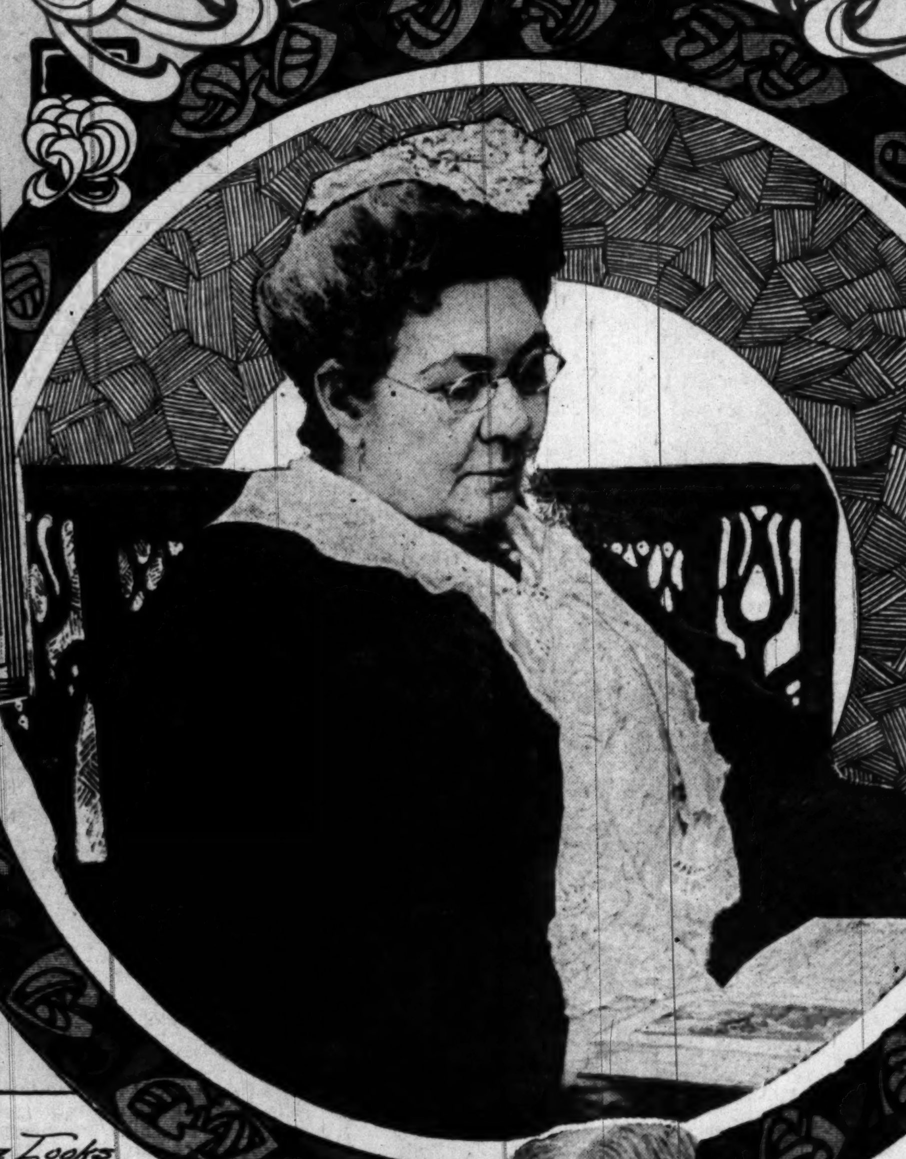


8.—It didn't take him long to get around that barn, and he'd be running yet if the fence hadn't stopped him.

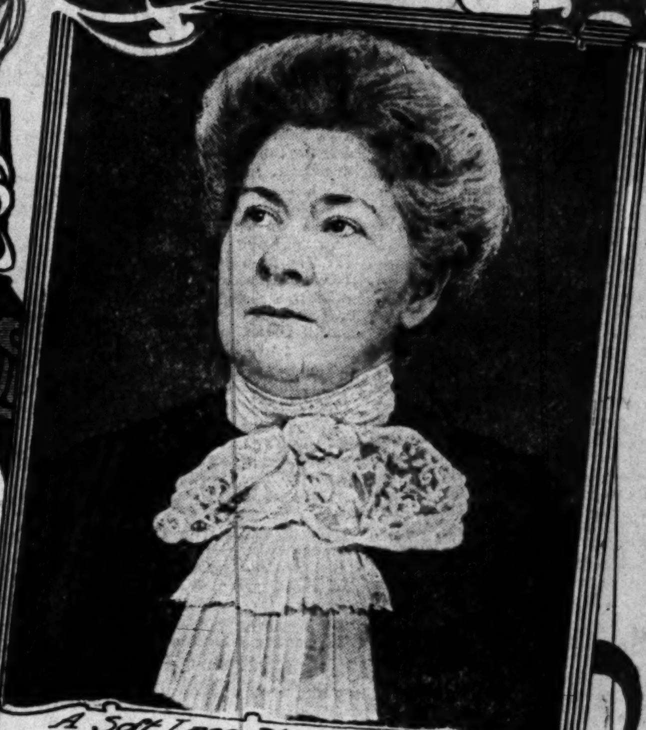
Ideas for the Older Woman



The Well Fitted Bonnet



Grandma Looks Well in Her White Lace Cap

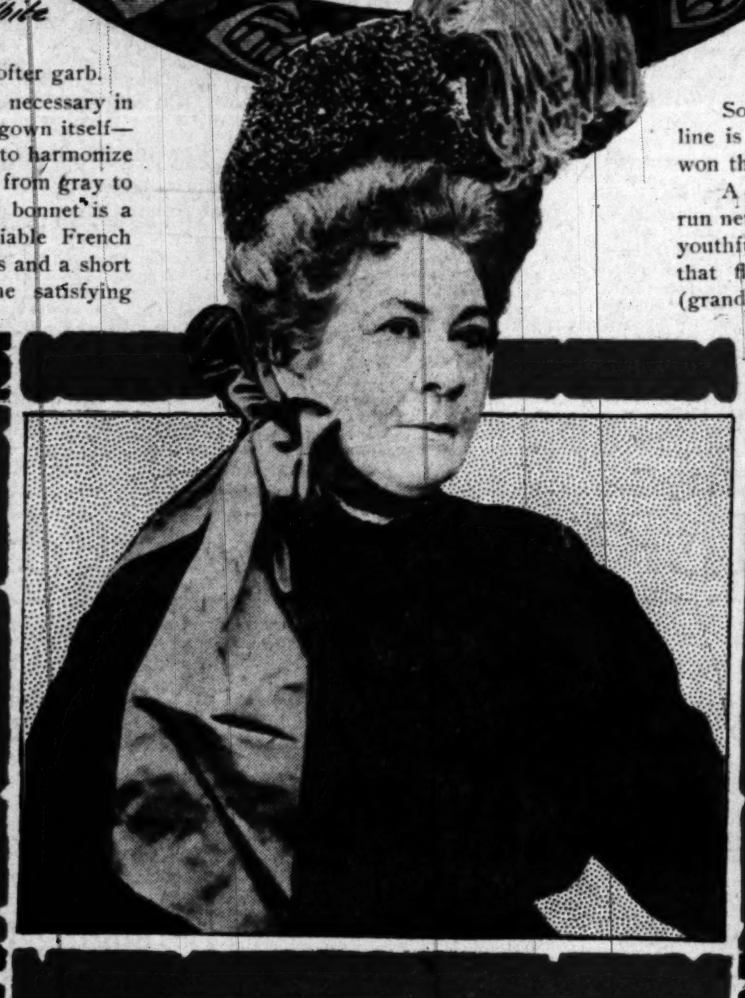


A Soft Lace Stock and Tie

LET it not be supposed that there are no fashions for the elderly woman because her little accessories are not tossed about on every counter. She is, to the contrary, the chosen person among all shoppers to whom the saleswoman bows, the consumer whose apparel gives the maker most concern.

While it must be admitted that ideas for the older woman are not so abundant as for those younger and more gay, her fashions are, at any rate, more exclusively her own and more carefully made. All those who have been privileged to shop and choose for a dear mother or grandmother will admit a vital interest in the task, a positive fascination in providing less harsh and more graceful garments. From the top of her head literally to the sole of her foot, grandmother needs the influence of the softer garb.

Perhaps even more is it necessary in the little things than in the gown itself—a gray bonnet, for instance, to harmonize with the hair now softening from gray to white. The coronet-shaped bonnet is a good example. It is in pliable French braid, with broad ribbon ties and a short willow- plume of the same satisfying shade. Let us not try to contrast it mentally with the harder colors, which are a blunder.



A Gray Bonnet to Harmonize with the Hair

The well-fitted bonnet is usually a tied-on model. Its strings help to hold it close to the head and guarantee to the wearer a tremendous advantage in comfort and in outline. A bonnet, to be perfect, should be so well placed upon the head as to seemingly melt into the hair. Fashion may vary the size and shape of the bonnet according to the prevailing mode, but nothing can obviate the necessity for its fitting the head. The undertrimmed bonnet is preferable to the overtrimmed. A tall aigrette will often heighten a bonnet becomingly, and a soft tulle bow across the back will very probably fill in a space or improve the line if grandma's hair is not so modern as mother's.

Bonnets like the two here shown are frequently made of neapolitan braids or plaques, crushed and folded into shape over a fitted wire frame. They hold many possibilities for the milliner, and into them may be worked all of the richly embroidered crowns and galons, the small feather decorations and straw or jeweled cabochons.

Necks are a serious consideration with the older women, who do not find comfort in the high, boned stock, and could not even consider the younger woman's stiff collar. Women who are none too erect will find the higher collar particularly uncomfortable.

Soft Spanish lace for the lowered neck line is a delight to the dear lady who has won the right to this ease and comfort.

A soft lace stock and tie made of hand-run net may successfully supplant the more youthful and up-to-date neck arrangements that flood the markets to the exclusion (grandmother sometimes thinks) of things suited to her advancing years. These stocks are folded once round the neck and tied in front over a pleated jabot of net. Duchess lace ties are used in the same way, or arranged in soft folds following a V-shaped opening at the throat; folded tulle also is a pretty finish, and one affected by many older women.

Grandma looks well in her white cap worn with any of these pretty laces. The cap is usually a little affair, frilled and beribboned with white, black or lavender. Caps are altogether charming on snow-white hair, and a most necessary fashion when the hair is thin.

The comfort of a matronly apron is most appealing to the home-loving housewife who clings to the habit of "saving the front of her gown." The real grandma, when we can find her, has such dear, sweet, old-timy ways about her that it is a pure delight to dress her.

THE GRANDMOTHER IN THE HOME

ONE of the numerous and divers ways by which the Chinese and the Mongolian races in general keep us in mind of the fact that they are our antipodes is the eminence accorded to the grandmother of the household. As a child the oriental woman is the fag of her brothers; she is sold by her parents in marriage without consulting her inclination. The wife is the overwrought drudge of husband and sons, of less value in their eyes than the beasts that perish. But as a mother-in-law she may be said to get her innings. The grandmother rakes in medals and orders by the score. Hers is the most luxurious seat; hers are the choicest tidbits at meals, and her will is law for the whole family. Without ever hearing of the Christian Scriptures, the oriental obeys literally the injunction to "rise up before the hoary head and to honor the face of the old."

It would be laughable if it were not pitiful to make careful note of the absolute unlikeness of these pagan practices to modern American point of view and behavior with regard to the granddame of the family. One hears and reads constantly the lament from sentimental admirers of the former generation that "we have no more old women." The dear old grandmother of blessed memory who sat in the corner, enthroned in the armchair, her feet upon a cushioned stool, is, as a species, as extinct as the dodo. Who ever sees a real old lady's cap atop of the hoary head?

Twenty-odd years ago, when I knew far less than now and thought I knew far more, the editor of a popular magazine asked me to take charge of a department in his monthly and to suggest the trend and title of the same. I brought forward as a novelty which was sure to take, "Armchair and Footstool." He laughed in my face:

"My dear lady! who would read it? The armchair was banished to the garret long ago, and the footstool split up for kindling wood."

He was wiser in his generation than I in mine. And, like the resolute optimist I am, I take pleasure in recognizing in the banishment and demolition aforesaid a sign that the period of human usefulness is lengthening in our century. We, upon whose head the years have let fall white feathers in passing (they called them "ashes" fifty years ago!) decline to regard them as tokens of decaying mental and physical powers. We do well to fight away from the infirmities of old age. We do better in denying stoutly that the words are synonyms.

My plea today is for the dignity, the beauty, the usefulness! of grandmotherhood. The disposition to set her counsels at naught and to relegate her to the ranks of the supernumeraries has forced her to assert her right to respectful notice. If she tries to deceive acquaintances and society as to her age, what wonder! Respecting her as I do, it hurts me to see her accentuate her lack of middle-age comeliness by dressing in the style of her granddaughter. But I do not despise the motive that makes her do it. I may long to tell her that to fill her wrinkles with powder produces the effect of a flurry of snow upon a fallow field. It outlines the worn furrows that might else not have been noticed. All the same, if her juniors did not make "old" an epithet of contempt, she would not resort to the powder nor make occasions to remark that her family "all grew gray at an absurdly early age." If you, dear children, did not despise her accumulated years, she would not be ashamed of them.

It was Elihu, the youngest of Job's friendly visitors, who reminded his companions that "Days should speak and a multitude of years should teach wisdom." But the land of Uz was in the benighted and ancient orient.

I wish I did not know families in which contempt for wrinkles and gray hairs did not hinder the younger members from imposing burdens upon grandmother that try her impaired powers cruelly. I have in mind more than one, or six, where she is child's nurse, seamstress and general hack.

All the odds and ends of tasks her juniors shirk as tedious and distasteful are shunted off upon her willing shoulders. She is past the age of party-going and music-loving and dinner-giving and enjoying. She has been told kindly that she "prefers home to junketing, and that no other place is so dear as her own fireside," until she really believes that she said it at the beginning. Her daughter told me last week that "Mother has the sole charge of baby (aged 10 months) at night. She knows so much better how to manage her than I do that it is the greatest imaginable comfort to me when I am out in the evenings to think she is safe and comfortable." It leaked out presently that baby is nervous and a poor sleeper. "But for dear mother," she added, "I should be a wreck. Mother doesn't mind losing her sleep."

I had known the daughter all her life, and I asked her in the temporary absence of the grandmotherly drudge from the room (she had gone to the kitchen to warm baby's milk)—I ventured, I say, to intimate that physicians forbid old people to sleep with children, believing it to be prejudicial to the health of the latter.

My hostess smiled pity of my narrow views.

"All four of my babies have slept with mother from the time they were weaned. She will not hear of their doing anything else. It would break her heart were the privilege denied her. Isn't that true, mother?" as the nurse re-entered the room.

Shall I ever forget the sad appeal of the withered face turned to me when the question was explained?

"There is so little an old woman can do for those about her!" she pleaded, in a frightened tone, her thin, veinous hands shaking until the milk in the bottle had little waves on the surface. "I beg my daughters not to make me feel as if I were quite laid on the shelf!"

I was favored not long ago with a glimpse of a letter written by a woman to whom I had unwittingly given offense by something I had printed, or failed to print, in the Exchange. One count of the indictment against me was that I "actually grovel to grandmothers." If I did not "grovel" to this martyr, I bowed to her in spirit.

Grandmother may be "wonderful for her age." Nevertheless, the "age" is upon her, and her vigor must be considered as processes of which you are, as yet, ignorant, so far as your health and staying power are concerned. You have recuperative powers that are not vouchsafed to one who has passed the meridian of life. Grandmother has no invested stocks upon which dividends are declared as a part of her income of vitality. If she gets very tired, she draws directly upon her capital. If she could appreciate the truth of this it would be well for her. If you would bear it in mind you might spare her pain and discomfort. When you overexert yourself, temporary inconvenience, maybe a brief illness, may be the penalty of transgressing nature's law of self-preservation. What is a "break-down" in your case is a "break-up" in hers. She cannot struggle back quite to the point from which she slipped. And every time she slips the return is more difficult.

This physical law may help to explain why old persons are frequently crabbed and irritable. How far the younger people with whom her lot is thrown for the rest of her life are responsible for "crankiness" and for morbidness that sometimes degenerates into confirmed melancholia is a question you, her grandchildren, would act wisely and humanely in considering.

"After all, boys," struck in a collegian, after listening uneasily to an "experience meeting" that had the shortcomings of fathers in the matter of allowances for a topic, "don't let us lose sight of the fact that they are vertebrate animals and fellow-beings!"

Grandmother has had a hard journey and a long one. If, by dint of Christian fortitude and unselfish desire to brighten the lives of those about her, she maintains a tolerable show of cheerfulness and sympathetic interest in the happenings of your lives, give her due credit for it. Don't "leave her out of the game." Regard her as a vertebrate animal, not a freak; as your fellow-being and not a fossil.

THE HOUSEMOTHERS' EXCHANGE

A Delightful Communication

I AM hoping to see the coveted recipes for Danish dishes week after week. If the Danish members of the Exchange who promised them have written, I know I do not hope in vain, for some day there will be "room" for them.

Your "Fair Linen" article was timely. I have just come in from hanging out my "linen," which is almost entirely cotton. Thanks to a "talk" from you upon linens some years ago, I am now a better judge of linen than then, and more successful with my purchases.

You wrote of the impossibility of the average family having fresh undergarments daily. If the busy housemother is willing to forego the delight of "fluffy ruffles" for everyday wear for the dearer pleasure of clean underclothing each day, I will tell her how it may be done—or, better still, how I do it.

First, I buy six union suits of lisle, mercerized, or just plain cotton. They are sleeveless and tight-kneed. Mine are mercerized cotton this summer, and are soft and silky. Every afternoon, when I bathe and dress for the evening, I don a fresh suit. If I am going out, or am dressing for more ordinary occasions, I have "nice things" to wear.

Next morning I put on the union suit again, for it has been airing all night before an open window. The suit that was doffed the day before is washed out in a pail in the bathroom, carried down to the gas range and boiled in suds in the same pail. After a good rinsing and drying it is ready for wear. No pressing or ironing is needed.

I suppose one could get along with two suits, but I've never tried it. Four or six are better, for it may rain, and the charm of the garment is the freshness that comes from the sun and the sweet air. Or one may be busy or going out. Then, two or three suits may be washed at once. You see, they aren't really dirty, only damp, and they don't require much rubbing. Stockings are washed in the same way. It takes but a minute to press them with a warm iron.

Fresh undergarments are absolutely necessary to me on account of a delicate skin that is easily irritated, and this is the way I solved the problem for myself long ago.

Speaking of hanging out clothes: Did you ever do it, and in the country? Last summer I visited my sister in her country home. She has wide, green lawns, and every Monday I simply reveled! Why, we almost quarreled as to which of us should hang out the clothes. There were roses and, later on, old-fashioned pinks, sweet williams and many other flowers to mingle their fragrance with the soft airs that swayed the linen which was really "fair." It was pure joy to fold those clothes on the turf that never knew a smudge of soot. (They burn hickory wood out there. Just think of it!)

But of what interest is this to you, dear Lady of the Loving Letters? Forgive me for taking up so much of your time.

I've had a few things for a long time that I have been ashamed to offer because they are so small. Now I'm ashamed of having waited so long.

First, a number of woolen pieces—samples of men's suitings, all new. Some are six by four inches; others are smaller. They might do for a quilt for some needy person.

Second, some soft pieces of old lawn (white) for dressing wounds or sores.

Third, an instruction book for the mandolin.

I will send any or all of them to needy persons living outside of Chicago, but if any one wants them who is a resident of the city and can call, she will please do so.

Do you know of any one in Englewood who is unable to go out to the parks and would like an occasional drive? Some invalid, or an old lady or gentleman? We have a surrey and we would be glad to take some one with us on our drives if they do not object to children, for, of course, we must take them!

N. R. L. ("Jane," Chicago).

The writer says truly that hers is a long letter. So long it is that I should not have thought myself justified in publishing it had not every section told a story to me that I hope and believe others will appreciate with me.

Here is a woman who makes all of a life full of homely duties into "one grand, sweet song." She finds poetry in washing day, contending with her sister for the delight of hanging out clean clothes in the "sweet air" and spreading them upon the untainted turf. She loves pretty clothes—"nice things"—but she sees more beauty in "fair linen," even when it is "almost entirely cotton."

She is one of the rare creatures who would make herself happily at home in the great African desert and find out a way to keep clean there. She is not ashamed to wash her own household linen and undergarments, although she can afford to keep a horse and take time to drive the children out into the parks on summer afternoons. Lastly, her big heart takes in the infirm and the indigent. The outings will be sweeter to her if the back seat hold a woman well stricken in years, or a man bowed under the weight of disease and poverty.

What our heroine does is possible to each and all of us, dear fellow-workers in life's common ways. Her resolute and even joyous optimism "may be measurably a matter of temperament," do you say? Granted! and if your temperament be less sanguine, bring will power to bear in the determined effort to get all the good that can be extracted out of

The trivial round, the common task.

"What God hath blessed call not thou common or unclean," was the admonition to the Hebrew who followed the tradition of his fathers. And in making the best of daily homely tasks and trials we shall find specks of virgin ore. Our optimist digs it out by the nugget.

For the Drink Habit

Drink good sweet milk by the quantity! On awaking in the morning drink one pint—slowly, so as not to have it curdle on an empty stomach. Every three hours of the day get down another pint. Keep this up for ten days and the desire for strong drink will be gone, and the coat of the stomach, which was impaired by the fiery draughts, will be healed.

CITIZEN (Noblesville, Ind.).

So writes a man in all good faith and with a laudable end in view. I do not vouch for the efficacy of the regimen. But as I read it, there recurred to my mind the saying of an eminent physician of the old school in prescribing cod liver oil when it was a novel remedy, even to the profession:

"I do not promise that it will cure consumption. I do predict that if the patient who has taken it faithfully should die of the disease, he will die fat."

The milk cure is well worth a trial.

The Vexed Question Again

That was a good suggestion of the New York correspondent that "factory rules be adopted with servants."

Of course, that would mean ten hours, instead of the average twelve or fourteen, or even more; and on the stroke of the hour—quitting time—the "girls" could put on their hats and go home or where they please, as they do in other lines of work.

How would the snobs and aristocrats like that? I think the maids would prefer this system to the present, even if they did not get the high wages sometimes paid. A good deal of work could be accomplished, as in factories, and the vexed question might be a thing of the past.

I should like to give it a good trial with my own servants.

MARY BROWN (Porterville, Cal.).

If factory rules are engrafted upon our present system of domestic service, let us be consistent in the change and have "night shifts" as well as day workers when need requires. Moreover, the "docking" rule will be introduced. When Bridget hangs over the back gate for half an hour flirting with the good-looking policeman on that beat, or when she goes upstairs to tidy herself up for the afternoon and treats herself to a twenty-five-minute nap, or sits down at the table in the cool kitchen she had "red up" to her satisfaction, to write a letter to the old country upon the stationery she has "conveyed" from her employer's desk, she must be prepared to account for the wasted hours and submit to the deduction from her wages of a sum representing that waste.

But why argue seriously upon this point? Domestic service is not factory life. It never can be run along the same lines for a hundred reasons patent to every intelligent housemother.

Questions for Our Painters to Answer

1. Which do you use first on furniture that has been sandpapered and which is ready for finish, the stain or the filler? If the filler be colored, would it still be necessary to use the stain?

2. What is a good wax, or something that may be used to fill cracks, holes, dents, etc.? Something that may be colored to match the wood?

3. Must one stain mahogany that has been scraped down to the natural wood color? If it be an old piece of furniture, how would it look to finish it up in the natural wood?

4. What is a good stain with which to cover up restored parts on mahogany and cherry furniture so that the restorations will not show?

5. In using oxalic acid to take out stains, does it change the color of the part "treated," so that one would have to go over the whole piece to make all look alike?

6. Is it best to use a paste or a liquid filler, and may the paste filler be thinned or colored the same as liquid fillers?

7. When steel wool gets filled with wood, etc., can one clean it so that it may still be used?

8. Tell me of a good stain for cherry furniture that has been scraped down to the natural wood.

C. E. B. (South Columbia, N. Y.).

All of the above queries are respectfully passed along to the practical painters who have once and again come to our help in similar exigencies. Not being painter, cabinet maker or renovator of old furniture, I confess myself unable to cope with the problems set before me by our energetic correspondent.

Arranging Flowers on the Table

FOR the adornment of the dinner table the form that gives much result for the least energy is the flower decoration. The rules for design can be made use of by the hostess when this part of her work confronts her. There should be an important spot in the decorative scheme, and the rest of the design should be connected with this central idea. The eye should be held by a large group of flowers and wander off to the contributing smaller ones, only to return to the main patch of color.

A very easy arrangement of flowers is a large, flat, circular bank secured in the following way: Upon a circular or oval tray, with depth enough to hold water, place a smaller circular pan or dish. Bank the flowers in the latter, adding a touch of green asparagus. On the flat tray arrange the flowers, with the blooms outward. Be sure to cover the holder in each case. A circular mat of greens can be placed upon the tablecloth, framing the tray. Little individual bouquets for the women and boutonnieres for the men may be placed at each plate.

For a long table two masses can be well used. Frequently long window-boxes can be made to furnish a high, oblong decoration. The low, rectangular form is often built on a discarded pasteboard suit box, which holds a dish and is hidden from view by a covering of white paper and the flowers. Generally speaking, a low decoration is desirable. At a dinner party each guest likes to see his hostess and his companions. This flat form also enables the all-seeing eye of the hostess to keep everything in her range of vision. One color with green or white is the best idea to follow when selecting the blooms. The flowers and the candle-shades should match or harmonize.

If these few hints anent table decoration be followed, an artistic effect will generally result.

Markets and Marketing

BEFORE the day of the produce dealer and the Italian fruit vender marketing was a fashion. Indeed, the housewife who did not "market" knew not, her neighbors said, the first principles of economy. And right they were, those neighbors.

No woman who buys over the telephone wire, orders by postcard, gives her message at her own front door to the butcher's or grocer's boy, or who sends her lately arrived maid with a verbal order can possibly expect to buy as well or as reasonably as the old-time housemother who, with bag in hand and keys at her belt, held sway in her own pantry and ruled the market man between whiles.

Markets and marketing methods have undergone a change. They vary in every community. Stalls are open to the public daily or biweekly as the case may require. Marketing once a week with plan and purpose has been crowded out in most places by the hand-to-mouth methods of housekeeping consequent upon flat life and apartment-house space (or lack of it).

There still are towns in which the old-time market stalls, with their country proprietors, fill the market house with a quiet but intent barter and exchange; where gorgeous fruits and vegetables are piled high, and where it still is permissible, and even fashionable, to inquire from stall to stall in search of the lower price.

There are villages in which street markets are held on the curbstone, around some open square. Each farmer's wagon is backed up and emptied of part of its contents, which is spread out on temporary tables brought by the farmer.

Nova Scotia's green markets are interesting to the traveler, whose eye is at once drawn to the gorgeous floral display. The Indians of the province fasten short-stemmed flowers to pasteboard backgrounds in some cross or heart-shaped pattern, sticking each stem through a hole in the pasteboard. These are sold by their primitive makers, lined up along the sidewalk. All of the market merchants squat on the curbstone and display their garden-grown stuff, much of it prepared for cooking. The Nova Scotian housewife brings a lidless basket, which she fills with topped carrots and beets carefully cleaned and polished, and peas and beans ready to put in the pot. These, of necessity, are a few cents more than the unprepared vegetables concealed in the background. This preparing of vegetables is done in some of our own markets, more particularly in the foreign quarters, where some of the stall women spend their spare time shelling peas or paring chestnuts while they guard their property from the passing thief.

Correct Method of Dusting

IN THIS scientific age the affairs of housekeeping can be conducted along correct, sanitary lines. It will, in most cases, be found that little duties in the work of the home will have better and more lasting results if the sensible voice of experience be heeded.

The object of dusting is to remove the dry particles from the furniture and from the house. Any method which clears the polished table of its layer of dirt and still allows the dust to remain in the room is decidedly wrong. These atoms will fill the air, and finally will settle upon their first resting place. How, then, can the housekeeper quickly and efficiently clean her furniture?

In the first place, the duster should be large and of soft material. It is not advisable to use the frayed, torn remnant of a skirt, as the edges carry the dust to other wood. A successful method is that which moistens one end of the duster and rolls this inside the remainder of the cloth. The dampness is distributed, and a dustless dusting will be the satisfactory result. All of the little particles of dust are caught and held in the damp pad. There will be no shaking in the open air and its resultant inrush of dust. The cloth must be washed and hung up to dry. A clean one should always be ready for the next dusting.

For very fine furniture an oil, w may be procured at any furniture er's, should be used. Just a dr

BWANA HUMPTO IN AFRICA

BWANA HUMPTO FIRES AS THE RHINO CHARGES

By Raber Mundorf

"GOOBOO tells me, father," said Photo Humpto, "that the hide of a rhinoceros, when properly dried, can be made into shields, and that the skin may also be prepared so as to have the mottled, translucent appearance of tortoise-shell. Oh, why did I not jab the rhinoceros in the back with my penknife while he was giving me that thrilling ride the other day? Then I could have sliced up his hide and made it into little shields for the boys of Gooboo's tribe and into dandy hair combs for the girls. And I am sure, father, that with one of these shields I could even defend myself against the attack of bloodthirsty mosquitoes and gnats."

Elephant Hunter, overhearing Photo's remark, smilingly remarked: "I fear that a penknife is hardly the weapon to use in killing a rhinoceros. Once upon a time I shot a big bull rhino right through the head. After it plunged to the ground a Kaffir, who attended me, thrust his assegai into the supposedly dead animal and commenced to cut up the body. Suddenly the rhino struggled to its feet and walked away, although terribly wounded. It is very likely your shields and combs would escape you in similar fashion."

But Bwana Humpto, wishing not to discourage his son, observed that a rhino hunt would be organized immediately, and that Photo could do as he pleased with the hide. While plans were being discussed, Doctor Pillo said to the boy:

"Here is a little verse about a rhino, which I should like to have you memorize:

"My Rhino in the wood,
We would kill you if we could.
And, dear Rhino, like as not,
You would simmer in a pot."

"I don't think I should like potted rhinoceros," responded Photo, "although I suppose it would be nicer than potted geranium to eat."

The hunting party now started to penetrate into the forest. Pretty soon a native reported that a rhino was nearby.

"Sounds like a cyclone," observed Photo, as they came upon the rhino carelessly tearing up with his horn bushes and trees, the leaves and roots of which he sought to eat. Then Photo took a snapshot.

Bwana Humpto raised his rifle and fired. But the rhino was so unpolite as to move, thereby having a tooth knocked out. He squealed, bent his head low and crashed through the reeds toward the brave hunter.

Looking coolly into the wicked red eyes of the rhino, Bwana Humpto again raised his rifle and fired. Then Photo Humpto took a snapshot. For the rhino was dead.

As the natives proceeded to hack and hew at the carcass, Photo sauntered further into the jungle. All at once he heard a great commotion. Peering through the trees, he saw a great rhinoceros.

"Has the animal been whitewashed, Trappo?" asked the lad of the naturalist, who followed closely in his rear.

"No, my boy," explained Trappo; "this rhino is white because he hasn't sense enough to possess the bluish lead color every self-respecting black African rhino owns."

Then Photo Humpto tried to take a snapshot. The animal moved hastily away, but Photo, not to be outwitted, shouted for his horse and rode rapidly after the rhino. Doctor Pillo called to the retreating lad:

"Here is a little verse of warning which I should like to have you memorize:

"Be very careful in the jungle.
Once a fellow made a bungle;
By mistake, he traveled south,
Right into a rhino's mouth."

Unfortunately, the boy did not heed the doctor's warning. He followed pell-mell after the white rhino, taking no heed as to direction. This was exactly what the wily beast desired. A chum he was of the rhino that had been slain, and he was determined to entrap one of his enemies in the jungle. Always keeping a safe distance between himself and his pursuer, he led the way for hours. The afternoon waned, the brief period of twilight passed before Photo hardly was aware of it, and night was upon him. Far away were his friends—where, Photo did not know. He was hopelessly lost. The white rhinoceros had well played his game thus far.

Squeal after squeal from the rhino now echoed through the forest. It was a signal for the appearance of countless numbers of wild beasts. Summoned by the rhino, they gathered about the horseman in a wide circle, glaring ominously upon him.

"What shall we do with him?" asked the lion severely.

"Let's make a stew of him," chanted the others in chorus.

Photo looked about him for an avenue of escape. None was open. There were several nice trees conveniently near. These were already occupied by troops of monkeys, however, and the surly fellows forbade the boy to intrude.

Photo gave up in despair. "I'm done for; I suppose I'm in for a pretty stew," he groaned, "and this fierce orang-outang approaching must be the cook." Then he cried:

"Oh, if I could only take a snapshot of this assembly of ferocious beasts!"

He leveled his kodak as he spoke.

The effect was magical. Far and wide among the beasts of field and forest had the fame of the snapshotter spread. Deeply humiliated at having threatened such a renowned person, the animals whimpered their apologies and disappeared in the jungle.

All that night Photo Humpto wandered between the Athi river and the Uganda Railway. In the morning he was found by natives and led back to his father's camp, near Machakos. Bwana Humpto reprimanded his son for not carrying his weapons constantly.

"Father," solemnly replied the boy, "I shall do as you wish; yet I have found my precious kodak the safest weapon in the world."

Then Photo Humpto took a snapshot

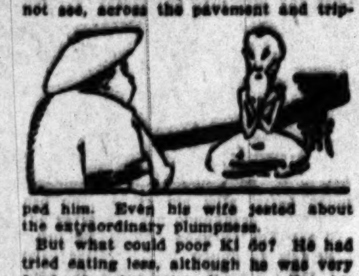
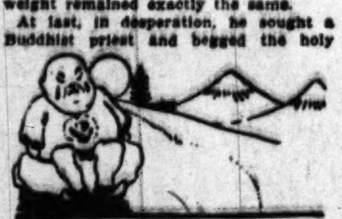
Chinese Legend of the Fat Man

SO FAT was Ki-Sou-Lea, a well-known merchant of Pekin, that when he walked his protruding stomach was at least twenty seconds ahead of the rest of his body. The good Chinaman did not like being fat, because his friends mocked him and bad boys stretched ropes, which he could not see, across the pavement and tripped him. Even his wife jested about the extraordinary plumpness.



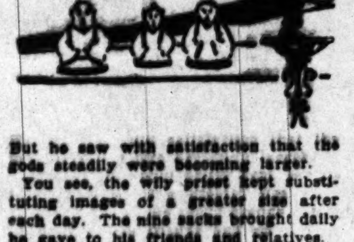
But what could poor Ki do? He had tried eating less, although he was very fond of substantial dinners. Yet his weight remained exactly the same.

At last, in desperation, he sought a Buddhist priest and begged the holy man to relieve him of his distress. The old priest heard without smiling the prayers of Ki. Then he led him before three stout, ugly gods, carved from jade. As the gods began to move their heads stiffly to and fro the priest turned to the merchant and said to him encouragingly:



"It is a good sign. The mighty gods have deigned to tell of a way by which thou mayst become as graceful as the bamboo and as supple as a reed. Each morning thou must carry from thy home to this temple three sacks of rice, which thou must place before the gods. Each noon thou must bear to the gods three sacks filled with meats, and each evening three sacks containing pastries. The gods will condescend to eat the food, and as they increase in size so shalt thou grow thinner."

Ki promised to obey the commands of the gods. Three times a day he toiled from his house to the temple with his burdens of food. It was hard work, and the merchant puffed and groaned and rested many times during each trip.



But he saw with satisfaction that the gods steadily were becoming larger.

You see, the wily priest kept substituting images of a greater size after each day. The nine sacks brought daily he gave to his friends and relatives.

By reason of his difficult exercise, Ki continued to lose flesh until nothing but bones was left of him. Then his friends mocked him anew, calling him a skeleton. And so Ki was no better off than before; rather was he poorer because of the many well-filled sacks presented to the gods.

Ki-Sou-Lao is now striving to become fat.

With the Help of Aunt Hepzy

THE Brinton girls—their brother, too, for that matter—pronounced their mother's ancient Aunt Hephzibah as hopelessly old-fashioned. But her visit hadn't lasted a week before they regarded her as well-nigh indispensable into the bargain.

It was just as Mrs. Brinton said: "Aunt Hepzy always had the knack of making something out of next to nothing."

"But you can't make much out of a rainy Saturday," remarked Elsie. "I'm really tired watching the water drip, drip, drip from those worm-eaten leaves," pointing through the window. "Now, there are two things even YOU couldn't find use for—caterpillars and mock-oranges," finished Elsie, banteringly.

"I've darned many a stockin' on a yeller gourd," reflected Aunt Hephzibah; and after a pause of several minutes, "They'd make nice things for Holler Eve, seems to me—'most as good as some things in the shops."

"But that's weeks off yet," returned May, glancing up from her book.

"If you wait too long the shells 'll get hard," reminded the old lady. And, as an outcome of her suggestions, Elsie, May, and even George, enjoyed the opportunity which stormy days, even a wet Saturday, afforded for agreeable tasks.

George evinced real pleasure in scooping out the mock-oranges, and cutting eyes, nose and a mouth through the soft shells, transforming the despised yellow fruit into miniature Jack-o'-lanterns.

"When the time comes," said Aunt Hephzibah, "you can light the biggest ones with Christmas-tree candles cut in half."

It was surprising what unique favors the girls managed to make with the addition of tissue paper. Topped with peaked hats of black, some of them displaying orange-colored streamers, they had a row of grinning witch faces; while, for variety, other faces were framed in black frills with orange bows.

For a table centerpiece a long-necked witch was formed of two mock-oranges by fastening the stem ends together with a skewer and providing arms of cardboard. A voluminous skirt of orange paper, a black neck frill and pointed hat completed the costume of the grotesquely proportioned figure.

"She must have a broom," observed May. And her originality evolved a respectable implement from a skewer tipped with straws cut from an old whisk.

Some of the fruit was put away to dry, after which ludicrous faces in variety were painted thereon by Elsie. Cutting a gourd in half, the parts were punctured to permit the running through of narrow ribbon to form hinges. Thus were a number of boxes made, and lined with the crinkled paper. The stem ends, forming the lids, were decorated with paper bows.

Such gourds as offered but little further possibilities were strung together to be employed in the festooning.

"I've thought of something else," said Elsie one day to George, giving him a thin piece of wood, out of which he whittled two sets of arms and legs, one set much smaller than the other. With a little mock-orange for a head and a larger one for the body, completed with the wooden limbs and a neck frill of paper, a comical figure was constructed.

The small set of legs and arms was attached to a similar figure built of walnut shells, with features cut from yellow paper and gummed on. Then this little fellow was fastened by his head between the hands of the big goblin. "There!" exclaimed Elsie, attaching a rubber string to the head of the latter, "what do you think of our goblin jinglejack?"

"We mustn't forget some peanuts—the biggest we can find—and put teeny little dollies inside." So the nuts were halved carefully for removing the kernels and substituting the dolls. In others were placed strips of paper doubled in accordion folds, with one end gummed to the shell. The other half-shell was placed on, and the two bound together with baby ribbon. Each folded paper bore a legend supposed to be a description of some one's future partner.

George and the girls, with suggestions from Aunt Hephzibah, had plenty of fun originating the couplets. A few of those, to be tied in with black ribbon, ran in this wise:

Pigeon-toes, a turned-up nose—behold your future wife.
Without a care, a jolly pair, you'll jog along through life.

Thin as a pin, the lass you'll win;
All day in an automobile she'll spin.

You'll wed a maid with sweet brown eyes,
Who'll feed you every day on pies.

Among the yellow-ribboners were to be found the following effusions:

A husband learned, witty and wise,
And wearing goggles on his eyes.

A man to be proud of, so noble he'll be,
And measuring very near six feet three.

Your destined lord is fond of shrimps,
And wears his hair in little crimps.

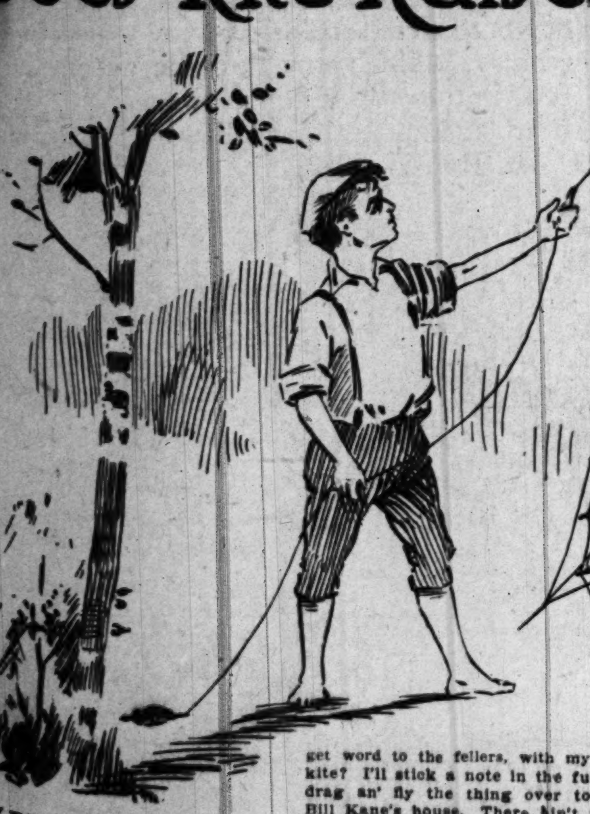
Fine Only on Sabbath

ANDREW CARNEGIE tells a story of a little boy who caddied for him on the St. Andrews golf links.

"Angus," said Mr. Carnegie to his caddie, "the leaves are falling, and the green is turning red and brown. Winter will soon be upon us. And do you get much caddying to do in the winter, Angus?"

"Na, na," replied Angus, blowing his nose and frowning gloomily. "There's nae muckle caddyin' in winter. If it's no snow, it's frost; if it's no frost, it's snaw; if it's neither frost nor snaw, it's rain, and if it's fine, it's sure to be the Sawbath."

Joe's Kite Raises a Siege



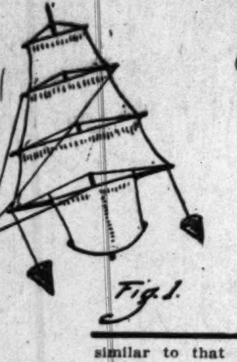


Fig. 1.

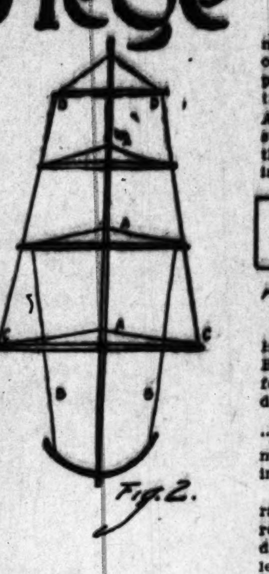

Fig. 2.

"JIMINY! Look what's comin'!" exclaimed Shorty.

Joe Stanton paused in the mending of his kite and looked, with the other, through the thick bushes which fringed the little island at Pirates' Cove. What he saw caused him to be as much alarmed as was Shorty.

"It's the 'Bloody Pirates'!" he cried; "believin' all us 'Robbers' was away, they've come over here to steal our island!"

Nearer came the scow, poled by the two huskiest "Bloody Pirates." Shorty and Joe now could distinguish their enemies clearly. The pair of "Robbers" consulted for a moment. Then, with one accord, they threw a volley of rocks directly at the oncoming boat. Yells of pain and dismay showed the accuracy of their aim. And the scow rested in midstream while the "Pirates," in turn, held consultation.

"We've bluffed 'em," observed Shorty, "but there's no tellin' how long they'll stay bluffed. An' it'll be all up with us if they rush us, 'cause we're only two to a dozen of them. Can't you think of somethin'?"

"No, I can't," slowly replied Joe. Then his face brightened suddenly and he cried:

"I've got it, after all. Why not let [illegible] a message, or try at least to get word to the fellers, with my ship kite? I'll stick a note in the funnel-drag an' fly the thing over toward Bill Kane's house. There ain't much wind, an' if I kin get the kite over that far I kin drop it easy enough where Bill or some of the other fellers will see it all righty."

"Bully! fine!" ejaculated Shorty. "You fly the kite an' I'll chuck a few rocks every now an' then at the 'Pirates' so's to let them believe there's a whole lot of 'Robbers' hidin'."

This plan was carried out to perfection. Joe sped to the safe side of the island, where, with his usual skill, he soon had the kite flitting in the air high above the creek. Deftly he maneuvered until the messenger kite was near Bill Kane's home, as well as Joe could make out from a distance. Here he permitted it to flutter to the ground.

Of course, some of the "fellers" were prompt to discover the kite. The little note tucked into the wind-anchor was quickly found, and within a few minutes a squad of "Bloody Robbers" was on the way to the creek. Soon their enemies, the "Pirates," were routed, and the Cove, which the "Robbers" had captured from the "Pirates," still remained in the "Robbers'" possession.

"You see, boys, a kite is of some use besides bein' nice for flyin'," Joe said with pride.

Following are a few instructions regarding the construction of a ship kite similar to that used by Joe to save Pirates' Cove:

One mast, four yardarms, a keel; thin, strong twine, sails and funnel-shaped wind-anchors are all that are required. The mast is 36 inches in length, the top spar 12, the lowest one 24 and the two middle ones in proportion to the length of the side strings.

The keel is made from a thin piece of a hard wood, such as hickory. Soak it in boiling water for a few minutes, then lash it fast to the bottom of the mast, drawing up the ends with the strings, and carrying the ends up over two yardarms, so that the yardarm will not be drawn out of shape by the pressure of the keel. Clear and tough white or North Carolina pine will serve for the sticks, which should be three-eighths of an inch square for the mast, and the same size, but tapering at the ends, for the yardarms. For connections between spars and masts use strong cotton or linen twine, drawing the lines tight.

Strings are stretched and tied to the mast from the ends of the yardarms, so as to make an opening at the bottom of each sail.

Thin paper muslin should cover the frame. It should be sewed around the edges over the string ribs. Use no more material than is absolutely necessary.

In making the wind-anchors, employ thin wire or wood hoops, dropped in a funnel-shaped bag of paper muslin. The yoke is made of two strong cross-wires or strings, the drop strings fastening where they cross.

The Final Proof of Pluck

ALTHOUGH Jessie was always a brave little girl when put to the test, she was timid by nature and inclined at first to shrink from dangers presented to her. So, when she began to learn horseback riding she did not display the daring that brother Ned, her instructor, wished to see. After a very unsatisfactory performance, which Jessie ended by insisting she had spent enough time in her lesson, Ned exclaimed somewhat impatiently:

"That's just your way, Jessie! You've not an ounce of real grit. If I were even to ask you to spend three hours on a little burro, you'd flunk within an hour."

Jessie flushed, but said nothing. She knew she wasn't a coward, but she didn't think it necessary to learn to ride in one or two lessons. She preferred to be taught gradually. Yet her brother's remark cut Jessie to the quick.

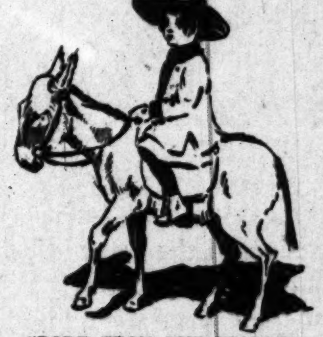
"I'll show him I'm just as brave as any other little girl," she muttered to herself.

A long while she considered what she could best do. Then, having made up her mind, she donned her riding skirt and started for the livery stable, where she could hire a burro.

It was late in the afternoon when Jessie, mounted on the diminutive burro, rode from the stable. From the town of Colorado Springs she rode. As she neared the beginning of the trail up Pike's Peak a shower burst from the clouds. But she resolutely clenched her teeth, and without a murmur suffered herself to be pelted by the rain. Thoroughly drenched she was when the showers ceased, but on she traveled just the same.

Following the winding trail, soon Jessie was out of sight of all habitations. No companion she had, save an occasional person walking upward along the tracks of the gravity road.

It was not long before Jessie began to feel tired, but she never wavered. She even forced the burro to a quicker pace. For hours she rode, until she came to the halfway house up the mountain, where tourists were accustomed to rest awhile and take refreshment. The little girl dared not stop here, however, as she feared the questions that might be asked her.



"RODE FROM THE STABLE"

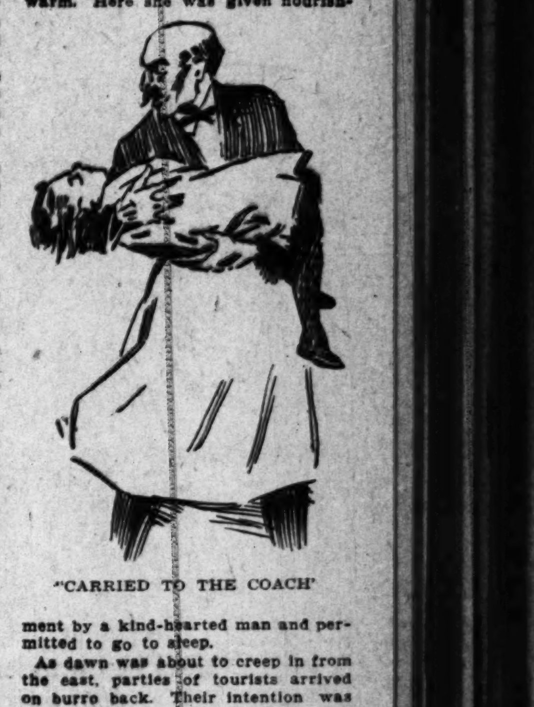
Still onward she went. As night fell she came in sight of a camp, where a party of tourists, under the care of guides, were settled to wait for midnight in order to resume their march. Jessie did not pause.

From this point the way led among boulders and stony slopes. The trees growing here were stunted; a chilliness was in the air. Up she rode, across the timberland, over a little plateau and then up steeps of loose rocks and boulders, covered only with moss and tiny bushes. The trail by now had grown indistinct, but Jessie trusted to the wisdom of her burro, who seemed to know by instinct the proper path to take.

The icy winds now penetrated to the bone. She clung desperately to the pommel of her saddle, while the burro, now almost as tired as herself, scrambled up inclines which seemed impossible for travel.

Hours passed as she rode through the darkness in this fashion. At pretty nearly every step of the patient little beast, Jessie lurched in her saddle. Would she ever reach the summit of the Peak? As she gazed upward it seemed to her that she saw her goal in plain view, but as she drew nearer it would prove to be a mere hummock of rocks thrown in relief against the sky.

Jessie afterward had no recollection of how she reached the little station at the top of Pike's Peak, and how, through a flurry of snow, she stumbled into a room that was comfortable and warm. Here she was given nourishment by a kind-hearted man and permitted to go to sleep.



"CARRIED TO THE COACH"

As dawn was about to creep in from the east, parties of tourists arrived on burro back. Their intention was to view the beautiful sunrise, such a one as Jessie had often longed to see from the Peak. But now she had no interest in sunrises. Too exhausted to move, she lay upon a couch roughly made in the corner.

The next morning Jessie was too weak to make the descent of the mountain upon her burro. When the gravity car arrived at the summit of the Peak, bearing a trainload of passengers, the lass was carried to the coach and stowed comfortably away there.

It was afternoon when she reached home. So tired was she that she could hardly move. But before she again fell asleep, she explained to her frightened parents and Ned exactly what she had done.

"Do you still think I'm a coward, Ned?" she asked in a whisper, before she closed her eyes.

"No, indeedy," the brother replied firmly, "you've proved your pluck in the best kind of a way, and I wish to recall everything I said about your stupidity in riding lessons."

Couldn't Harm Mice

A GENTLEMAN who lived in India had such a lot of mice running about his house that he told his native boy servant to buy six traps to catch the mice.

The boy did as he was told, and next morning he gleefully showed to his master a mouse in each trap.

The traps were set again, and another six mice were caught. The master told the boy to go on setting the traps and catching the mice, but after several weeks had gone by and the mice were just as plentiful as ever in the house, he called the boy to him and asked, "How many mice have you caught?"

"More than fifty," said the boy.

"What do you do with them?" then asked the master.

"I let them out again!" said the boy.

"Why, you should have killed them," said the master, laughingly.

"No, I never kill anything," said the native boy very solemnly.

He had been taught never to kill any creature whatever, so no wonder the mice got no fewer! He was a very nice boy, I think, to be so tender-hearted, but all the same I should not have liked to live in that house with all those mice. Would you?

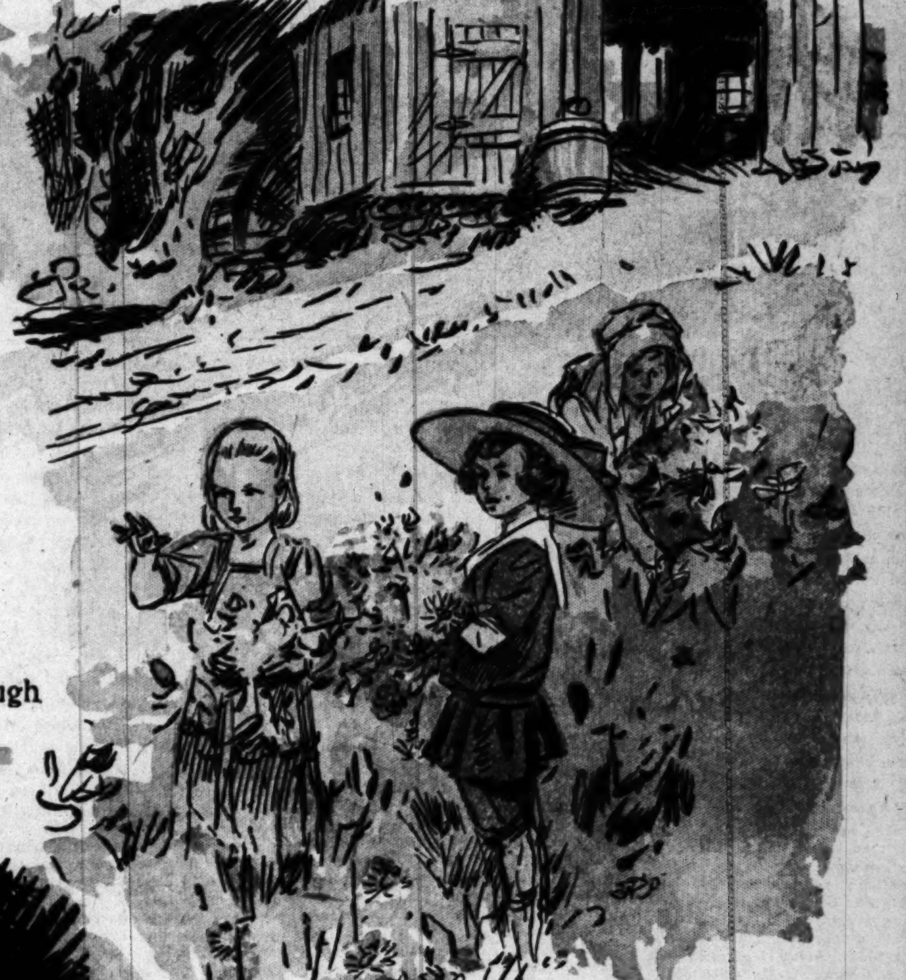
1.—Dear Grandpa's farm abounded in
All sorts of pretty flowers,
And Cynthia, in picking them,
Spent many happy hours.
She loved each kind devotedly,
And formed a plan one day
To get some help and gather in
The "biggest yet" bouquet.



2.—No boys were asked to go along,
We hardly need to state;
All know such things as flowers they Cannot appreciate.
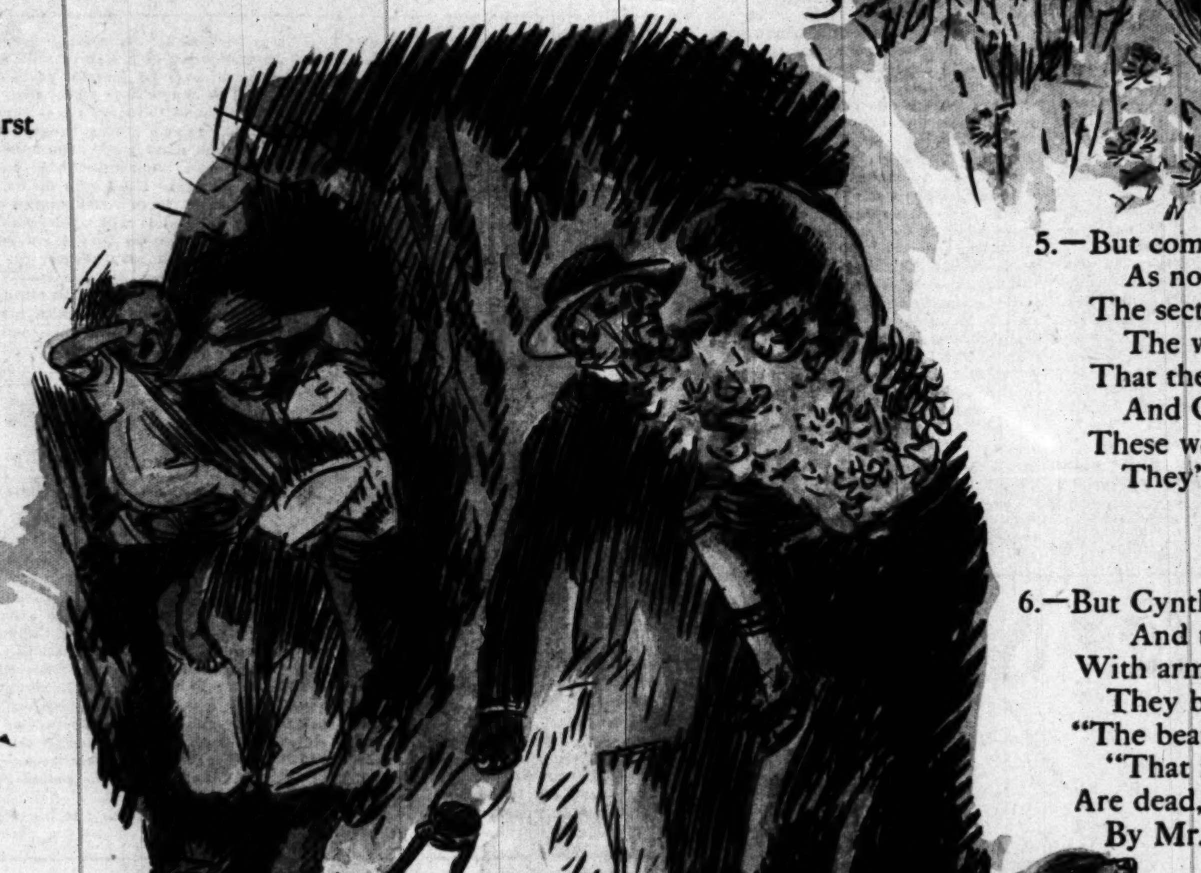
So little Cassy June was asked
And sister Lulu Ann;
They three she thought would be enough
To carry out the plan.

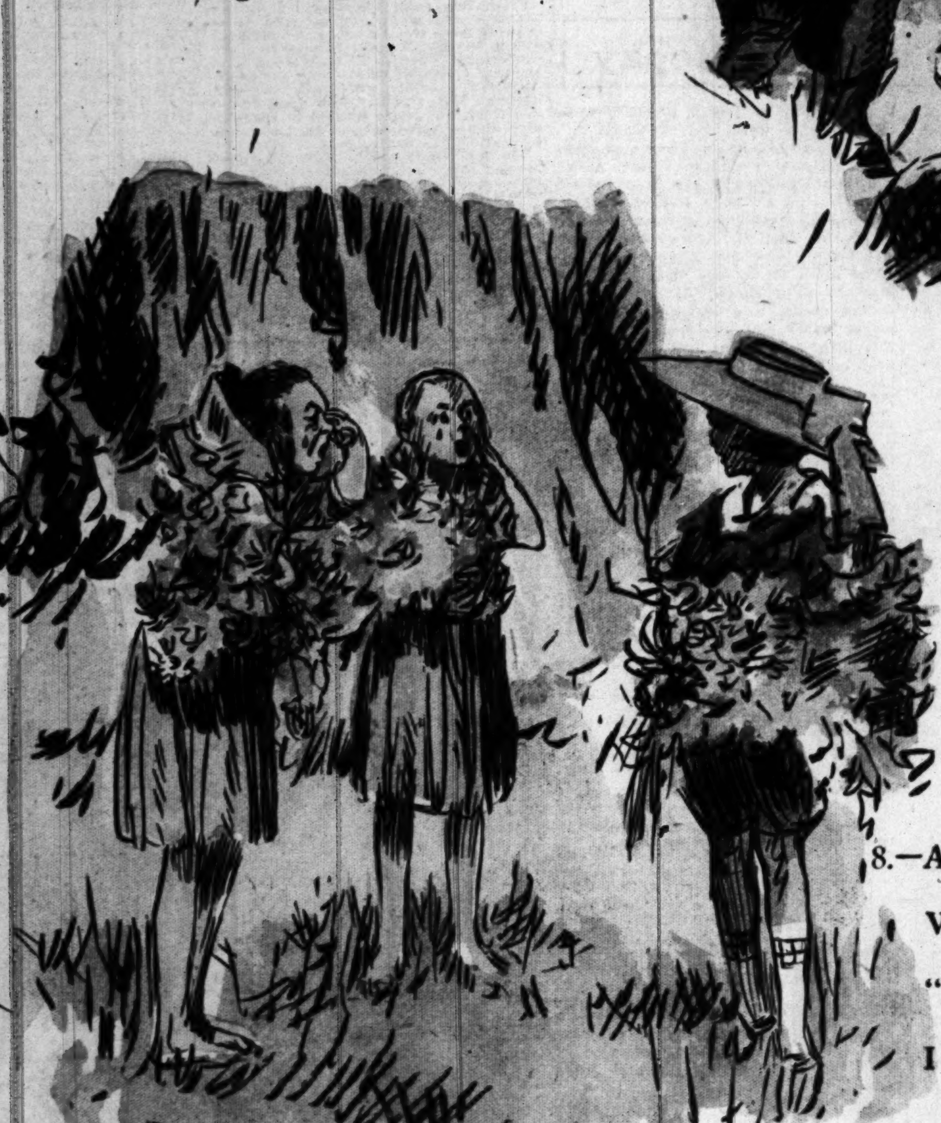
3.—They wandered through the meadow first
And down beside the mill;
Then Cassy said she knew a place,
Around behind the hill,
Where daisies in abundance grew:
And, plodding on and on,
They never stopped to calculate
The distance they had gone.



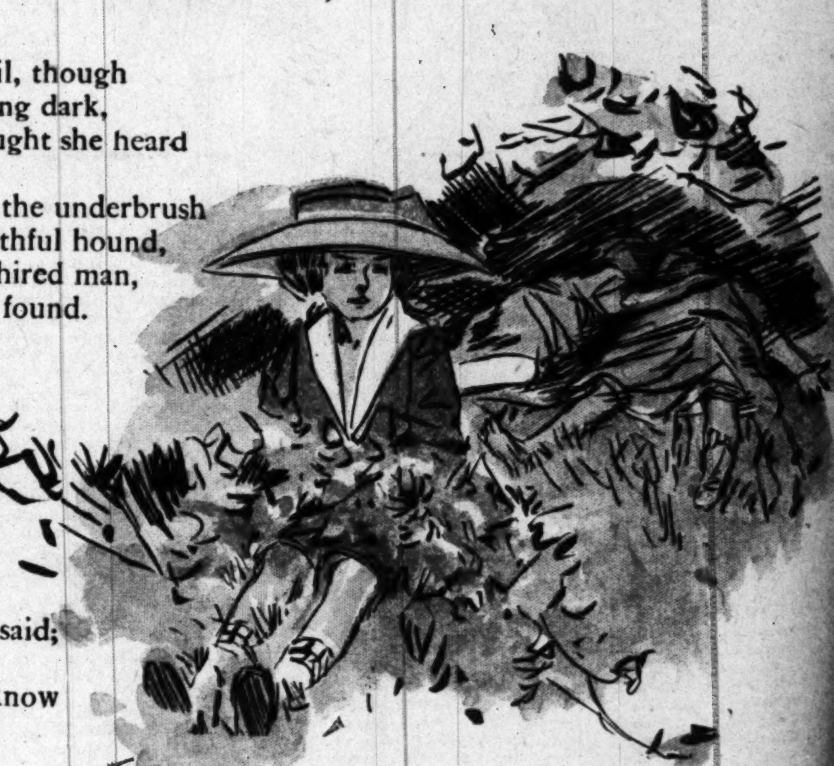
4.—They soon discovered they were tired
And had enough, they knew,
Of flowers, for their arms were filled
With every kind that grew.
While resting on a mossy bank
To Cynthia it occurred
That they had better start for home,
And so she gave the word.

5.—But complications now arose,
As no one seemed to know
The section they had traversed or
The way they'd ought to go.
That they were lost they fully knew,
And Cassy said, "Oh, dear!
These woods are full of lions and bears;
They'll eat us up, I fear!"

6.—But Cynthianna calmed their fright
And told them not to weep.
With arms about each other's necks
They both were soon asleep.
"The bears," said Cynthia, keeping watch,
"That in these woods once dwelt
Are dead, and all the lions killed off
By Mr. Roosey-velt.



7.—She bravely kept her vigil, though
The woods were getting dark,
And in the distance thought she heard
The echo of a bark.
Then tumbling through the underbrush
Came "Dash," the faithful hound,
And Grandpa, with the hired man,
In joy that they were found.



8.—A cortege led by Grandpa then
Migrated toward the farm,
With Cynthia and a wagon load
Of flowers on his arm.
"These posies all are yours," she said;
"I'm sorry they're so few.
I knew you would be pleased to know
We picked them all for you."

EASY MONEY.

COLOGNE CATHEDRAL REPAIRED WITH PROCEEDS OF LOTTERY.

Cardinal Fischer,
most important Roman Catholic dignitary in the Kaiser's country, who is managing the public lottery organized for the benefit of Cologne Cathedral, over which he rules.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

ERLIN, Aug. 20.—Cologne Catheral, Mecca of thousands of Amerian tourists and Germany's great-architectural pride, is falling to n. On all sides of the gray, many-d structure looming high on the s of the Rhine tall, sacrilegiousing scaffolding, a network of gir-
and spars which completely hides beauties of the magnificent old
, offends the eye. The ravages of having finally becom. so acute t tremendous repair and recon-ction operations have been found ssary to save the cathedral from g to utter rack and ruin.
t is not this feature of the situa-
, however, which will strike Ameri-
s as queer or unusual, but the thod which has been resorted to for ing the funds required for carry-out the expensive repair work, for Catholic archdiocese of Cologne, most important of all the Father-
's Roman regions, had decided to a public lottery to secure the d money. The lottery will be nominally under the jurisdiction e Prussian department of the in-
, but will be actively administered e cathedral authorities headed by nal Fischer, one of Germany's red-capped ecclesiastical digni-
s is not the first time that this ar gambling institution, barred e United States and other couns criminal and immoral, has been d for the aid of Cologne Cathe-
. In fact, the cathedral treasury
e past has reaped an estimated profit of 1,000,000 marks ($250,- from lottery enterprises, insti-d at first to secure funds for com-g unbuilt sections of the strucand later for carrying out reof damages which have had a of appearing chronically at vari-parts. Other cathedrals in Ger-
, noting what a good thing e discovered in lotteries, have fically imitated its example, and drawing periods, and there is as much excitement throughout the country to know the winner or winners of the "great prize" of 1,000,000 marks, as there will be in America on election night next November. There are hundreds of lottery clubs—organizations whose members band together to speculate regularly in lottery tickets, dividing the cost and sharing the profits. The liveliest speculation is in the tickets of the Prussian State lottery, run by the Kaiser's own government for its own private profit. Governments of other Federal States in Germany also run lotteries. The official stamp on their operations, of course, inculcates public confidence. It is not considered gambling, but patriotism, to take a flyer in these State lotteries. One can buy a ticket for 75 cents which may win $25,000. Tickets are divided into quarters and halves, so that two or more persons may snare the expense and any resulting spoils. Countless churches, schools, orphanages, hospitals, blind and insane asylums, charitable institutions of every sort—even city halls, public libraries and fire stations belonging to municipal corporations—have been erected from the tolls of the gambling public. State permission is always required, but seldom withheld, for the sponsors—as in the case of the Cologne Cathedral authorities—are always eminently respectable persons in their respective communities.

Gaudy, persuasive advertisements are the favorite means of attracting public attention to a new lottery scheme. In a window of a lottery bureau in Unter den Linden this week your correspondent saw a flashy-colored poster, depicting in one corner the handsome church edifice which some impecunious congregation in East Prussia is wanting to put up—in the other a starving workman's family, father in rags, mother sobbing and nursing a brood of haggard children, empty dinner table, broken windows, through which chilly blasts are blowing, a composite of poverty and misery. Suddenly the door flies open and a postman is pictured rushing in, bearing the glad tidings that the starving family has just won "the great prize." Grand transformation, duly displayed in section three of the poster, shows the same family a couple of days later enjoying life in a steam-heated flat amid surroundings which would comfort Pierpont Morgan. It is this kind of balderdash that fills the hearts of the have-nots in Germany with a gnawing lust for wealth over night.

The State justifies its patronage and operation of lotteries on the ground that the gambling spirit is inborn in the people, and might as well be gratified with profit to the government, as spent on horse racing and cards from which the government can derive no spoils. There is, of course, sporadic protest against the lottery evil. Sermons and articles appear from time to time decrying the maintenance of an institution which other countries ban as illegal and immoral, but the lottery has come to Germany by inheritance, and it is probably here to stay.

Cologne Cathedral,
the state of the repairs on the famous German edifice, the expenses of which are being met by a public lottery.

Gossip of Interesting People.

Miss Blanche Oelrichs Is Betrothed to Diplomat.

Miss Blanche Oelrichs and Paul Rainey.

NEWPORT (R. I.) Aug. 22.—At a pretty bake club, Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Oelrichs announced the engagement of their younger daughter, Miss Blanche Oelrichs, and Mr. Leonard M. Thomas of Philadelphia.

In the accompanying picture Miss Oelrichs is seen alighting from her auto in Newport, accompanied by Mr. Paul Rainey, a friend of the family.

Miss Oelrichs is one of the most interesting girls in society, and her dark style of beauty has attracted much attention. She is fond of outdoor sports and plays a dashing game of tennis. She is the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Oelrichs, and is a sister of Mrs. Peter D. Martin, who is noted for her beauty, and of Charles De Loosey and Harry E. Oelrichs.

Mr. Thomas is a son of the late George C. Thomas, who was a member of the banking firm of Drexel, Morgan & Co. of Philadelphia. He was graduated from Yale in 1901, and has been an attaché of the Legation of the United States in Madrid and the Embassy in Rome.

HEREABOUTS.

J. G. BIERCK of Philadelphia, who has lived in the Quaker City for the past two years, has been at the Alexandria. He is the head of one of the biggest electrical engineering concerns in the East. Before going to Philadelphia he resided in New York. Therefore his compliments are worthy of consideration. "Los Angeles is one of the most delightful spots on the map," said Mr. Bierck. "This is my first visit to the Coast, but not my last, by a long jump. Heretofore I have always spent my summers in Europe. This year, friends suggested that I come West, and I followed their advice. I was truly amazed at the beauty of your city. The streets are clean, the buildings modern and well made. Los Angeles by moonlight is beyond description. I took an automobile drive through the suburbs and about the residence district the other night. The tropical foliage under the soft light of the moon, the artistic dwellings and the magnificent scenery made me feel as though I were living through one of the chapters of the 'Alhambra.'"

Col. Henry I. Kowalsky, one of the few men of the world to survive the fatal sleeping sickness, is a visitor in Los Angeles. Col. Kowalsky is an attorney of San Francisco, but also serves as a councilor to King Leopold of Belgium. While attending to affairs in Africa he contracted the terrible disease. He would go to sleep during an argument in court, at dinner, or, in fact, on any and all occasions. While on board a steamship he met a little Frenchman, and to him Kowalsky owes the cure. The Frenchman watched the afflicted man for some time, and then, with many apologies, suggested that he knew of a remedy. He said that he also had been afflicted with the malady. Kowalsky fairly clung to the little one's neck until the prescription was forthcoming. It was a white powder to be taken at certain times. Kowalsky always carries a grip full of the powders, and whenever he feels an attack coming on quickly swallows one and quickly shakes off the listlessness.

"China is the land of promise for Americans," says Henry T. Wilson, a capitalist of Chicago, now here. Mr. Wilson has just returned from a trip to the Orient. During his visit he spent many months studying Chinese conditions. "Without a doubt, China offers the greatest business attractions in the world," said Mr. Wilson. "The country is simply choked with superstition. It is just like a great garden with beautiful flowers trying to grow where the weeds choke them out. This superstition has prevented railroading, mining and almost all modern industries. Chinese refuse to allow the graves of their ancestors to be touched in any way. As the graveyards are scattered over the country by the hundreds of thousands it is practically impossible to get right of way for railroads without spoiling the last resting place of some one's relative. But there is a good call for enterprising Americans who can conduct business along modern lines."

Frederick A. Betts, assitant secretary of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company of New York, tells an interesting story of the determination of the big insurance men of the country to visit Los Angeles. A year ago the Insurance Commissioners' Association held a convention at Detroit. A number wanted the next convention held in this city, but Colorado Springs was finally chosen. Nothing daunted, those who favored Los Angeles decided to come anyway. They all attended the convention at the Springs. Then came the surprise. As soon as the convention had been completed, those who favored Los Angeles said good-by to their friends and chartered a special train over the Salt Lake. Commissioner Joseph Button of Virginia had attended to all arrangements. They stopped at Denver and Salt Lake and then headed for the Coast. They will remain on the Coast some time, according to arrangements. Everywhere they go they are shown the hospitality of the West. "We wanted to come to Los Angeles," saids Mr. Betts, "and from the good time we have had here we are not in the least sorry that we made the trip."

Prof. F. E. Moll, M.A., the new instructor of Spanish at Occidental College, arrived in this city yesterday. Prof. Moll is from the School of Science of North Dakota, where he was professor of modern languages. He received his degree of S.T.B. from Northwestern University and his master's degree from the University of Minnesota.

Don Porter, proprietor of Cañon Hotel, Salt Lake City, who, with his wife, has been spending his vacation at the Lankershim, left yesterday for his home. Mr. Porter and his son have just secured the lease on the new $1,500,000 hotel which is nearing completion in Salt Lake City, to be known

Its influence is still increasing. Last week an exhibition of the students' work was opened, to continue on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week. The exhibition shows solid growth on the part of the pupils, always in the direction of modern ideas in art. There is no drawing from the cast, all the work in drawing and painting being from life models. In this respect the league follows the lead of some of the most famous of the art schools of Paris.

In charcoal studies from the nude, excellent work is shown by Earl Freeman, Viva Dillon, Pruett Carter, Charles Percy Austin, and others. Good work in the costume or draped model classes comes from Viva Dillon, Everett Barker, Harry Barndollar and others.

In painting, Edith Osborne shows several portraits of much strength, a front view of a man's head being especially notable, and a profile view of herself having much luminosity and excellent color. Val Costello's landscapes have a genuine appreciation of nature. Beryl Cosgrove, whose weekly decorative work in the Orpheum's lobby is exciting so much favorable comment, exhibits a study made at San Pedro, which indicates that he has fine qualities as a painter quite outside mere decoration. Mr. Cosgrove is only 18 years old, and great things may be expected of him.

On the whole, the exhibition of students' work is both strong and interesting. All who care for art should go to see it.

ART NOTES.

Another picture has been added to the summer exhibition held at the Steckel gallery. This is a portrait of a man by John Hubbard Rich. It is executed in Mr. Rich's competent, painter-like way, and is, of course, fine in color.

The classes of the Los Angeles School of Art and Design do not begin work till September 21, but many new pupils from various parts of the country are reporting for enrollment. Some important changes will inaugurate the new school year: Four classes will be added to those already held, and the fees are to be reduced about 25 per cent. This latter change may help to bring an art education within the reach of many hitherto excluded.

Among the leading articles of the International Studio for September are Christian Brinton's second paper on the collection of Hugo Reisinger; "Alfred East's Landscape Painting," by Leila Mechlin, and an account, by J. Lilsen Laurvik, of the international exhibition of pictorial photography in the National Arts Club.

IN THE LIMELIGHT.

MISS ALLENE SHEA, who recently graduated as the valedictorian of the High School at Louisville, Ky., was born without hands. Her arms terminate at the wrists, with barely a suggestion of a hand, though a tiny thumb, half an inch in length, extends from either arm. With these she has become one of the most adept pen users that ever graduated from the school, and the fastest operator of a typewriter. Miss Shea has won three medals for efficiency in academic studies. She has won prizes in penmanship and typewriting, in which her teachers declare her almost perfect. She is also a shorthand writer of accuracy and speed.

C. C. James, Deputy Minister of Agriculture of Canada, has gone to England to start negotiations looking to the solution of the problem of getting domestic servants for homes in the Province of Ontario. He hopes to induce enough servants to emigrate from England to supply the need.

Clyde Grippin of Williamsburg, Ky., has been totally blind since he was a baby, but he goes alone into the woods and chops and splits cordwood and piles it up and measures it. He also has a small shop where he weaves rugs and carpets. He is the champion boxer of the town and few men can land upon him with the gloves.

G. N. Saussy of Sylvester, Ga., is an "unreconstructed rebel," and has declined to accept a place as lieutenant-colonel on the staff of Gov. Joseph M. Brown. When the commission was mailed to him, Mr. Saussy wrote on the back: "I am a Confederate soldier on parole. I except to the Twelfth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments." Where the regulations required wearing the blue uniform, Mr. Saussy had scratched out the word "blue" and substituted "gray." The commission was returned to Saussy with a statement that he must accept it straight or not at all. Today Gov. Brown received a letter from Saussy, who said he had never taken oath of allegiance to United States and never intended to. He added, he was an "unreconstructed rebel," and that he always wore uniforms of the Confederate gray.

"Dad" Walsh of Plymouth, Wis., aged 104 years, has the distinction of being the oldest horseman in the country. Two years ago Walsh, watching one of his horses race, thought the driver was not using his best efforts to win. When the first heat had been finished and the horse had crossed under the wire in the rack, "Dad" rushed out upon the track and upbraided the driver. When it came time for the second heat he was in the sulky, and he won, the race handily, as the horse appeared to have the other racers outclassed.

STATESMEN, POLITICIANS.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL WICKERSHAM is the Spanish scholar of President Taft's Cabinet. He reads, in the original, the works of Cervantes, Lope de Vega, Calderon, Valera and Galdos.

Gov. Frank W. Benson of Oregon is not especally fond of his office as chief executive, and will not be a candidate for renomination. He desires to return to the office of Secretary of State, which he filled prior to his elevation to the Gubernatorial chair to succeed Gov. Chamberlain, who was elected to the United States Senate.

Former Governor Samuel R. Van Sant of Minnesota, who has been elected commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, was Minnesota's chief executive from 1901 to 1905. Since he left Knox College as a young man he has been engaged in the steamboat business and is at the head of the Van Sant & Musser Transportation Company and several allied corporations.

James Martine, the "farmer orator" of New Jersey, who has run as a Democratic candidate for almost every office in the State, from United States Senator to Councilman, and has never once been elected, announces that he is once more ready to place himself at the disposal of his party. This time it is the Governorship that Martine aspires to.

Although 87 years old, and confined to his home for the past year on account of illness, George W. Hutchinson, Mayor of Woodstock, Ohio, recently announced that he will again be a candidate for chief executive on the Republican ticket.

EDUCATORS, AUTHORS.

DR. GEORGE HOLMES HOWISON, Mills professor of intellectual and moral philosophy at the University of California, represented that institution at the five hundredth anniversary celebration of the University of Leipzig. Dr. Howison was one of 300 specially honored out of 3000 who were invited to the royal dinner, and was presented to the King by Rector Binding. Prof. Jacques Loeb was made the recipient of signal honors on July 30, when the degree of doctor of philosophy was conferred upon him. Dr. Webb was one of five Americans who were so honored. The others receiving the degree of doctor of philosophy were Ambassador David J. Hill, former President Theodore Roosevelt and Profs. Wilson and Burgess of Columbia University.

Laurie C. Ingham, who is a public school teacher in New York, had to come in as an immigrant when he returned the other day to this country from Europe. He was born in Scotland and came here when three years old. This summer he went abroad and he came back in the steerage. He had his teacher's certificate, and because he could not remember the number of his father's naturalization papers he was compelled to go through the Ellis Island routine.

Robert Kennedy Duncan, author of "The Chemistry of Commerce," has returned from a trip abroad, chiefly through France and Germany, where he has been observing the latest work in the famous laboratories of Europe.

Prof. Albert A. Michelson, the University of Chicago physicist, whose work in optical experiments gained the Nobel prize of $40,000 for him in 1907, has been informed that he shared in the general distribution of honorary degrees made at the five hundredth anniversary of the University of Leipzig. He was given the titles of doctor of philosophy and master of liberal arts. A letter accompanying the diploma was written by Dr. Gerhardt Zeliger and contained words of praise for the University of Chicago professor's work in spectroscopy.

ARMY AND NAVY MEN.

THE retirement of Rear-Admiral William T. Swinburne last week does not leave a vacancy in the grade of rear-admirals, as he was an extra number, having been promoted July 22, 1906, for eminent and conspicuous conduct in battle in the war with Spain. During his forty-three years' service he has been at sea more than twenty-six years, a longer period than any of his contemporaries.

The President has accepted the resignation of Capt. William E. Smith of the Marine Corps, to take effect October 1. He is now in command of the marine guard of the battleship New Jersey of the Atlantic fleet, and will remain on board that vessel until completion of the record target practice of the fleet. Capt. Smith resigns in order to accept an appointment as a member of the faculty of a military school at Charleston, S. C., where one of his subjects will be military tactics.

Col. Edward B. Pratt, as commander of the Department of California, recently issued an order to Col. Edward B. Pratt (himself) to take the horseback riding test again this year, having failed in Manila in 1908. The order was issued the day following an order from the War Department directing Col. Pratt to appear before a retiring board on account of disability. Col. Pratt has nine years yet to serve before the expiration of his thirty years' service, and no army officer who has seen the service and weathered the campaigns that Col. Pratt has in the Philippine Islands likes to be retired because of disability.

Maj.-Gen. John F. Weston, commander of the Department of California, is at present in the general hospital at the Presidio, San Francisco, where he is being treated for rheumatic troubles.

Lieut. Samuel R. Gleaves, U.S.A., has been appointed commandant of cadets at the Virginia Military Institute to succeed Col. M. M. Mills, who has requested to join his command in the army again. Lieut. Gleaves is from Wytheville, Va. He was a cadet at the Virginia Military Institute in 1894-95 and 1895-96, when he resigned to accept the appointment as a cadet in the United States Military Academy at West Point.

Col. Owen J. Sweet, Twenty-eighth Infantry, went on the retired list yesterday, when he reached the age of 64 years. As a result of this retirement, Lieut.-Col. Leonard A. Lovering, Fourth Infantry, will be promoted to colonel; Maj. William Lassiter, of the infantry, serving by detail in the Adjutant-General's Department, to lieutenant-colonel, and Capt. Edward M. Lewis, Eighth Infantry, to major. Col. Sweet's home is in Los Angeles.

OVER THE SEA.

THE new Governor of East Africa, Sir Percy Girouard, is considered the most brilliant of all Lord Kitchener's brilliant men. He is also the only one of them who is said to have never been afraid of his chief. On one occasion in Egypt the general thought a railway was progressing too slowly. "You must go quicker," said Lord Kitchener. "I can't," replied Girouard, "I am not properly supplied with material." "I have no use for a man who says 'can't,'" returned the general, and he sent Girouard to Cairo. Within a week he recalled Girouard and admitted he was wrong. Sir Percy has since been recognized as the greatest railway engineer the army has ever produced.

Friedrich Thiel, a peasant of Rauda, in Saxony, whose leisure hours have been devoted to the study of Greek, Latin, Hebrew, Sanskrit, Arabic and Gaelic, is 75 years old. He is beginning to study the English language. Thiel is in correspondence with some of the leading philologists of the day.

Prime Minister Clemenceau of France has written a play that will be produced in Paris during the autumn.

Mme. Surcouf, wife of the distinguished aëronautical engineer, is one of the best known aëronauts in France. She has a long record of ascents to her credit and has traveled many hundreds of miles in the air in all sorts of weather.

Prof. Benjamin Rinaldi publishes in the Corriere delle Maestre of Milan an interesting statistical study of elementary education in Italy. School teachers are the worst paid public servants in Italy. Their pay averages from 37 to 46 cents a day.

Mrs. Asquith, wife of the British Prime Minister, has long been one of King Edward's literary advisors. After His Majesty came back from Marlborough House after taking part in the procession at the first Jubilee, he sat down and wrote a line to the then Margot Tennant to thank her for her recommendation of some amusing new book.

INSURANCE WORLD.

The French senate has under consideration an old-age insurance bill, which starts with the idea that persons of the working class begin to earn at from 15 to 18 years of age. During these years, therefore, young people or their friends may begin their contributions at the rate of 3 francs or 60 cents a year. From 18 to 65 the tax is 6 francs or $1.20 a year, except that in the case of men no payment is to be made for the two years of compulsory military service. In return for his annual contribution of $1.20 made for thirty years, that is to say an investment of $36, the workman—workwoman equally—who reaches the age of 65 will receive an annuity of 120 francs, or $24. This is the minimum benefit, but there is a secondary scheme of allowances (pensions) based upon the actual payments during the beneficiary's working life, by which the old-age income may reach a total as high as 400 francs, or $80 a year, where annual contributions of 12 francs, or $2.40, have been made. Furthermore, the beneficiary is not debarred from still taking advantage on attaining the age of 70 years of what is known as the law of assistance, passed as an emergency measure in 1905, by which in rural communities a dole of $3 a month, and in Paris and other cities as high as $6 a month, is paid to aged persons who would otherwise be destitute.

Commissioner Bell of Kentucky scores the extravagance of insurance companies. I firmly believe," he says "that the insurance companies of this country, from the time of their establishment to the present hour, have invariably taken from the pockets of the people more than it was necessary to do, and to this fact alone I attribute the present hostile attitude of the various legislatures throughout the United States. For a number of years the Insurance Commissioners' convention has wrestled with the subject of 'taxation,' but so far as I have been able to discover no convention has ever seriously undertaken to find out if the various insurance companies are not charging higher rates than are necessary and spending more money in salaries, commissions, etc., than they should be spending."

The Western Adjustment Company of Chicago, reports that during the four years, closed with 1908, there were 23,900 losses adjusted, representing 98,827 policies and insurance of $272,509,718. The loss to insurance represented was $56,261,482, a percentage of loss to insurance of 15, with a cost of adjustment per $1000 of loss of 1.06 per cent. and a cost per $1000 of insurance of $1.61. The average cost includes adjusting service, traveling expenses, attorneys' fees and all other charges. Although the volume of business was more than double that of the preceding four years, the limit of economy has almost been reached, as the cost per $1000 of loss was only .07 per cent. less in the last four years. In the early years of the organization, however, the cost per $1000 ranged from $7.57 to $5.04, showing the economies realized by a reduction to $1.61 on in the fight which is being waged between the Mormon and outside interests in an endeavor to change the business center of the city, and is in favor of the latter. In order to offset the new hotel with one of nearly equal cost, the Mormon interests are at present engaged in the erection of a $1,000,0060 structure on the site of the old "tithing house." The Mormon hotel will be called the Utah. Speaking of the fight now raging between the factions, Mr. Porter said that the greatest mo ey interests in the city have been trying to change the business section for some time and are locating all of the new buildings in which they are part or full owners in the vicinity of the new Federal building toward the northwestern side of Salt Lake. The Mormon opposition arises chiefl because this change of center is depreciating their realty holdings in the old section of the city.

W. H. Volck, etymologist for Monterey and Santa Cruz counties, whose home is in Watsonville, the heart of the apple-growing district of the State, is a guest at the Nadeau. Mr. Volck is an expert in scale and other diseases of deciduous as well as citrus fruits. He reports excellent conditions among the apple and prune orchards of the central part of the State. "We have had little trouble from scale in the two counties, in which I am employed. Apples will not be quite as plentiful this year as last, but they are of fine quality, and will bring better prices." Mr. Volck is in the Southwest to gain special information about the diseases of the citrus trees.

Dr. Ernest Crutcher, a physician prominent for many years in the Northwest, and whose home has been lately at Seattle, has come to Los Angeles for permanent residence with his family. Dr. Crutcher is the author of many philosophical and scientific articles which have made him widely known in the profession. He was formerly a resident of Missouri and is a close personal friend of Champ Clarke, the leader of the Democratic minority in Congress.

After having investigated business conditions in this city for two months, W. W. Munzesheimer, proprietor of one leading stores of Marrietta, Okla., has decided to make Los Angeles his home as well as a future place of business. "This is certainly a great city, and it is only after careful observation that I have decided that it is the proper place to invest money. There is no reason why it should not be one of the largest cities in the United States within the next five years, according to the growth it has enjoyed during the past five."

Airships as Targets.

Wright made over forty-two miles an hour. Zeppelin's latest voyage was much longer, but at the leisurely gait of twenty-one miles an hour. A subcommittee of the imperial defense committee of England has reported in favor of rigid dirigible balloons for the navy and non-rigid for the army. The committee thinks the aëroplane must be able to ascend to a much greater height than at present has been achieved before it will be safe for reconnoitering purposes. Wright's aëroplane is about thirty-six feet long. An object of that size moving at forty-two miles an hour, even if no more than 500 feet above the earth, would be a very hard target to hit, while Count Zeppelin's airship, several hundred feet long and nearly a hundred in diameter, moving at twenty-one miles an hour, at a great height would seem almost stationary from the earth and would present a target so large it could hardly be missed. It is also important to remember that the nearer the earth the aviator flies the better he can see the things he is looking for.—[Philadelphia Record.

An Elderly Woman With a Young Skin

A lady whose name would be instantly recognized by every reader, is old enough to have a granddaughter, who, the gossips say, is engaged to be married—yet her skin is as fresh and velvety as that of a girl, and the bloom of youth is still on her cheeks. "Of course," she says, when her friends pay wondering compliments to her appearance. "I am a healthy woman, but good health isn't all. I know many women of my age who are stronger than I am, but whose skin resembles a piece of parchment. My advice to all elderly people—and the young folks, too, for that matter—is to use Harfina Soap. That's the secret of my skin. The healing balsam of the pure pine which it contains seems to have wonderful curative and preservative powers. It is not only a thorough cleanser, but a soothing, healing, beautifying balm. To use it is a constant delight, and the effect it produces is a little short of marvelous." Take advantage of this interesting bit of personal experience and use Harfina Soap for your own toilet and bath. Ask your druggist or any of the following druggists for this splendid soap. 25c a cake, or sent by mail on receipt of 25c. Send for book, "The Care of the Skin."

IN WASHINGTON AND NEW YORK.

BY MARSHALL CUSHING.

NEW YORK, Aug. 26.—Every little while somebody sends me a Socialist document, and evidently I am on some proselyter's list, for surely there can be no other sufficient reason for these attentions. The average person, and certainly the average business man or member of the so-called capitalist class, has no conception of the depth and the breadth of the Socialist propaganda or the extent, and perhaps the staying power, of the so-called socialistic advance. In a Western State there is a weekly newspaper devoted to this cause which circulates up in the hundreds of thousands. Many of the so-called labor papers, of which there are over 150 in the country, are committed completely to that philosophy, if such it may be called. As is well known, ther eis a reason for this; it is a fact that the anti-Socialist leaders of organized labor have all they can do to maintain control of the organization against the aggressive efforts of the socialists' unions, and among these are some of the largest. Only the other day I met in Boston a clever young man who is the editor of an important religious periodical appealing to hundreds of thousands, literally, of the younger generation of a certain sect. He had presided over a joint debate between a Socialist and an anti-Socialist in a [illegible] impartial way, but he admitted to me that he sympathized with the Socialist side and believed that "something of the kind" was coming. Only the other day an old-established and influential semi-religious weekly of New York, which had printed a strong Socialist article, refused to print a reply to this, the editor frankly admitting that he sympathized with the Socialist writer. It is well known that many of the magazines, if not conducted by men who sympathize with Socialism in some form, open their pages freely to writers who are avowed Socialists elsewhere, and who are known to be antagonistic to the present order of things.

This is not saying that the muckraker and his elder brother, who has found it necessary or advisable from a business point of view to make his magazine yellow, has not found in his peregrinations certain justifiable reasons for his belief and for a belief in a certain amount of feeling mixed with it. Nor is it saying that very many, who never write or publish anything, have not seen in the growth of the power of corporate wealth a menace which would justify us in experimenting with some other system, and in concluding that any other system would do. It is a certain fact that if the so-called business interests and I include in that expression all the millions of every-day transactions, large and small, connected with producing and selling things on the one hand and with the buying and using of them on the other, knew to what an extent the dissatisfaction with the present order of things was spreading, with or without reason, they would stand amazed and perhaps appalled at the prospect.

Various philanthropists, sages, capitalists, students and others have been addressing themselve with more or less sense to a correction of these tendencies. It is one of the problems on which the National Civic Federation, August Belmont, president, has been working. Canvassers for subscriptions have been thrown out, lecturers have been put upon the road, articles have been published here and there. Recently the newspapers quoted extensively from a circular which Mr. Belmont had issued, or possibly it was a sort of personal appeal that had fallen into careless hands. It called for a fund of $50,000 with which educational work against Socialism might be done. Of course this was immediately seized upon by all the Socialist editors and utilized to the limit as an illustration of the [illegible] as well as desperate methods of the "unscrupulous capitalist class." And it would seem, looking at the matter dispassionately, as if such an effort, being made public, would help rather than hurt the Socialist cause. Your regulation Socialist agitator likes class strife and everything that will engender it more than anything else.

The Socialists had another opportunity lately to stimulate what they are pleased to call the class war, and they have been quick to take every possible advantage of it. Recently a story "leaked out" to the effect that J. Pierpont Morgan had promised once to smash the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers. It is impossible to say where this account originated; some attributed it to a recent annual report of the United States Steel Corporaiton, though I doubt that. At all events, it went into great detail, representing Morgan as having been greatly angered by Theodore Shaffer, then the president of the Amalgamated," over the settlement of the great steel strike in 1901. Morgan, according to the story, declared that he would smash that union. It might take him four years, but at the end of that time there would not be a union man at work in any of the mills of the big steel company.

Then the account went on to show "how Pierpont Morgan kept his word," as follows:

	Union men.	Non-union men.
[illegible], when the steel company [illegible] its mills as skilled [illegible], there were	60,000	40,000
[illegible], after the strike of 1901, [illegible] were	48,000	55,000
[illegible], after the Youngstown [illegible] and the desertion of the [illegible] Steel Hoop mills, [illegible] was	38,000	70,000
[illegible], after the National Bridge [illegible] had banished the [illegible] the structural [illegible] and the union [illegible], there were	34,000	84,000

Now, I say nothing as to the accuracy of this account or these figures; but the Socialist editors and organizers fairly grabbed the opportunity to prove by this means that capital is "crushing" labor and especially union labor, and that the downtrodden haven't a show in the world. There is no doubt that such stories, whether accurate or not, and it seems as if the false oftentimes answered the purpose just as well as the true, are eagerly sought for by all of the agitators against the present order of things, that they make the most of them in their socialistic publications and in innumerable harangues on the street corners, mostly at night, and that the effect is beyond computation, not politically as yet, then in the changed attitude, not only of many of the workers, but of my friends the religious editor in Boston and the semi-religious editor in New York.

BLAME MOORE FOR HOT WAVE.

Greatest of Weather Experts, What He Is Like.

What the Signal Service Has Done for People.

Where Most of the Weather Gets Started.

BY JAMES B. MORROW.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 30.—No matter where he happened to be or what he was doing, Thomas Jefferson made a daily record of the weather. His thermometer cost $20, probably in tobacco, and he paid $25 for a barometer.

Throughout his labors as the literary author of the Declaration of Independence, he carefully put down the temperature and wind directions of Philadelphia. An entry in his remarkable diary shows that the readings of his thermometer on July 4, 1776, were 68 degrees at 6 o'clock in the morning, 76 degrees at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and 73½ degrees at 9 o'clock in the evening—a cool day for so tremendous a blast from the new furnace of liberty and revolution.

While Jefferson was scientifically observing and noting the weather on his mountain farm in Virginia, another man, James Madison, professor of mathematics at William and Mary College, afterward a bishop in the Protestant Episcopal Church, was simultaneously performing a like service at his home near the sea. Jefferson and Madison were friends, and they exchanged information and conclusions.

TABLE OF MONTHLY AVERAGES.

Indeed, with the records of a number of years before him, Jefferson made a table of monthly averages for the State of Virginia. The scheme of simultaneous observations, now the basis of every weather system in the world, probably originated with Jefferson, the Monticello farmer, and Madison, the Williamsburg mathematician and preacher. But a British army came along and some officer or soldier carried away Madison's thermometer and barometer. After that, necessarily, Jefferson's meteorological studies were merely local.

The Wrights tested their flying machine at Fort Myer, over the Potomac, in Virginia, and opposite the southwest corner of Washington. Officers of the United States Signal Corps were judges of both the flights and the mechanism. The military post where the trials occurred was named in honor of Albert James Myer—"Old Probabilities," as he was subsequently called—an army surgeon, who originated a workable scheme of signals based on flags and torches. Perhaps Myer elaborated a crude idea that he borrowed from the Indians, who signaled to one another, and who, if they are one of the lost tribes of Israel, were led on a vital occasion by a pillar of cloud during the day and by a pillar of fire in the night. Signals among the first inhabitants of North America, therefore, may have begun under the chieftaincy of Moses.

The sign language, created by Gen. Myer was successfully employed during the Civil War. After the restoration of peace, in the natural development of his system he began to observe the weather at the various military posts throughout the country and to give telegraphic notice on the Great Lakes and along the seaboard of the approach of storms and the wind's velocity. The first storm signals were hoisted in all the northern inland ports from Buffalo to Duluth, and thence to Chicago, on November 8, 1870.

BECOMES USEFUL SCIENCE.

Since then, in the United States, at least, meteorology has become a live and highly useful science. The army still maintains a signal corps, and carries on experiments with wireless telephony and telegraphy, and with balloons and flying machines, but the forecasts of storms, cold waves and floods are now made by the department of the government devoted to the protection and progress of agriculture.

Undoubtedly, Willis Luther Moore is the greatest meteorologist in the yorld. Anyway, he is chief of the best weather bureau in existence. As I write, six scientists from Europe are in Washington to get the last known fact concerning the earth's atmosphere, its motions, laws, and eccentric character. Personally, Prof. Moore is gray, dark, and magnetic; biographically, he is as entertaining as a book of anecdotes; professionally, he is untechnical, informing, and human, as well as humorously scornful toward the goose-bone and all other unscientific weather prophets. Storms—hurricanes, especially—are both his sport and his livelihood; he tracks them and beats them, as other men hunt lions, tigers and grizzly bears. I had heard that he was a newsboy with Gen. Grant's army when it marched and fought the twenty-two bloody miles from City Point to Richmond.

"Briefly," I said, "what were your experiences?"

"During the last year of the war I lived with my father, an engineer engaged in the building of bridges and similar labor, and by selling Washington and Baltimore newspapers all along our lines, made more money than he did. I had a monopoly of the business, and was the only small boy in the army so far as I know. Papers containing reports of the capture of Jefferson Davis easily brought 50 cents apiece. I sold them to our men in the trenches, but was not fired on by the Confederaets, who evidently thought that I lived in the neighborhood. I followed the army to Petersburg, and marched with it into Richmond."

BEGAN STUDY OF SUBJECT.

"How did you become interested in the subject of meteorology?"

"I had learned to set type, and to be a reporter while working on the Republican at Binghamton, N. Y., which was then my home. At the age of 20 I joined a party of 100 men that tried to break into the Black Hills and search for gold. Government officers ordered our arrest by telegraph, because the Black Hills country was then an Indian reservation. Some of our men were taken to jail. I got away on a horse. On the back track toward home, I stopped at Burlington, Iowa, and worked as a reporter on the Hawk-Eye, at the time when Robert J. Burdette was editor. Frank Hatton, afterward Postmaster-General in Arthur's administration, owned the paper.

"Presently a man came on from Washington and established a primitive weather signal station at Burlington. He and I boarded at the same house. I thought I should like to learn the weather business, and wrote a letter to William W. Belknap, Secretary of War, which I asked Hatton to sign. Hatton showed some irritation at my request. When he read the letter he wrote across the face of it, saying: 'Moore is the only sober man on the Hawk-Eye, and I won't recommend him, because I don't want him to leave my employ.' Of course, I sent the letter to Secretary Belknap, and was immediately appointed to a place in the signal service. I came to Washington as fast as the train would carry me. After attending a scientific school at Fort Myer, I studied for fifteen years under different professors in the service. Finally, I was appointed professor of meteorology, on an examination in which there were twenty-four contestants.

Willis L. Moore.

FRICTION WITH PRESIDENT.

"There was friction between the White House and the Weather Bureau during Mr. Cleveland's second term. The chief of the bureau was removed. He went into the newspapers with the charge that President Cleveland was using the weather service in Democratic politics. I was then making forecasts in Chicago for the Upper Lake region and fifteen Western States. When I received a telegram signed with the name of Grover Cleveland ordering me to report to J. Sterling Morton, Secretary of Agriculture, I thought some busy idiot was trying to make a joke at my expense. But the telegraph people assured me the message was genuine.

"Secretary Morton told me after my arrival in Washington that the President would appoint me chief of the Weather Bureau if I made a satisfactory answer to a certain question. Mr. Cleveland, he said, had taken my commission to Buzzards Bay, his summer home, and would sign it as soon as he received an agreed upon telegram from Washington. I hadn't the remotest idea of what was coming, and felt pretty nervous and uncomfortable. With a very grave look on his face, Secretary Morton asked: 'Mr. Moore, what are your politics?'

"'For once in my life,' I replied, 'I should like to say that I am a Democrat, but I am not a Democrat, Mr. Secretary; I am a Republican.'

"With a solemn wag of his head, Morton left the room. By and by he returned. He tried to be serious, but I noticed a twinkle in his eye. 'Mr. Cleveland,' he began, 'will sign your commission today. I telegraphed him that you had stood fire and were all right. Let me tell you, Mr. Moore, that we have known your politics all along. Mr. Cleveland learned positively that you voted against him three years ago.

WANTED STRONG REPUBLICAN.

"'When we decided, as a matter of policy, to appoint a Republican to the vacancy in the Weather Bureau, he said: "However, let us get a Republican who doesn't flunk. I'll send for Moore. If he denies his politics, look around for some one else."'"

"Have you ever reflected," I asked Prof. Moore, "upon the experiences of Noah?"

"Big rain—forty days—shut up in the ark—no communication with land—no land, in fact." Prof. Moore was skimming over the history of the flood and talking softly to himself. "No," he said to me after a moment, "I have never thought of Noah, professionally, although I must confess that he was somewhat in my line. However, I am a Presbyterian, and I do not intend to mix my religion with my business. Still, I shall venture to say that if all the moisture in the atmosphere were condensed and suddenly precipitated upon the earth as rain there would be just about one inch of water."

"Do you believe that the rainbow is a divine promise writ upon the heavens?"

"No, no, no; I will not drag theology into the weather. I have bother enough already. But let me tell you that the rainbow is the most difficult of all scientific problems to explain. It can be elucidated, but it is entirely too complicated for anything short of a text-book."

FEW ANCIENT METEOROLOGISTS.

"Had the ancients any accurate method of foretelling the weather?"

"None whatever, so far as I know. Plutarch, perhaps, was the only writer who touched upon meteorology. He says somewhere that when the Greeks marched forth to meet the Persians the vapors arising from the hot breath, blood, and sweat of the struggling mass were later condensed into rain by the concussion of the battle clubs and the hoarse cries of victory. I fancy Plutarch originated the idea that rain follows a battle between armies. And it generally does, for the reason that nearly always rain falls once in three days in latitudes where battles are usually fought. Furthermore, generals don't begin to fight during a storm. They wait for clear weather. The law of average, therefore, brings rain shortly after the battle is over. Yet there are plenty of cranks who believe that bombarding the clouds will bring on a shower, or even a spell of wet weather."

"Does nature take protective measures, such as to thicken the husks on corn and the scales and rosin of buds at the approach of an uncommonly cold winter?"

"When the husk, scales and rosin are thicker than normal something has occurred in the atmosphere to make them so. Nature has no way of foretelling the weather. The weather as it passes leaves its influence on husks and buds. Neither man nor nature, you may be certain, knows very much in advance about the meteorological conditions that are to come. It is true, however, that animals and human beings often feel the coming of a storm several hours off. How and why they feel it is one of the things that we do not understand."

"It is said that katydids begin to tune up exactly six weeks before frost?"

"More foolishness, but rather picturesque for all that," Prof. Moore replied.

"How do birds know when to start for the South in winter and to come North in the very early spring?"

"I fear," Prof. Moore answered, "that you are asking me a question that ought to be submitted to John Burroughs or Theodore Roosevelt. Without claiming to be an authority in natural history, I would say that birds note a change in the climate and move on. Sometimes the change is only local, and thus vagrant robins occasionally come to Washington early in February, only to suffer from that ancient human malady modernly known as cold feet."

INFLUENCE OF THE MOON.

"Has the moon any influence on vegetation?"

"Just about as much as it has on the price of stocks in Wall street or the output of the diamond mines in South Africa. Unconsciously you have put your finger on a sensitive spot. The moon is no special friend of mine. You see, the manager of my farm tries to operate on the lunar schedule, particularly in the matter of butchering pigs, and nothing but a loud and rasping command from the Weather Bureau ever halts him."

"Are the seasons changing "

"Nature maintains its average, and the records show that the seasons, regardless of a universal supposition, are as fixed and regular as anything else. A man will say that he walked to the little red schoolhouse when he was 7 years old, through snow that was knee deep. At 40 or 50 or 60 years of age, measuring 6 feet 3 inches in height, he expects the snow to reach half-way to his hips. The winters haven't changed, but he has."

"Do sailors and ship owners rely on your forecasts?"

"Absolutely, on the Great Lakes; also on the rivers and very generally along the oceans by mariners engaged in coastwise business. The captains of ships on the northern lakes depend on us to a larger degree than do other sailors, because we can more accurately predict the velocity of the wind than we can foretell a storm of rain, which occasionally changes its path and goes somewhere else. Remember that where the pressure of the air is greatest upon the earth it will flow to where the pressure is the least—precisely like water going down stream. Our instruments of measurement are so perfect that we can figure out the velocity of the wind at certain places several hours in advance—knowing the high pressure in one region and the low pressure elsewhere. We foretell windstorms on the lakes, while along the Atlantic Coast we give warnings about West Indian hurricanes.

"On two occasions, after warnings of severe storms had been given, our men saw all of the customs officers on the seabord, from Maine to Florida. We found that ships valued at $66,000,000, taking no account of the cargoes, had remained in the various ports until the storms were over. Authorities outside of the bureau have estimated that a West Indian hurricane—which, by the way, is the most dangerous general storm we ever have—sweeping the Atlantic Coast without warning, would destroy property to the value of from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000.

STATIONED IN WEST INDIES.

"I send ten men to different points in the West Indies each year just before the hurricane season opens, where they remain until all danger is over. They report to us daily by telegraph. At the end of the season they nail up their stations and come home. We knew about the hurricane that hit Galveston in July, and followed it into the Gulf of Mexico. Still, we hesitated to frighten or stampede the people of that city, and, besides, the hurricane, we thought, might die in the Gulf, in which event, if a warning had been given, we probably would have been both ridiculed and condemned. Finally, after several conferences, we telegraphed Galveston that a hurricane was probable. Precautions were instantly taken, and very little damage was done, although our warning was scarcely four hours ahead of the storm.

"While we are on the subject," Prof. Moore continued, "I should like to say in order to clear up the confusion of the public mind, which leads to an absurd mixing of terms, that a cyclone has an area of 1000 miles, a hurricane an area of from 100 miles to 300 miles, and a tornado, which invariably occurs in the southeast quarter of a cyclone and is an incident of the cyclone an area of from 1000 feet to 1000 yards. The velocity of the wind during a cyclone is from fifteen miles to twenty-five miles an hour; during a hurricane it varies from fifty miles to 100 miles an hour, while it is so great during a tornado that no instrument can measure it. In all three kinds of storms the wind, of course, is rotary, or twisting, as it is commonly described.

ORIGIN OF STORMS.

"As a rule, where do storms originate?"

"In the Rocky Mountain plateau. The United States," Prof. Moore said, "is the meteorological theater of the world, our mountain systems trending northward and southward, allowing the mingling together of the cold polar and the warm equatorial winds in the lower reaches of the earth's atmosphere where storms originate. On the continents of Europe and Asia the mountain systems extend eastward and westward, thereby preventing that conflict of cold and warm winds which is so prolific a source of atmospheric disturbance in the United States. But active atmospheric conditions produce a vigorous race of men. The most forceful people physically and the most resourceful mentally will be found where nature is neither so harsh as to crush human aspirations, as it is in the arctic regions, nor yet so gentle as to lull desire, as it is in the tropics."

"How many forecasters and observers are employed by the government?"

"Two hundred. They are stationed in different parts of the United States and are in direct communication with the bureau in Washington, sending us twice each day all the facts about the weather—velocity of the wind, temperature, rainfall, and so on. The cost of the service is $1500 a year."

PLEASURES OF BACHELORDOM.

BY F. C. S.

See that lonesome-looking man over in the house across the way? Notice the white garment in his hand, how he is meditating on it, seemingly? He looks at it and then at the spool of thread on the window seat. He takes up a small sharp-pointed instrument and contemplates that also. What is he going to do, you say? Well, he is going to try and sew a button on that white garment. He has the needle all threaded, now—but, he has accidentally in some way pulled the thread out again. What did he say then? I wonder, I couldn't hear, could you? His lips moved. Ah, he has it threaded again. What? Guess he's lost his button; standing on his head? or trying to, oh no! only looking for that button. Yes, he does look a bit warm. Why, I declare if the simpleton hasn't knocked the spool out of the window, and nearly dropped the garment out, too, trying to head off the spool.

There, now he has found the button, but what is he looking for this time? The needle? must be, he don't seem to have it. His lips move again; I can't hear what he is saying, looks sort of impatient, don't he? Scratches his head nervous like. Came from Long Beach, you say? Is that why he is so nervous? There! he has the needle all right, but the thread is out again, how provoking! did you catch that, couldn't understand? I wonder is he talking French? Well, he's got to go down and get his thread, dropped through the iron grating, hey? Dear, dear, back he goes upstairs to get his cane, how heavy he walks upstairs; here he comes—with two canes, his lips move again, wonder why he don't talk out loud? My, he is down on his stomach fishing through the grating and he nearly got the spool up; pretty warm, isn't he? Stands up and wipes his face, looking all around to see if anybody is watching him. Why don't he get married and save himself all this? Afraid, is he? Yes, he is rather a timid chap in some ways, but he is brave enough to go to the mountains all by himself. Saying something, isn't he? funny we can't hear. There! he is after the spool again; lost it? How contrary! Makes five or six times it has dropped back. There! why didn't he do that in the first place? He is taking up the grating. Yes, I know it is hard to think of everything at the right time, else the government would not have made that new copper cent like it is.

Oh, oh! while he was reaching down after that spool the grating fell down on his back. Why does he dance up and down? Well, he is nervous, you know, and that relieves him, and whatever he is saying, seems scolding into space. Yes, he has discovered some of the neighbors watching him now. Kicked at the grating just now, how silly. Does he think the grating cares? And he bumped his elbow against the corner trying to rub his back.

Well, anyway he has the spool, so he doesn't care what the neighbors think. There! he is seated at the window, he looks a little easier, he has the garment, the button, the needle and the spool, and is sewing on the button; wonder who taught him to sew so fast? He pulls so hard on the thread, broken it? Of course, thread isn't made to tie a horse up with. See his lips go! there he has the needle threaded again, and takes another stitch—what in the world ails him now? Jumps up and down, gives a yell like a Comanche Indian and rips the garment up the back, knocked the mirror down on the floor and kicked over the chair and rams his thumb into his mouth—well, looks like he run the needle under his thumb nail, mercy! how he jabbers! talks sort of incoherently and jerkey. I heard one or two words before he yanked the window shade down, and if the rest of his language corresponds with them you can rest assured that he does not lead in prayer at the church weekday meetings, no siree. The minister could find a good field to work in around his house and advise him to let his sister or mother or somebody that is more handy with small tools than he is, sew on his buttons for him.

Lived a Proper Life.

When the stringed band, hidden behind the rose and carnation screen in Mrs. Poole's dining-room, began to play an air from one of Meyerbeer's operas, the daughter of the house turned hopefully to the young and apparently dumb stranger who had been told off to take her in.

Here was a promising opening for conversation.

"Do you like Meyerbeer?" she asked.

"I never drank a glass of one of those lagers in my life," the young man replied coldly.—[Youth's Companion.

Fat Folks Stifle in Hot Weather

Is it any wonder that the fat people stifle in the hot weather? They are jammed full of fat on the inside. The lungs demand great quantites of air each breath or beat of the heart, so that the oxygen in the air can purify the blood and send it back to the body to maintain strength and vitality. Most people do not use one-half the capacity of the lungs, which are nothing more or less than some 800,000,000 little cells like toy balloons, which, when they are not inflated with air, lie flat. If the fat that crowds the lungs reduces the capacity of the lungs to take in air you will see what an awful time the blood and body has of getting its oxygen or vitality. The reason of this fat is that the digestive machinery of man is not working right. Marmola Tablets, that have created such favorable comment among physicians and fat people by their wonderful reductions in so short a time, stop the body from making fat. They are harmless and reduce fat at the rate of from 12 to 15 ounces per day. You do not need diet or exercise and you may eat when and what you will. The beauty of Marmola Tablets is not alone their ability to reduce fat, but they leave no wrinkles or flabby rolls of skin after the fat goes away. They are sold by all druggists, price 75 cts., or you may write the Marmola Company, Dept. 235, Detroit, Mich.

REGAL ROMANCE.

GIRLS' COMPACT MAY LEAD TO A ROYAL MARRIAGE.

Princess Royal of England and Queen Mother of Portugal Are Moving Heaven and Earth to Unite King Manuel of Portugal and Princess Alexandra of Fife.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Aug. 28.—When a Portuguese newspaper announced a few weeks ago that an engagement had been arranged between King Manuel of Portugal and Princess Alexandra of Fife, King Edward's grand-daughter, and a few days later the story was officially denied in England, it was thought that the wish in Portugal was father to the thought, and that there was nothing in the story. The fact is that, while the announcement may be premature, two women are moving heaven and earth to bring this marriage about, and it is on the cards that they may overcome the objections to the marriage of a Princess of such Protestant traditions as King Edward's grand-daughter and the King of a country so intensely devoted to the Roman Catholic faith as Portugal.

The women are the mothers of the two young people, the Queen Mother, Amelie of Portugal, and the Duchess of Fife, daughter of the King, and Princess Royal of England. These two ladies have been bosom friends since girlhood. Although separated from each other by the duties of the high positions they occupy, and seldom able to meet, they have maintained a weekly correspondence which has been unbroken for years. They have confided to each other their joys and sorrows, and it is safe to assume that the Princess Royal knows all about the infantile ailments and smart baby sayings of the present King of Portugal, while his mother is equally familiar with the early colics and other adventures of the Princess Alexandra.

I am told by a personage in close touch with both courts that years ago a compact was made that if it were possible the two houses should be allied by marriage, and that neither mother has ever lost sight of that agreement. First it was the ill-fated Crown Prince of Portugal (who was murdered with his father on February 1, 1908,) who was to marry Princess Alexandra, but when his younger brother became King the desire of his mother that her son should marry the daughter of her old friend was transferred to Manuel, and it was with this [illegible] idea that she acted so sternly to break off the poor boy's love affair with the daughter of a noble Portuguese house. In this she was assisted by the Portuguese statesmen, who saw that the position of the throne would be greatly strengthened by an alliance with a powerful European nation like England.

NEVER SAW EACH OTHER.

Curiously enough, the young people have never seen each other. Manuel is only 19 years old, and until he succeeded to the throne he was occupied with his studies, and in addition to this, as the younger son, he was kept a great deal in the background. Since he became King he has been too much occupied in gathering together the reins of his troubled kingdom to think of trips abroad or even of marriage.

Alexandra is 18 years old, and has just come out. She made her bow to society at a ball at Buckingham Palace a few weeks ago. She is a quiet, retiring girl with little will of her own, who much prefers the quiet, uneventful life on her father's Scottish estate to the whirl of a court.

Now, however, things have settled down in Portugal and Manuel's advisers think that it is time he was taking a wife. There is no doubt that negotiations regarding the English alliance have been begun, but the great obstacle to be overcome is the Princess' religion. Public opinion in England would receive a severe shock if a grand-daughter of the King changed her faith in order to marry the occupant of a foreign throne. Moreover, Princess Alexandra comes within the terms of the Royal Marriage Act, and cannot marry without the King's express consent and that of Parliament.

In the case of the marriage of Princess Ena of Battenberg to the King of Spain there was a great outcry about her conversion to the Roman Catholic Church. In this case, however, Princess Ena, although a niece of the King, was in such a position that formal consent was not necessary. I am told that she could be placed within the terms of the marriage act or not, as proved most convenient. The whole question turned on the nationality of her father and it was decided, for convenience sake, to call him a German, and allow her to follow her own inclination. It would never do for the King, who, on his accession, had to take an oath that is most offensive to his Roman Catholic subjects, to allow his grand-daughter to become a member of that church.

KING NOT AVERSE.

On other grounds Edward is not averse to the match. The late King Carlos, Manuel's father, was the one European monarch for whom the English King had a sincere personal [illegible], and the Marquis de Soveral, Manuel's Ambassador to the Court of St. James, is one of his most intimate "pals." Besides that, he thinks that Manuel is a fine young fellow, who, even if he has a shaky throne, can be trusted to make the best of any situation in which he may be placed, and to make the Portuguese monarchy secure and popular if any one can. The influence of His Majesty's daughter, the Duchess of Fife, of whom he is very fond, must also be reckoned with, and it is quite on the cards that the most astute royal diplomat in Europe may find a way out of the difficulty and manage matters so that the marriage may come off without any offense being given to his own subjects.

At any rate, Edward has invited Manuel to come over and have a chat about it, and Manuel has accepted the invitation and will be coming before many weeks—the exact date isn't set yet. The young people will then see each other, and it is hoped that they may add personal inclination to the other forces which are at work to unite them. It is significant also that Manual is bringing with him Senhor du Bocage, his Minister of Foreign Affairs, and his Prime Minister, Senhor Wenceslau de Lima. Statesmen of this rank do not, as a rule, accompany their kings on visits that are merely private in character. The social gossips in England are predicting that there will be some very serious conferences at Windsor Castle about the proposed marriage. It may be stated that there are no questions at issue between England and Portugal which would call for the presence in England of two such functionaries.

Another influence—a trifle, it is true, but trifles sometimes change the history of nations—has helped along the kindly plotting of the two royal mothers. King Edward has an almost eccentric desire to do the same thing at the same time every year. Ever since he came to the throne he has entertained a European monarch at Windsor Castle every summer or autumn. This year he intended to have the Czar at Windsor, but at the last moment it was decided that the Czar's safety could not be guaranteed, so he was only allowed to land from his yacht at Cowes for an hour or two. Edward has entertained nearly every one else at Windsor, and he was in despair, when his daughter suggested that he should invite Manuel over. The King jumped at the chance of killing two birds with one stone and Manuel is coming.

GOOD CATCH.

From a material, as well as a political point of view, the alliance would be an excellent one for Manuel. The Duke of Fife is a very rich man and no doubt would make a generous provision to enable his daughter to maintain the position she would be called to. Manuel is poor and a few months ago he decided to forego part of the income from the state to which he is entitled until all the money illegally overdrawn by his father is repaid. In addition to the provision made for his daughter by the Duke of Fife the English people could be relied on to do something handsome for the grand-daughter of their king.

Of course, there are some other questions to be decided before the marriage could take place. One of these is the health of the Princess. Apparently she is a buxom, hearty sort of girl, but the maintenance of the royal succession depends on a queen, and kings take no chances in selecting their wives. As a rule royal engagements are not announced until the prospective bridegroom is satisfied from a report by his own court physicians that his prospective bride is fitted to become the mother of princes. The announcement of the King of Spain's engagement was delayed for months because there was some doubt on this score. This fact never found its way into print before, but it is none the less a fact.

If all the difficulties are overcome, however, Alexandra may expect to have as good a husband as a royal bride can well expect. Manuel is a quiet, studious young fellow. He is a hard worker, is inspired by a high sense of duty and no breath of scandal has ever been connected with his name. He is an accomplished artist, something of a poet, and he has an excellent literary style. His attitude toward his mother during the terrible times succeeding his father's assassination has endeared him to his people, with whom Queen Amelie was never very popular. Her extravagance was blamed for much of her husband's financial entanglement, and Manuel while he stood by her nobly, insisted on all around retrenchment, and it is a fact that today the Queen mother is far more popular than she ever was before, and she owes most of this popularity to her son.

A KINGLY YOUTH.

It was feared, too, that when young Manuel became King he would be dominated entirely by Queen Amelie, who possesses all the imperious temper of the Bourbons. It was soon evident, however, that he intended to be king in fact as well as in name. A little incident a few days after he became king showed this. The court physician was missing when he was wanted and Manuel, making inquiries, found that he was attending to his private practice as he had been in the habit of doing during King Carlos's time. Manuel sent for him and informed him that he must devote his whole time to his duties at court if he wished to continue in the appointment.

"Does the queen know of this?" the astonished medical man asked.

"It is quite enough that I know of it," was Manuel's reply.

Another incident illustrates the serious view which he takes of his duty. It is his custom to get every paper published in Lisbon every day and to spend hours in his study poring over them. It was noticed recently that he looked pale and tired and his ministers asked him to delegate to one of them the task of reading the papers and reporting to him on their contents.

"No," he replied, "as long as I am king I want to know what my people are saying and thinking, and I can only learn that by reading the papers myself."

If the marriage with Princess Alexandra comes off it will probably put an end forever to any hope that an American girl might have entertained of queening it in Portugal. Anita Stewart of Chicago is engaged to marry Prince Miguel of Braganza, who is a pretender to the Portuguese throne. Prince Miguel, it is true, renounced his claim to the throne, but pretenders' promises, like pie-crust, are made to be broken if the opportunity arises. With an English Princess sitting beside Manuel on the throne it is not likely to arise.

Eat Pie for Breakfast.

Attention, dyspeptics! If you seek relief and long for the culinary propensities enjoyed by your epicure neighbor—eat large chunks of juicy pie for breakfast.

This at least was the cure prescribed last night by Dr. Charles McCormick, opthalmologist before the third annual convention of the Association of Independent Doctors. Dr. McCormick attacked the teachings of the "regular" medical profession, scored the use of drugs and thus led up to the subject of that pastry made famous by the New England housewife.

"Eat pie, eat all you want of it, and eat it for breakfast if you would have a good stomach," he directed. "Let the gastric glands begin their day's work with a good big job and you will feel the better for it. Throw away the breakfast foods, for they kill more persons in one year than does all the alcohol that was ever manufactured into whisky. Those who seek health must get the right food combination. In pointing out the combination medical science is about 400 years behind the times."—[Chicago Tribune.

The Ghost of Old John Hill.

By E. Phillips Oppenheim,

In London Ideas.

IF I commence my story, or rather my recital, with any particularities as to my personality and present condition the chances are that I shall alienate in no small degree, perhaps altogether, the attention and interest which my narrative might otherwise gain. And yet, after very careful deliberation, I have decided to confess my secret in these few opening lines. I am a madman.

Even while I write I am watched by a keen-eyed attendant (mine is a private asylum, and we don't call them warders.) To all intents and purposes I am a prisoner. Of the world outside this—shall we say retreat?—I know nothing, nor shall I ever enter it again. Empires may rise and fall, all Europe might blaze from Madrid to Moscow with fierce war and bloodshed, kingdoms might become republics, and republics might seek again the yoke of monarchy—to me it would all be one. Outside these walls I shall never step. I have wit enough to conceal my partial recovery, for I know very well that this refuge is all that stands between me and the murderer's dock.

The winter of 18— I was compelled through ill-health to spend abroad. Perhaps it would be as well here to remark that my malady was one which affected in no degree my nervous system or my mental powers. It was, in fact, nothing but a slight weakness of the lungs which had caused my medical attendant to earnestly recommend my spending the winter months in some warmer climate; and as I was my own master, and had no ties to keep me in England, and as, moreover, the idea of escaping from the chilly humors and dreary fogs of our own country to bask under the warm southern sun and the blue sky of the Riviera was in itself by no means displeasing to me, I took his advice.

I was staying at a small old-fashioned little town known to tourists, and some distance out of the beaten track of the shoals of health-seeking Europeans and sight-seeing Americans, who made this region their happy hunting ground. The hotel was no more than an inn, and the limetree-bordered promenade outside was seldom pressed by the foot of a stranger. There was in the place itself, its architecture, or its surroundings, little that was picturesque or attractive. But, nevertheless, it pleased me, and I had prolonged my stay for a week or two, and was still without any settled idea of going. Strange to say, it was the very dulness of the place which attracted and kept me there. It suited the mood which I happened to be in.

One evening after my solitary dinner—table d'hote there was none—I had strolled, as usual, with a cigar in my mouth, down the promenade. I had had but little exercise during the day, or a fit of laziness had been upon me, and the weather had been anything but tempting, and so it happened that when I reached the end of the narrow sanded walk I felt reluctant to turn back. The night was a pleasant one for walking, and seemed all the pleasanter after the hot winds and blazing sun which had kept me

I hesitated only for a moment, leaning over the low swing gate at the extremity of the promenade. Then, passing through it I stepped out on to the broad, high road, and walked steadily ahead.

In about a quarter of a hour I reached four cross-roads. The road to the left, the road straight on, and the road behind me I knew well. The road to the right I had never taken, perhaps because it commenced with a remarkably stiff ascent and appeared to lead nowhere, for it was little more than a grass-grown cattle track. But looking along it tonight, a sensation of which I had certainly never before been conscious seized swiftly hold of me. I was filled with a sudden strong curiosity to explore the ill-kept, neglected by-road.

It was a curiosity which increased with every step I took, and became gradually coupled with a vague, incomprehensible promonition. What manner of a prospect I expected to behold from the top of the hill which I was rapidly ascending I cannot tell, but I had a distinct and firm conviction that something out of the common was about to happen to me.

By degrees the road along which I was walking presented more and more the appearance of a mere sheep track, until at last the hedges on either side terminated, the road itself degenerated into a footpath, and I found myself ascending a high turf-covered hill. I was the more surprised because in my wanderings around the district I had never noticed anything of the nature of an eminence in this direction. However, I kept steadily on, till at last I reached the summit, and, pausing to take breath, looked around me in a startled curiosity which was not without a considerable amount of awe.

Stranger and stranger it all seemed to me. Close by my side, on the highest point of the hill, was a round tower built of rough, gray stone, which I was quite certain that I had never seen before. Below me and all around, the country, clearly visible in the moonlight, was of a character totally unlike any which my many walks in the vicinity had made familiar to me. Instead of the long vineyard-covered slopes and groves of olive trees, was a thoroughly English deer park studded with giant oaks and dark patches of fir trees, and, stretching away beyond, a purely pastoral country with deep yellow cornfields and rich meadows, in many of which were dotted about the dark shapes of reclining cattle. On my left hand yawned a cleft-like chasm, overhung at the brink with thick bracken and drooping bushes—evidently a disused slate quarry, for a broken shaft lay rotting on the ground, and all around were thick layers of broken-up slate.

I passed my hand across my eyes, half wondering whether I had not been walking in my sleep; and then as I opened them again I started back with a cry of horror, which rang out sharply into the clear night air, only to die away in a sort of tremor from my white, trembling lips. Face to face with me stood, or rather crouched, a man, a tall, dark man, with white, scarred face and large, wildly bright eyes riveted on mine. It seemed as though he had turned round suddenly [illegible] down into the black depths of the chasm, and was horror-struck to see me.

Despite the cold night breeze, the perspiration streamed down from my hot, clammy forehead. I strove to speak, but I could not; like unwilling actors in a silent tableau we stood face to face, speechless, motionless, fascinated. No sound broke the deep stillness of the summer night; no words could I force from my ashen lips after that first hoarse cry.

Suddenly there came faintly to my ears the sound of a low, moaning cry, and almost simultaneously I saw a tuft of the bracken, which overhung the chasm, shaken violently. A deeper chill ran through me; it seemed as though the blood in my veins was turned to ice, and I stood motionless, my feet frozen to the ground with fear. Slowly I distinguished something white moving among the tuft of ferns. At first it seemed shapeless, but as my eyes grew accustomed to the darkness it gradually resolved itself into a pair of white hands clutching desperately at the roots of the ferns, as though the person to whom they belonged was striving frantically to draw himself up from beneath. Almost he seemed about to succeed, for, as I leaned over towards the spot with spellbound gaze, a white, desperate face, colorless with fear, save where smeared with blood from a wound in the temple, slowly appeared above the brink of the chasm, and I could tell from the convulsive swaying of the shoulders that the struggling man was making frantic attempts to obtain a foothold.

The horrible sight seemed to loosen my joints, which had become stiff with fear, and with a cry of encouragement I sprang forward to his aid. But the crowning horror of the whole scene was to come. The man whom I had first seen turned suddenly round, and, raising a gun which lay flat upon the ground beside him, brandished it high over his head and brought it down with a sickening thud upon the struggling fingers. A wild shriek of despair burst from the lips of his victim as his hands relaxed their hold upon the bracken, and I reached the edge of the chasm only in time to see him stiff and rigid in mid-air, his arms stretched wildly up to the starlit sky, in the very act of falling backwards, to see him and to recognize in his ghastly countenance the face of the man who had been my close companion for years, my sworn college chum, and the only man whom I had ever cared to call a friend—Philip Hardingstone, Squire of Little Hampton.

Wild impulses, mad thoughts, rushed like lightning through my surging brain. I would have leaped after him into the black chasm. I would have struck down the murderer of my friend, and, with my fingers clutching his throat, have wrought out a speedy vengeance. I would have shrieked out my horror to the silent night, but I was powerless. Again some strange metamorphosis crept subtly and swiftly over me. Not one of these things could I do. My feet seemed suddenly sinking through the yielding ground; the scene around me closed in, growing dimmer and dimmer, until at last everything—my senses, my instincts, my very consciousness of existence—was merged in an apathetic chaos. What immediately followed is hard to say. There was no period of absolute blank unconsciousness, but my material surroundings seemed suddenly to change from chaotic indistinctness to a scene which I knew quite well. I found myself, without any sense of motion or having moved, leaning against a gate looking over a sloping vineyard only a few yards away from the cross-roads. Thunderstruck and bewildered, I gazed wildly about me for a few moments. Then turning round, I hurried along the grass-grown track. In vain; I came to no hill, and the path beneath my feet grew into a broad, white, highroad, winding far away into a level stretch of rolling plains. This way and that, backward and forward, I ran like a man demented. Far away in the east the sun was slowly bursting through a mass of orange-streaked clouds, scattering a purple and golden glory all over the azure sky. Morning came, noon, and afternoon; then my wearied limbs gave way, and I sank down on the roadside and prayed that the unconsciousness that was already stealing over me, numbing my frenzied brain and throbbing senses, might come soon. It came as I lay there, blotting out the hideous scene which all through the day had been dancing before my eyes, and the memory of the ghastly, diabolical face of Philip Hardingstone's murderer. With a sigh of relief I turned on my side and fainted.

Some peasants going home from their day's toil in the vineyards stumbled upon me, and finding my address on an envelope in my pocket, carried me down to the hotel. Towards afternoon on the next day I recovered consciousness, and with it came flooding in upon the memory the fearful scene which I had witnessed. In spite of the doctor's peremptory orders, I insisted upon sitting up in bed and writing out with trembling fingers a telegram to Philip Hardingstone, imploring him to let me know by return that he was well. Until the reply came I could do nothing, but lay tossing restlessly about on the verge of a fever. Towards evening an orange-colored envelope was brought to my bedside, and I tore it hastily open.

"From John Elwick, butler at Little Hampton Hall, to Reginald Morton, Hotel de Paris: Your telegram received. Please come to England at once. Mr. Hardingstone was killed this morning falling down the slate quarry on Old John Hill."

For five weeks I lay ill of a brain fever, and even when its acute stage had passed, and I was able to move about a little, my doctor watched me anxiously, and seemed far from satisfied with my state. I myself knew that a change had come upon me. My memory seemed partially gone; I was subject to frequent fits of delirious excitement, and to corresponding periods of intense depression. When at last I flatly refused to stay where I was any longer, and left for England Dr. F.—— insisted upon my engaging a servant of his own recommendation to travel with me. And I knew why, I felt that I was going mad.

Immediately on my arrival in London I telegraphed to John Elwick to come up from Little Hampton to my hotel. The next morning he came.

From him I heard the manner in which his master was supposed to have met his death. It seemed that he had left home with his gun and a couple of dogs, and had sent down to the keeper's lodge for Wilson, the underkeeper, to meet him with some beaters and a favorite spaniel of his on Old John Hill. When they arrived there they found no sign of their master. They waited for an hour, and sent down to the house. The reply came back that Mr. Hardingstone had left at the time appointed, and had not returned. They waited for another hour, and then one of the keepers, strolling about, noticed the torn bracken and tumbled earth at the side of the quarry. Ropes were sent for, and a search was instantly commenced.

Late at night the body was found, fearfully mangled and crushed. The conclusion was that he had made a false step and fallen over the dangerously exposed edge by accident.

I listened to the recital in silence. When Elwick had concluded, and stood with his head turned suspiciously away from me, I asked a question:

"Who succeeded to the estates, Elwick?"

"Mr. Esholt, sir, his nephew" answered Elwick somewhat huskily.

"Mr. Esholt! Tell me everything that you know about him," I demanded.

Elwick shook his head slowly.

"That won't be much, sir, and nothing very good. They do say that he has been a terrible scamp. He's only been to the Hall twice, and each time it was to borrow money. I remember last time he came I heard the master say to him, just before he went, that it would be of no use his coming again, for he would never give him another penny."

"Where was Mr. Esholt when this happened?" I asked.

"In Chicago, sir; leastways, so he said," Elwick answered doubtfully. "He turned up about a fortnight ago in London, and said that he had come straight from there."

"Can you describe him?" I asked, and waited for the answer with an impatience which I utterly failed to conceal.

Elwick did so. He was tall and sallow, with black eyes and hair. Then I knew this was the man who had murdered my friend.

"It's almost a wonder, sir, as you haven't heard nothing of him, seeing as Miss Clara——" Elwick hesitated suddenly and looked doubtful.

"Do you mean my sister, Elwick?" I exclaimed.

"Yes, sir; Miss Clara and her aunt, Lady Alice, sir; they're often at the Hall, and they do say, sir, begging your pardon, as how we shall soon be having a mistress at the old place."

I arose from my seat dazed and trembling, and hurried from the room. In my other apartment was a little pile of letters which I had not as yet looked at. Hastily selecting those from my aunt and my sister, I tore them open and scanned them through.

My vague fears turned swiftly into a distinct sense of horror. From first to last they were full of praises of my old friend's nephew, who was quite a close neighbor of theirs, and my aunt's letters, which I looked at first, were full of hints as to the cause of his constant visits and attentions to my sister, Clara. I threw them down and opened Clara's letters. They were more explicit still. Mr. Esholt had asked her to become his wife. Would I come down and meet him? There was another letter in the pile, the handwriting of which was strange to me. I tore it open. It was signed George Esholt, and contained a formal offer for my sister's hand.

Again there came that terrible tightening of the brain, that hideous vision before my eyes, and a monotonous buzzing in my ears. I knew that this was madness, and I fell on my knees and prayed that it might leave me, if only for a little while. My prayer was granted. I fell asleep and awoke weak and full of strange thoughts and sensations, but with my purpose still clear before me.

By the mid-day train I traveled down to Little Hampton, and, hiring a fly at the station, drove at once to the hall. Mr. Esholt was in the park with some ladies, I was told. Would I await his return, or should they send in search for him? I replied that I would go and try to find him myself. And with that purpose I crossed the terraced lawn, and, dismissing the man who would have been my guide, I strode away across the smooth, velvety turf.

Far away in the distance, among the grey, crumbling walls of some ivy-covered ruins, I saw light dresses flitting about, and toward these I directed my footsteps. I reached them unobserved, and, crouching down behind the remnant of a pillar, peered into the enclosure where the little group were standing talking.

I saw what I expected to see: the man whose face had haunted me without ceasing since that terrible night, my aunt and my sister. They were speaking with raised voices, and I listened.

"Mr. Esholt, you positively shall not refuse to take me there again. I will go, sir. If you won't take me, I shall go alone."

I recognized Clara's imperious voice, and I knew at once that she would have her way. But he did not yield all at once. I saw his pale face grow paler, and he seemed to be keeping back a shudder only with a great effort.

"Clara," he said, "can you wonder that I hate the place? Don't ask me to take you there, please?"

There was a brief silence, and I leaned my burning forehead against the stone wall, and through the chinks I could see that my sister was standing a little apart, with an angry frown upon her fair face. Then he approached her slowly. There was a short whispered conversation, and finally she left his side with an air of satisfied triumph.

"Auntie, we are going. Will you come?"

Aunt Alice shook her head and leaned back in her impromptu seat—the fallen, moss-covered trunk of a giant tree.

"No, I'll wait for you. My hill-climbing days are over."

Then I saw them leave her, hand-in-hand, and at a safe distance I followed, keeping just inside a long plantation of fir trees during the first part of the ascent, and afterward bending low down among the tall bracken, ready to disappear altogether should they look around. Before me lay the high grass-covered hill, the round, gray tower, and the quarry, just as I had seen them all on that horrible night. At every step I took, every time my eyes fell upon him bending over my sister with all a lover's tenderness, the weight upon my brain seemed to grow heavier. Earth and sky seemed dancing around me in fantastic shapes, and the dark branches of the pine trees stooped down and whispered to me, murder, murder, murder! A band of iron seemed to be tightening itself around my forehead, but my feet touched the grass and met with no more resistance than if I had been walking upon air. All continuity of thought and memory seemed to be breaking up within me, and I felt a stranpge, wild craving to shout, to run and leap, to burst out into peals of laughter. But still I kept my eyes on the ascending pair in front of me and stealthily followed them. They reached the top almost at the same moment as I also gained it by a more devious track and concealed byself behind a mass of rock. They moved to the side of the chasm, she full of awed curiosity, he pale and shrinking. Then up from my hiding place I leaped, and stood before them, wild and disheveled, with my burning eyes fixed upon his ghastly face, pointing with shaking

"THE NAME MOST MENTIONED AND IN EVERY ONE'S MOUTH, IS THE SMITH-BRISCOE SHOE CO., AND THEY COME FROM THE SOUTH."

COPIED FROM THE SHOE RETAILER, JULY 17, 1909.

A WONDERFUL EXHIBIT FROM LYNCHBURG, VA.

"I thought somebody said they were shoemakers, but I'm calling them magicians," said a visitor to the fair recently in referring to the exhibit of fine shoes for men made by Smith-Briscoe Co., of Lynchburg, Va. "This company has demonstrated to a large number of astonished people in the trade that it can make shoes to retail at $5.00 and $6.00 a pair that are well worth the price."

Pryor N. Smith of the company and popular J. M. Gregg have been having a strenuous time this week, as the exhibit of this company has been and still is the talk of the trade.

"When you see our samples, you see our shoes," is this company's motto, and the "we didn't think you could do it" expression has been the most common form of congratulations extended to the company.

That a shoe-manufacturing concern in Lynchburg, Va., can produce high-grade shoes for men good enough to suit the expert buyers in Boston, New York and elsewhere, is evidence that the company from the Southland with Louis Mulready as superintendent, is going home.

CHAPTER XIII.

WEAVERS OF WEBS.

When John Shil returned to his magnificent suite of rooms in the Hotel Bristol, he poured himself out a strong brandy and soda, and drained it to the last drop. Then, with unsteady hands, he lit a cigar, and puffed at it furiously, till half the room was hidden in a blue cloud of smoke.

Before two minutes had elapsed, he had bitten off the end of the cigar, and had thrown the piece into the fireplace. He felt in his pocket for a pipe, filled and lit it, and gripped the hard vulcanite with his teeth. Then, flinging himself into an easy chair, he stared at the ceiling, and tried to control the wild thoughts that coursed through his brain.

In time everything resolved itself into one solid fact. Laura Vane, in spite of all her protestations of love, had not remained true to him, and was now the wife of another man. His mind reverted to the day she had told him she could never be his wife, to the long slopes of the Stonewold Hills, sparkling in the sunlight, to the heart-breaking sound of her voice as she told him that she could never be his wife. He saw, as in a dream, the little village of Laverstone, gray and clear-cut beneath him, the thin lines of smoke rising in the frosty air. He even thought he could hear the distant bark of a dog, and the rattle of a horse's hoofs, as the animal pawed the iron ground with impatience. It all came back to him with horrible reality. At that time—in the bitter hour of parting—he had not realized what it all meant. He could not understand why Laura had refused to marry him, although she loved him. Now he knew the truth. She was married to another man—a man she did not love.

The news of her disappearance from Laverstone had come to him in the person of old Sam Vane himself. The distracted father, when he learned that his daughter had never reached her aunt's house, and when all inquiries had failed to produce any information beyond the fact that the girl had arrived safely at Paddington, had come straight to his daughter's lover, and had taxed him with knowledge of her hiding place.

John Shil well remembered the painful scene that had followed. The old man's feeble fury, the white face and trembling hands, the hot words of accusation, the indignant denial, his own anger at the news, his offers of help. How clearly it all stood out on the pages of his life!

And then, scarcely a fortnight afterward, had come the cable from America telling him that his cousin, William Shil of Pittsburgh, was dead, and had left him a large fortune. He remembered how bitterly he had laughed when he first heard the news. The money had meant little or nothing to him. He was earning a good income, and was able to gratify most of his simple wants. But in a few days his views on the matter had undergone a marked change. He had realized, on reflection, that this money would place in his hands a great power, to be used either for good or evil. It would, above all, enable him to prosecute his search for Laura Vane by every means in the power of mortal man.

During the last six months he had spent money like water. All the great detective agencies of Europe had been set on the track of the missing girl. Advertisements had been inserted in thousands of newspapers. John Shil had traveled from place to place making personal inquiries, and following clew after clew, till each thread had snapped in his hands.

And then more than four months after Laura's disappearance had come the telegram from Paris. He took the piece of paper once more from his pocket, and the words danced before his eyes as he read them for the hundredth time.

"Please do not continue search for me. I ask this for my own sake and yours as well.—Laura."

She had evidently seen one of his advertisements, and had hastened to check him in his search. How obscure the words had seemed when he first read them! How clear they were to him now! In the light of the information he had extracted from Leonore Jackson, it was quite evident why Laura did not wish him to continue the search for her.

He looked at the telegram for a few moments with tears in his eyes. Then his grief suddenly gave way to anger—to blind, unreasoning fury. He rose to his feet with a savage oath, and, crumpling the piece of paper in his hand, tore it into fifty pieces and scattered them on the floor.

"I will find them," he muttered. "By heaven I will find them, and then I——" He paused, and clenched his powerful fingers into the palms of his hands, as though he were choking the life out of some living thing.

"She shall pay for it," he cried, "and he—ah, the man—I wonder, I wonder."

He paced up and down the room, his face white with fury, and every muscle in his body tense and trembling. Then suddenly he stopped, as though turned to stone, and stood as motionless as a statue. Then he broke into a laugh.

"Of course! Of course!" he muttered. "Ye gods, what a fool I have been!"

He looked at his watch, crossed quickly over to the fireplace, and rang the bell. A man servant entered, and stood by the door, awaiting orders.

"I am going to England, Jenkins, by the next boat. Pack my things at once. You can come with me. I shall not give up these rooms. Hughes must stay here."

"Yes, sir," the man answered; "but if I may venture to suggest, sir, you will be too late for the night boat, sir."

"Get along and do as I tell you. We go tonight. There are special trains to be had, and a special boat, if the other has gone. I'll give you ten minutes."

When John Shil reached Calais, the night boat had left. But he chartered a steamer, and was in Dover an hour after the boat train had steamed out of the station. A special train took him to London, and he reached Charing Cross at 7 o'clock.

Before that evening he had found what he wanted in the records of Somerset House. He had scarcely dared to hope that Tankerlane had been married in his own name. But there it stood out, bold and clear, for all men to read. William Joyce Tankerlane, married to Laura Vance on January 21.

He obtained a certified copy of the marriage certificate, and, returning to his hotel, tried to decide on some definite course of action. His first impulse was to go down to Laverstone, and interview Sir Robert Tankerlane; his second to wire the news to Sam Vane; but after a careful consideration of the consequences attending either of these proceedings, he resolved to keep his secret to himself for the present, and devote all his energies to finding William Tankerlane and his wife.

His mind at once reverted to Leonore Jackson. He believed that she knew more than she cared to tell about Tankerlane's movements, and he determined to drag the truth from her by fair means or foul.

He left that night again for Paris, but, before he reached Charing Cross, he called in at a telegraph office, and dispatched the following message to Sam Vane:

"Have heard news of Laura. Don't worry. All is well. Will send for you directly I have seen her.—JOHN SHIL."

He thought it would be a kindly act to send this message to a heart-broken old man. It did not commit him to any definite statement, and it would bring some small ray of light into a mind that was groping and pitifully crying out in the darkness.

But John Shil had much else to think of that night—so much that he did not sleep at all on the journey from Calais to Paris. The train spun on through the darkness, the darkness paled to gray dawn, and then the sun flushed the flat plains into a sea of green and gold. But still the young millionaire stared out of the windows, and saw no more in the sunlight than he had seen in the shadows of night—only the white face of Laura Vane, as he had seen it on the slopes of the Stonewold Hills, with love in the lark eyes, and sorrow on the trembling lips.

When John Shil reached the Gare du Nord, he drove straight to his rooms, had a cold bath and some breakfast, and then quietly thought out some means of inducing Leonore Jackson to tell him all that she knew about the Tankerlanes.

His feverish madness of the night before had vanished and left in its place an almost unnatural calm. His mind was clear, and, for the time being, devoid of emotion. From the wronged lover, hot with rage, and distracted with the violence of his feelings, he had passed into the calculating schemer, the man of business, who had something definite to do, and who has to think out the best way of doing it.

He smoked for half an hour after breakfast, and then wrote two notes. The first was addressed to a Monsieur Flamieu, 36 Rue d'Or, and ran as follows:

"Dear Sir: I should be glad if you would make inquiries at all the hotels in Paris, and find out where a Mr. and Mrs. Tankerlane have been staying. They left about two months ago."

The second was to Leonore Jackson, and was equally brief and to the point:

"Dear Miss Jackson: I should like to call on you this afternoon at 3 o'clock. Please let me know by bearer if you can see me.—Yours sincerely, JOHN SHIL."

He sealed up the envelopes, wrote the word "urgent" on both of them, and rang the bell.

"Deliver these notes at once, Hughes," he said, when one of his servants appeared. "And wait for an answer at Mademoiselle Jackson's house."

In an hour's time the man returned with a note. Shil tore it open, read the contents and smiled. Leonore Jackson had consented to see him.

At 3 o'clock to the minute he was shown into the large salon. It was empty, and he walked round the room, looking at the pictures, books and ornaments, and trying to form some opinion of the character of the woman who owned them. John Shil was actuated by no idle curiosity when he took careful note of his surroundings. He was planning a campaign, and even the smallest item of information about his adversary was likely to be of service to him.

Leonore Jackson kept him waiting for twenty minutes, and at the end of that time, he had formed a rough estimate of her character. She was, without doubt, a woman of taste, with a leaning towards the sentimental in art and literature. She was vain, not with the vanity of a beautiful and foolish woman, but with the quiet strength of a proud and self-reliant mind, conscious of its own value. On one of the tables lay a handsome quarto volume, bound in morocco, by Riviere. On its pages were the signatures of the greatest Frenchmen of the day, and each one of the writers had signed his name to a few words of eulogy. A humble woman would have kept such a book in her private boudoir. But it occupied a conspicuous place in Leonore's salon. It was placed where visitors could not help seeing it, and with its binding of green and scarlet and gold it would have been conspicuous in any room.

Lastly John Shil came to the conclusion that Leonore, like most actresses, was fond of admiration, and the good opinion of other people occupied a very high place in her estimate of what is really worth having. The room was literally strewn with tributes of admiration from men who appeared to worship her genius. musicians, even philosophers and divines, had vied with each other in presenting her with costly trifles. It was clear that she was a woman of importance, and she did not hide the fact from the world.

As John Shill was examining a curious Louis XIV snuff box, presented, as the inscription on the lid testified, by no less a person than the President of the republic himself, Leonore entered the room.

"Yes," she exclaimed gaily, as she came towards him, "is it not beautiful? Of course I don't take snuff; but it does for anything."

John Shil laid down the box and held out his hand.

"Lucky woman," he said with a smile, "you seem to have all the world at your feet."

She took his outstretched hand and laughed.

"It is well to make hay while the sun shines," she replied, "in a month, a week, perhaps tomorrow, my sun will set, and a new light will come up on the horizon. And then, Pauvre P'tite Jackson."

"That is the fate of professional beauties," he said gravely, "not of genius. But I can imagine that it is—possibly to get tired of all this," and he included the whole roomful of presents in a slight motion of his hands.

"Yes," replied Leonore slowly, "I suppose it is possible to get tired of anything—but please sit down, Mr. Shil. You marked your letter 'Urgent.' You did not come here to talk to me about my little souvenirs."

She threw herself into a deep, high-backed chair, which seemed to engulf her tiny body, and Shil took a seat by her side on a particularly uncomfortable chair of the Louis Quinze period.

The woman, who was a little irritated by the adroitness with which Shil introduced one subject after another, was the first to come to the point.

"Well, Mr. Shil," she said, taking advantage of a momentary pause in the conversation.

He did not answer, but gave a swift glance at her face. He did not pretend to misunderstand her question.

"What have you to say to me?" she continued.

He looked on the ground for a moment and then smiled.

"I am really afraid to say it," he replied, "after what you said to me the day before yesterday, and after my promise—but if you will, for a few moments, release me from that promise, I assure you that I will not be guilty of any discourtesy."

Leonore frowned slightly, and was silent.

"I am quite calm," he continued, "but I have something to say of importance. Believe me, I am quite calm, I am not going to shout or be melodramatic. I only want to tell you something that I should like you to know."

"Very well, Mr. Shil," she replied; "I will listen to you."

"Since I last saw you," he began, "I have been to London and back."

He paused, and Leonore looked at him with interest.

"Yes," he continued, "I have been to London, and I have found out the name of the man."

"I might just as well have told you," said Leonore. "Of course directly you knew that she was married——"

"Yes, of course, of course," he went on hurriedly; "but don't imagine, Miss Jackson, that I have come here to triumph over you. On the contrary, I have come in a spirit of deep humiliation. I only wished you to know that I have learnt the truth, so that you may feel that you have nothing to hide from me, and when we meet, we can be good friends."

"Is that all you wished to say?" she asked, with a glance of suspicion at his face.

"Yes," he replied, "only that. I shall, of course, have no difficulty in finding William Tankerlane. His family are well known to me. I was his father's land agent for some years."

"And you intend to find him?" asked Leonore, examining a gold and tortoise-shell paper-knife which she had picked up from the table.

"It would do no good," he replied, quietly. "It would do no good, Miss Jackson."

His voice was low-pitched, but it had in it the ring of hopeless despair. Leonore looked at his face, calm and rigid, with never a twitch of the muscles or movement of the flesh to betray what was passing in the man's mind. His eyes were fixed on the carpet, and she could not see them, else she might have learnt that the calm voice and the impressive face concealed a fury that burnt like the fires of hell.

"It would do no good," she replied slowly. "Please do not try to find them." There was a note of fear in her voice. She knew the wrong that William Tankerlane had done to Laura Vane. John Shil still supposed that the woman he loved was Tankerlane's wife. Leonore knew enough of the man before her to guess what would happen if he learnt the truth. She had already seen his blazing eyes, his flushed cheeks, and his clenched hands. She told herself that if ever the two men met and the truth were known, one of them would die.

"I shall try and forget," John Shil said abruptly, after a long pause. "I must find something to occupy my mind."

"Fall in love with another woman," said Leonore with a smile; "then you will soon forget."

"In love?" he queried sadly. "No, I am afraid, Miss Jackson, that——"

"Oh, it is easy enough," she interrupted; "you have no idea how easy it is if one only tries. I once had to try and forget. Look at me now—'La P'tite Jackson,' without a care in the world!"

He raised his eyes and looked at her face, bright and vivacious—the face of a woman who enjoys life to the full. Then he laughed and rose to his feet.

"I won't bore you any longer, Miss Jackson," he said. "All is plain and open between us now. I have much to thank you for. Perhaps—some day—I will follow your advice, I will forget; but at present——" He shrugged his shoulders and held out his hand. Leonore shook it with more warmth perhaps than was necessary.

"You will come agin," she said softly, as he reached the door.

"Yes," he replied, "I will come again."

When he had gone, Leonore reseated herself in the big armchair and knitted her brows in thought.

When half an hour had passed by, she rose to her feet, and, walking slowly over to a large mirror, she regarded her own image earnestly.

"If I could make him fall in love with me," she said to herself, "he would forget—and it would be for his own good, and for the good of Laura. And it might even amuse me. Who knows?"

Leonore herself certainly did not know. But the Fates, spinning their webs in silence, knew well enough, and they smiled.

WIDOW SHOCKS STAID BRITONS.

MRS. GEORGE LAW OF AMERICA SURPRISES LONDON.

Sued by Dressmaker for Five Thousand Dollars Because Too Busy to Sign Check—is a Fairy Godmother to Struggling Artists. Her Love of Luxury.

[STAFF CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

LONDON, Aug. 18.—Most fashionable Americans will remember Mrs. George Law, the young widow of the New York-street railway magnate, who has lived on this side of the water for a good many years. Mrs. Law has just been having trouble wtih her dressmaker, who sued her for $5000, and now this has directed attention to her over here. At one time she promised to be a bright and particular star in the best Anglo-American set. Of late, however, she has drifted into a cosmopolitan crowd, which she says she "likes a thousand times better, as it has more 'go,' more enthusiasm, more daring." At heart, notwithstanding her love for clothes and luxury, Mrs. Law is something of a Bohemian, as her erratic existence proves.

It is fatal for a society woman, unless she is a peeress, to get into trouble with her tradespeople. Mrs. Law never answered letters, neglected bills, some say "because she had not time to sign a check." At any rate, she made her tradespeople furious, they talked about her, the servants, though they were extremely fond of her, did likewise, and soon enough of the gossip got to the ears of the best set. Members of this coterie may not pay their own bills, but they resent before anything the adoption of such a privilege on the part of a newcomer, because it suggests she is not well off. If Mrs. Law were a calculating woman, she would have realized that "newcomers" are admitted to society for what they possess.

Curiously enough, although this woman is so devoted to pretty gowns she dislikes jewels and does not wear even a wedding ring.

Stories of Mrs. Law's good nature are numerous. She is proverbially kind to artists who are not successful. She has helped many a lame dog over a stile. "It would be an advertisement for me to sing at your house," some down-at-heel man or woman would often say to her. "Then come along," she would answer. To the man she would add, "But you must let me give you a five-pound note for a new evening suit." To the woman she would send one of her own exquisite frocks which she had worn but a few times. Her dearest enemies used to say that she "should be just before she was generous."

She is pronounced the most luxurious American at thi side. The accounts of her baths of perfume, her Swedish treatments for keeping her neck, shoulders and arms in perfect condition, her elaborate complexion culture and hairdressing operations, special artists from Paris being requisitioned at certain times to perform the two latter, all sound like a chapter from the life history of some great lady of ancient Rome. A great believer in the beautifying powers of rest, she never dreamed of rising before lunch time. If she was going to a ball after the opera or theater she never got up until dinner time.

"One's beauty is one's life," she says, "and above all things she should make a point of treasuring it."

She diets by fits and starts, one time being a fruitarian, another a vegetarian, yet again living on milk and too erratic to stick to anything and before long drifts back to luxurious repasts.

She says she never intends to remarry. Her dearest enemies doubt the statement. They say when the right man, with the right position and other things, appears on the horizon she will be ready. That she might marry if she chose any hour is admitted in the same quarter. The German Prince who has been at her beck and call so long is not able to afford so luxurious a wife.

POLYGLOT OPERA.

Polyglot opera is tolerated in some Old World cities to an extreme that baffles the understanding of spoiled New Yorkers, who may be asked to take their opera in mixed French and Italian once or twice in a season in an emergency, but no oftener. Le Ménestrel reports a performance of "L'Africaine," in Budapest, in which the Selika sang in Italian, the Nerusko in French, the other principals in German, and the chorus in Hungarian. An English writer reads into this stage Babel a plea for Esperanto for opera.

Begin Easy and Work Up.

A crochety old farmer of Massachusetts had trouble with his neighbor, and as a result sought his counsel, ex-Congressman Samuel L. Powers.

"I want yeow to write him a letter an' tell him this here foolishness hez got ter stop," he declared firmly. "I know what I want ter say, but I ain't got the larnin' ter put it just right."

"What do you want to say?" Mr. Powers asked.

"Wa-al, begin by tellin' him that he's the durndest, lyin'est, thievin'est, low-downest skunk on

NEW BOOKS REVIEWED.

[BY THE TIMES REVIEWER.]

Biology in Brief.

WHAT IS PHYSICAL LIFE—ITS ORIGIN AND NATURE. By William Hanna Thomson, M.D., LL.D. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. (Price $1.20 net.)

The study and experimentation concerning the origin and development of life is today, without doubt, the most prominent and important subject of scientific investigation. It was but a short time ago that a discussion on this subject was based on speculation and tradition. It is only recently that the scientists, in carrying on their research in general biology, have used observation as a means of solution. Even now the study of biology is in its infancy, and as yet can offer but hypotheses to cover its main points. Dr. Thomson in his book, "What is Physical Life?" endeavors primarily to acquaint the unscientific reader with the principles of this investigation, and to present in a clear and condensed manner the different theories which have evolved and the few conclusions which have been reached. However, Dr. Thomson says that enough has been demonstrated already to prove that the hypothesis of earthly life ever having had a spontaneous, or mechanical, or physico-chemical origin, is wholly untenable. This conclusion, he tells us, although it be supported also by other evidences, is the only one that can be deduced from the fact that life existed on the earth both in specific and hereditary forms for millions of years before a single living thing visible to the naked eye appeared. This he believes was the origin of life. In substantiation of this, he points to the fact that every form of visible life today, no matter how large, has its inception in a single microscopic cell and that every descendant from it begins this same way. Dr. Thomson brings out interestingly the fact that the ancient and permanent unicellular living forms still constitute the largest and most powerful division of the living kingdom, and that, with this relationship to all visible forms, it would be impossible for us to prolong our own earthly existence until we understood the laws which govern the original domain of physical law.

First, the Darwinian theory and those influenced by it and complementary to it, are discussed and numerous quotations given from such men as Sir Robert Ball, Sir Thistledown Dyer, Carl Pearson, Nageli, E. W. McBride, H. F. Osborne, Von Hartmann, Henslow and Kellogg. His aim in the discussion of the Darwinian theory is to show the inadequacy of Darwin's conclusions in explaining the origin of physical life. Dr. Thomson then takes up the subject of reproduction and heredity, and points out the difference existing in the unicellular micro-organism such as the protozoa, algae and the foraminifera. Following these he discusses the multicellular forms of life, explaining why the chief characteristic of the metazoa is development, while that of unicellular organisms is fixity.

On the whole the book is interesting, gathering together, as it does, the different phases of the newest biological theories. Dr. Thomson does not attempt to answer the question concerning the origin of life, but his idea evidently has been to present in brief the field which has been traversed to date by the leading biological students. He gets nowhere; possibly because biology has gotten nowhere. But those who are interested in the speculations of physical life and who would like to learn how very little we know of organic matter, should read the book.

Merit Plus Interest.

THE MEN OF THE MOUNTAIN. By S. R. Crockett. Harper & Bros., New York. (Price $1.50.)

I have always held the contention, in the face of great opposition, that it was unnecessary to have poor books. Every year, especially during the summer months, publishers issue hordes of books written by people with no literary or artistic sense. The books are designed merely to pass a few hours away to create a temporal excitement.

Mr. Crockett, in "The Men of the Mountain," has not only fulfilled the destiny and ultimate purpose of the light summer novel, but at the same time has given us a book of much literary merit. The book is full of emotion and color. Though his plot is intricate and significant, it does not over-shadow the story to the extent of obscuring the reality of the characterizations and the romantic atmosphere of the time and place in which he has cast his tale. They are the things that make Mr. Crockett's story worth while. There is a difference between frivolity and exuberance; between romance and sentimentality; between adventure and melodrama, and these differences distinguish "The Men of the Mountain" from the ordinary run of fool fiction.

The story itself is full of life; and that life is participated in by plausible men and women with individuality and characteristic traits. David Alix, Hermann Falk, Noelie, Ludwic Villars—these people impress themselves upon one as human and vital, and one's interest in their developments and interrelations, during those dark days of the Franco-Prussian War in 1871, has an intimacy that one does not feel in reading of the dangers and entanglements of the stock marionettes of fiction.

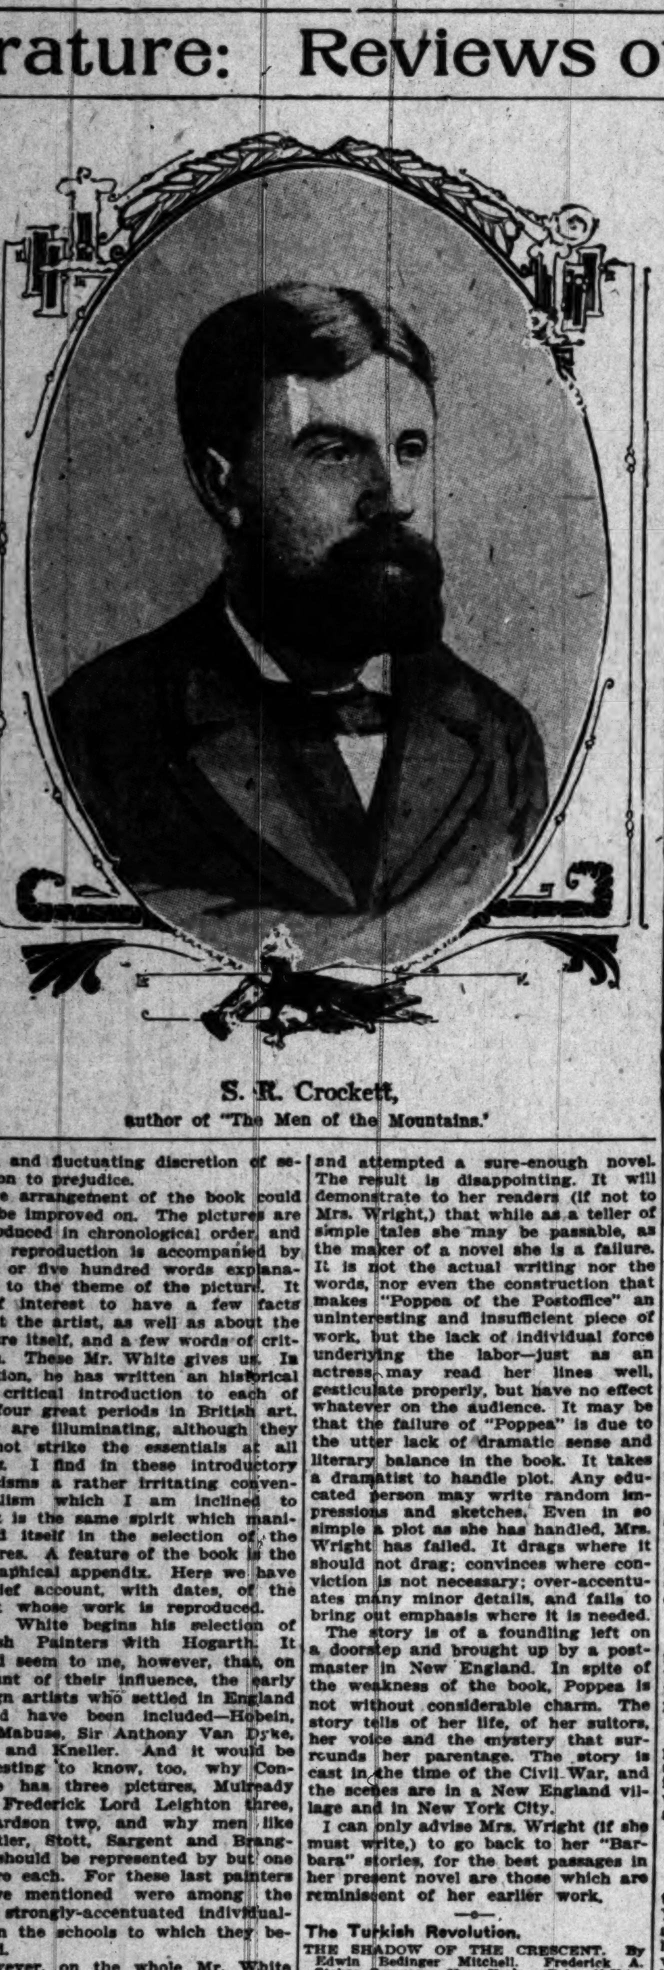
David is the pastor of a church in a little French village on the frontier of Switzerland. Some of the Pomeranians of Von Hartmann capture David and are about to shoot him when Falk, a onetime schoolmate of David's intercepts the execution. Later Falk is shot and wounded; and the romance begins when Noelie, who is David's half-sister, nurses him back to health. Much of the interest in the story is motivated by Villars who conspires against David and his mother, but who in the end is worsted.

There is enough humor in the story to give it flavor; enough seriousness of purpose to give it plausibility; enough excitement and complication to make it deeply interesting; and it is written with sufficient ability and literary skill to satisfy those who demand artistic merit in addition to plot.

An Anthology of Artists.

THE MASTER PAINTERS OF BRITAIN. By Gleeson White. John Lane Company, New York. (Price $3.)

The idea of Gleeson White in arranging an anthology of the Master Painters of Britain is much finer in conception than in the actual application of the idea. Until Mr. White explains to us the reasons for certain peculiarities of inclusion and exclusion, we can only attribute the uneven and fluctuating discretion of selection to prejudice.



S. R. Crockett,

author of "The Men of the Mountains.'

The arrangement of the book could not be improved on. The pictures are reproduced in chronological order, and each reproduction is accompanied by four or five hundred words explanatory to the theme of the picture. It is of interest to have a few facts about the artist, as well as about the picture itself, and a few words of criticism. These Mr. White gives us. In addition, he has written an historical and critical introduction to each of the four great periods in British art. They are illuminating, although they do not strike the essentials at all times. I find in these introductory criticisms a rather irritating conventionalism which I am inclined to think is the same spirit which manifested itself in the selection of the pictures. A feature of the book is the biographical appendix. Here we have a brief account, with dates, of the artist whose work is reproduced.

Mr. White begins his selection of British Painters with Hogarth. It would seem to me, however, that, on account of their influence, the early foreign artists who settled in England should have been included—Hobein, Jan Mabuse, Sir Anthony Van Dyke, Lely and Kneller. And it would be interesting to know, too, why Constable has three pictures, Mulready two, Frederick Lord Leighton three, Orchardson two, and why men like Whistler, Stott, Sargent and Brangwyn should be represented by but one picture each. For these last painters I have mentioned were among the most strongly-accentuated individualists in the schools to which they belonged.

However, on the whole Mr. White has done too good a thing in his anthology for me to quibble with the minor details of inclusion and rejection. He has presented us with a panoramic view of the development of British painting, giving each school its due; showing no partiality either to the realists, the poeticists, the anecdotists, or the pre-Raphaelites. The thing has never been done in just this way before. It is not an anthology of paintings, but of painters; and I trust that Mr. White will carry on this idea until it embraces the artistic histories of France, Germany, Italy and Spain.

A Wondrous Tale.

THE MASTER BUILDERS. By James Edwin Dunning. D. Appleton Company, New York. (Price $1.50.)

Here is an "Exhibit A" fool story. It would have been more astonishing had a little ingenuity been used in the telling of it and a slight effort been made to create an impression of plausibility. As it is, it is mildly and burlesquely amusing—like a clown who walks on ten-foot stilts.

The tale centers about a Dreadnought which the United States is building. Our German enemies (we infer that they are German by certain, described characteristics,) do a great deal of clumsy plotting to make away with this wonderful cruiser. The climax of the book is the account of one of the most wonderful sea battles which has ever been fought, in which the Dreadnought (which in some strange manner is officiated by the young gentleman-hero,) swamps everything in sight and wins the day. That Mr. Dunning has never seen any salt water is very evident by the bizarre and wondrous descriptions of the fight. The honors of heroine are somewhat divided. The women of the book are a stupid lot anyway, and, as fas as I am personally concerned, I am strong for the bleached blonde, although she was a member of the Dutch contingent.

Inadequate.

POPPEA OF THE POSTOFFICE. By Mabel Osgood Wright. Macmillan Company, New York. (Price $1.50.)

Mabel Osgood Wright is one of those unfortunate women who has the instinct to write but not the ability. Writers are not born, but made; and the process of making has not been completed as far as Mrs. Wright is concerned. Of all the crafts, perhaps the writing craft is the most difficult when we consider the amount of study and actual practice that it requires to be perfected. To feel things keenly, to read the simpler manifestations of human nature, and to have a desire for self expression, does not constitute being a writer. To a certain extent Mrs. Wright has these attributes. As a producer of simple, disjointed and not very exacting literary exercises, this writer did very favorable work; the simplicity of her task hid to a great extent her literary inadequacies. She has now come forth and attempted a sure-enough novel. The result is disappointing. It will demonstrate to her readers (if not to Mrs. Wright,) that while as a teller of simple tales she may be passable, as the maker of a novel she is a failure. It is not the actual writing nor the words, nor even the construction that makes "Poppea of the Postoffice" an uninteresting and insufficient piece of work, but the lack of individual force underlying the labor—just as an actress may read her lines well, gesticulate properly, but have no effect whatever on the audience. It may be that the failure of "Poppea" is due to the utter lack of dramatic sense and literary balance in the book. It takes a dramatist to handle plot. Any educated person may write random impressions and sketches. Even in so simple a plot as she has handled, Mrs. Wright has failed. It drags where it should not drag; convinces where conviction is not necessary; over-accentuates many minor details, and fails to bring out emphasis where it is needed.

The story is of a foundling left on a doorstep and brought up by a postmaster in New England. In spite of the weakness of the book, Poppea is not without considerable charm. The story tells of her life, of her suitors, her voice and the mystery that surrounds her parentage. The story is cast in the time of the Civil War, and the scenes are in a New England village and in New York City.

I can only advise Mrs. Wright (if she must write,) to go back to her "Barbara" stories, for the best passages in her present novel are those which are reminiscent of her earlier work.

The Turkish Revolution.

THE SHADOW OF THE CRESCENT. By Edwin Bedinger Mitchell. Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. (Price $1.50.)

Mr. Mitchell, in this book of intrigue and adventure, is running a close, and not unlike, second to Anthony Hope. Instead of "Zenda," however, the adventures of this fiery tale hover closely around the Turkish revolution. The young American who is the hero of this tale gets into all kinds of trouble, most of which is brought on by the possession of a ring. He is unable to get away from the spies of the Sultan, who, not content at harassing him, kidnap the heroine, with whom the hero is in love (a remarkable situation!) The rescue and the happy ending come when the Young Turks rise up and smite the reactionaries.

On the whole, the story is almost exciting. There are pistols galore, and very fine love-making. It hasn't the charm, however, of those classic adventures of Hope's, but not seldom that feeling of romantic magnificence gets into the lines. The less said of the style the better, perhaps. Mr. Mitchell writes like a first-class police reporter, and luckily does not attempt literary effect—a proceeding which, from all indications, would prove futile.

LITERARY CHIT-CHAT.

Louis V. Ledoux has taken the theme of his forthcoming poetic drama, Yzdra, from the Secreta Secretorum, a book which, although practically unheard of today, had an enormous vogue in the Middle Ages, and is, perhaps, the most successful literary forgery known. The probable author, a Syrian physician of the eighth century, after gathering together many strange facts and fancies, decided to work his material into a volume of advice to a ruler, and, realizing the obvious advantages of such a course, passed it off as a translation of a lost work of Aristotle written to his pupil, Alexander the Great, the manuscript of which had been shown him by an ancient hermit in the temple of the oracle of the sun. The book was translated into Arabic, Hebrew, Persian and Latin, was used in the early European romances, commented upon in perfect good faith by Thomas Aquias and many others of the early theologians and alchemists, was copied by one of the popes, had a numerous literary progeny, chief among which is, perhaps, the Prince of Machiavelli, and was still being reprinted a thousand years after its compilation.

The story upon which Mr. Ledoux has founded his play—that of the poisoned Hindu princess, who was sent to Alexander in order that she might work his death through her poisonous power—is intensely dramatic and well worth the telling. It is curious that, although the legend has been referred to many times from the days of Sir Thomas Browne and the "Anatomy of Melancholy" down to Hawthorne and Holmes, it has never before had extended literary treatment.

The nature of the hitherto unpublished material concerning Henry Hudson, which is a feature of Thomas A. Janvier's "Henry Hudson," just announced by the Harpers, is indicated by the author in his preface. Herein he speaks of contemporary Hudson documents "'which have remained neglected for three centuries, and here are published for the first time." The discovery of these is due, according to Mr. Janvier, to the painstaking research of R. G. Marsden, M. A., the importance of whose discovery Mr. Jangler recognized, afterward directing the search in the record office in London, that has resulted in their present reproduction. "We still are ignorant of what punishment was inflicted upon the mutineers of the "Discovery," says Mr. Janvier, "or even if they were punished at all. The primary importance of these documents, however, is not that they establish the fact—until now not established—that the mutineers were brought to trial; it is that they embody the sworn testimony, hitherto unproduced, of six members of Hudson's crew."

Hamlin Garland, whose announcement that he would probably write no more novels, but plays instead, occasioned outspoken regret, has modified his resolve, and a new book by him is expected to be in the hands of his publishers some time in September.

William Dean Howells, who sailed for Europe early in the month, will remain in Carlsbad for the major part of the sojourn. The fact that Mr. Howells is only fulfilling his custom in going abroad at about this period of the year discredits the exaggerated reports of his illness. The Howells's author of "Poppea of the Postoffice."

Mable Osgood Wright,

cottage at Kittery Point has not been closed, and this leads to the possibility that Mr. Howells may return there before coming back to New York for the winter.

Louise Closser Hale, author of "The Actress," has returned from the European motor trip which she and her husband, Walter Hale, have been making through Spain, France and Italy. The tour was shortened to permit Mrs. Hale to begin rehearsals for a part which she is to play in a new dramatic production of the autumn, entitled "The Sins of Society."

Mr. Foulis announces five new Nietzsche volumes for publication on October 1, under the editorship of Dr. Oscar Levy—"Thus Spake Zarathustra," Nietzsche's mature and constructive volume; "The Genealogy of Morals," containing acute remarks on the origin of sin and punishment; "Human, All-Too-Human," part I, giving over 400 incisive aphorisms on science, art and religion; "The Future of Our Educational Institutions," a series of lectures on public school and university training; "And, The Will to Power," part I, one of Nietzsche's last works, synthetising his previous volumes. All the translations are prefaced with explanatory introductions, and in addition the "Zarathustra" contains a badly-needed commentary explaining the obscure allusions to be found in nearly every paragraph of that famous work.

Did Lola Montez have a daughter? The reappearance in New York of the famous Mrs. Des Debar, who is wanted by Scotland Yard for leaving England while on parole, recalls the first appearance of this adventuress some thirty odd years ago. At this time she called herself the Princess Editha, and claimed to be the daughter of the famous adventuress of the forties, Lola Montez, and King Ludwig I, of Bavaria. The truth of Mrs. Des Debar's claim may be examined by the account of Lola Montez and her relations with King Ludwig in Edmund B. d'Auvergne's biography, "Lola Montez," recently published by John Lane Company.

ON THE PIER.

BY DR. SACKVILLE MARTIN.

They met on the pier. They had met before, but not for two years. She was in white pique and looked dainty and fresh. He wore a yachting cap and a blue serge suit.

He had never been on a yacht, much less handled one; but the cap was de regueur with the class of society in which he moved. The strong sunlight and the blue sea were around them.

She spoke first. "Fancy meeting you!" she said.

"It isn't fancy, it's a fact," he replied.

Commonplaces of conversation became epigrams in the light of the smile in her eyes. They leaned together on the pier railing.

"Jolly place, Seaboro," he remarked.

"Isn't it?" she answered. "I like the crowds on the sands, and the niggers."

"Do you come here every year?" he asked.

"Never miss," she answered pleasantly.

He was absorbed in watching a spot of sunlight that had filtered through the open straw of the brim of her hat, and now played about her cheek. She spoke again.

"How is your wife?" she asked.

He started.

"Good heavens!" he said, "what made you think I was married?"

She opened wide a pair of blue eyes.

"Aren't you?" she asked. "You know you were engaged when we met last."

"Oh, so I was," he murmured. He became silent, and cultivated a studious gloom.

"Then you broke it off?" she inquired sympathetically.

"She broke it off," he corrected. "I suppose I ought to have expected it. Girls are fickle."

The corners of her mouth twitched.

"I was young enough to believe in them," he remarked after a pause.

"You weren't 22, I think?" she said.

"About that," he admitted grudgingly. "I'm older now."

"Two years older," she commented.

"If you count by years," he admitted: "in thought and feeling I'm years and years older."

She said nothing. They fell silent again. Below upon the sands the niggers sang a ribald song with matrimony as its subject.

"A thing like that changes a fellow," he said suddenly.

"For the better or the worse?" she inquired demurely.

"For the better," he said emphatically. "It teaches him the treachery of women. He sees them from a detached point of view. He has learnt wisdom and looks at them from the heights."

She broke into a little laugh.

"How do they look from there?" she asked.

He glanced aside at her. Truth struggled with his gloom.

"Some of them look very pretty," he admitted.

She laughed again.

"But, of course," he continued, "he has learnt his lesson. He recognizes that prettiness is merely another lure."

"It must be nice to feel so—so," she murmured.

"It is," he answered gloomily. "It's a little lonely, though, at times."

"One must pay a price for wisdom," she said.

"And you?" he asked, changing the subject, "is your husband with you?"

She looked at him with swift surprise.

"Whatever made you think I was married?" she asked.

"Well, you know," he said in his turn, "you were engaged when I met you last."

"She drummed with her fingers on the edge of the railing. Her cheek had flushed a delicate pink.

"So I was," she said deliberately.

"It didn't come to anything, then?" he asked; "you broke it off?"

"He broke it off," she answered. "His parents didn't approve of his marrying."

"The fool!" he said.

"It taught me," she said plaintively, "the fickleness of men."

He had a moment's discomfort.

"It taught me to look at them from the heights," she murmured with the ghost of a smile.

"How do they look from there?" he said unwillingly, vexed at the impulse that made him echo her.

She glanced aside, and the smile became more pronounced.

"Some of them look very foolish," she said.

"I have learnt wisdom," he insisted a little hurriedly.

"And I," she replied, with a sigh.

"Man is sufficient to himself," he went on dogmatically. "He has his work in the world. He should be content."

"You are content?" she asked.

"Absolutely."

"I wish I were a man," she said. "A woman's work is so limited."

"You are not content, then?"

"Oh, yes," she answered. "I shall find work. But if I were a man it would be easier."

"We are both content, then?" he said dubiously.

"Quite," she said with another smile. "At least I can answer for myself. I shall never marry."

"Nor I," he replied, lugubriously.

"If I had found a different kind of a man——" she began, in a speculative tone.

"If I had come across another kind of girl," he said thoughtfully.

"It might have been different," she admitted.

"It is best as it is," he said. "I shall grow old alone."

He glanced aside at her. His eye fell on her waist. It was a very slender waist, girdled by a silver chain. He experienced an absurd desire to put his arm around it.

She stood upright.

"What are you doing?"

"How dare you!"

"Why not?" he answered

A Greater Successor of a Great Book—The Author's Third Consecutive "Best Seller"

The Calling of Dan Matthews

By HAROLD BELL WRIGHT, Author of "The Shepherd of the Hills" "That Printer of Udell's"

FORCEFUL—WHOLESOME—THOUGHTFUL

A Realistic Story of Courage and Conviction

¶ The Calling of Dan Matthews while different in treatment and style from the author's earlier works, is a combination of the wonderful "motive power" of That Printer of Udell's and the beautiful "story power" of The Shepherd of the Hills, in one vital thrilling life-giving force of "thought power," out of which "the ministry of daily life" is the all-compelling incentive that grips the life and determination of its readers.

¶ Righteous in its mission, contemporary with present day thought, most beautiful in story, and exceedingly positive in character building. ¶ Big Dan, that manly man of convictions; Hope Farwell, the delightfully refreshing; the Doctor, true philosopher and poet; and poor little crippled Denny, so sympathetic, are wonderful characters, masterful character creations, the best Mr. Wright has yet done.

OUR EACH-AND-ALL GROUP—Sunshine Society—With The Young Folks.

SUNSHINE SOCIETY.

News of Branches—Call for Baby Clothes—Echoes from the September Meeting.

The Venice branch of Sunshine held its August meeting at Sawtelle on Wednesday last, by invitation of those interested in the work.

The branch now numbers sixty members. A week ago this branch gave twenty-five children from the King's Daughters' Day Nursery a glorious afternoon. The happy boys and girls came over to Venice from Manhattan, in charge of the matron, and the president, Mrs. J. M. White, secured "the right of way" for them at the beach resort. The proprietors of the various picture shows gave passes to the little folks, who also took in the wave-motor, the merry-go-round, the band concert, and the miniature railway. One gentle man—a stranger to the Sunshiners—counted the children, told them to wait a moment, and then disappeared. When he returned he was laden with twenty-five boxes of candy, which he at once gave to the eager, outstretched, little hands. Another friend treated them to lemonade, and still another to pop-corn. Then supper—a most substantial one—was given at reduced rates at one of the restaurants, the Sunshiners serving instead of the regular waiters. Altogether, the youngsters had "the time of their lives," their visit to the "bump the bumps" being the most exciting event of the afternoon. One little fellow, Freddie, by name, was especially anxious to "bump," but his trousers were so thin and worn that the matron remarked to one of the Sunshine officers: "I don't know whether Freddie's trousers will stand the bumps or not!" An hour later, the officer discovered Freddie wearing a coat several sizes too large for him; in fact, it reached his knees. But it served its purpose. Freddie's face was wreathed in smiles, for he was all unconscious of the grotesque picture he made. He was happy—for the had "bumped the bumps!"

The president of the Los Angeles branch visited the Venice Sunshine rest-room on Tuesday. While she was there a bright little fellow of 5 appeared at the door with a bottle, and the request: "Please may I have a little of water?" The Sunshiner in charge smilingly filled the bottle, and when the little fellow had run back to the beach, where his family were enjoying a picnic, she said: "This is the twentieth anniversary of the marriage of that child's parents, and they are celebrating the day here. I talked to the mother awhile ago. There are six children, all bright, but the parents are very poor. The mother told me that this is the first outing she has ever had, in all these years, as they were too poor to pay railroad fare for the whole family. But they are happy today." A gentleman who had called to inspect the rest-room remarked: "If the fare were 25 cents, instead of [illegible] more needy poor could have outings."

Mrs. J. M. White, president of the Venice branch, entertained her officers at luncheon last Tuesday, at her apartments at the Westminster. Plans for Sunshine work this fall were discussed.

One hundred and fifty-three postal-card votes as where to hold the Sunshine convention of 1910 have been received by Mrs. McLeod. Of these, all were for Los Angeles except three—one for Chicago and two for Atlantic City. There are still sixty-seven members of the Los Angeles branch to be heard from. Send in your vote at once or you will be too late. The Venice branch is for Los Angeles; also, the Tropico branch of fourteen members, and the Santa Ana branch of twelve members. The voting is going on all over the country—every Sunshine member having a voice.

The Los Angeles branch held its September meeting Thursday. Interesting reports from the committees were given. Mrs. James Fox, the efficient chairman of the Investigating Committee, found it necessary to resign, and her resignation was regretfully accepted. rMs. John Pullar, the recording secretary, was appointed to fill the vacancy.

Mrs. M. E. Flint, chairman of the Sunshine room in the Maternity Home Alliance cottage, reported a need of baby clothes. Any one having baby garments to "pass on" will please communicate with Mrs. Flint, No. 2816 La Salle avenue. All the wheel-chairs were reported in use; the Wheel-chair Committee is planning to purchase another one soon.

Arrangements are being made to send a mother suffering from consumption to a sanatorium for a few weeks, and help was given her little children. Calls have been made on the sick, and flowers taken to "shut-ins." One dear woman who has one of the wheel-chairs is sadly in need of a pair of blankets, some underwear and night gowns. Her wants will be supplied.

Soon the cool weather will be here, and the committees hope to be prepared with the many supplies which will be needed, so that they can "pass on" at once the aid requested. Will you not help? Sunshiners can find a place for everything. What is a small thing to you will mean a good deal to some one else. Send donations to No. 2303 Budlong avenue.

The Los Angeles president had a pleasant surprise through the mail, the other day, in the shape of a check for $10. It was from a lady going away on a vacation, who wanted to "remember Sunshine" before she left. Her thoughtfulness will make some "shut-in" happy.

In the September Sunshine Bulletin, Mrs. Cynthia Western Alden, president-general, has contributed the following verse, which is worth "passing on" in a world that needs kindness

THE FAIRY "FORGET" YOURSELF.

Has your heart grown hard as your hair grew gray?
Has your face been marred, do the wrinkles stay?
Just forget yourself, and of others think.
There's a little elf with a fairy wink,
She will fix the heart and will gild the gray,
And the wrinkley part it will pass away.
For the fairy's glad to perform her task,
And the cure is had by the folks who ask.

To a Typewriter.

O keyboard mine,
'Tis more than I can do
To keep my eyes off you!
On maid divine
Not oftener would I gaze,
With lover's fond amaze,
Than I do now
On you, I trow.

A mischief, you!
If eyes I lift away,
What pranks on me you play!
You straightway do
The letters all bewitch
Until, which one is which,
I must confess
I cannot guess.

You are a snare!
You make a dunce of me!
Your slave I will not be!
Henceforth, I swear,
I will not look at you
But follow copy true,
And make your keys
Do what I please!

EACH AND ALL MOTTO.

Golden thoughts, golden deeds,
Rid life's garden of its weeds.

OUR PLEDGE.

"To make one another happy, to lighten one another's burdens, to share one another's cares, to be lifters, not leaners, to make the world a little sweeter place to live in, to be mutual encouragers, never discouragers of any one, to start songs, not complainings, and to do every day something beautiful, some kindness which will cheer and strengthen another."

NATURE THOUGHTS.

We are back again from summer vacations spent in the mountains among the pine trees, or on the beach sands with the breakers rolling in almost to our feet, or just in some quiet little nook, where we have been drawn close to nature at her simplest. As we once more take up our daily routine of common tasks, there linger with us sweet remembrances of the beautiful outdoor world, and couplets and sentences from the poems and essays of nature writers keep running through our minds like the low, half-perceived undertone of melody in a symphony. These nature thoughts seem to come to us of themselves, for we do not look for them; they glance up at us from every book and magazine as we turn the leaves; they burst with sudden vividness upon our memories as we glance at thumbworn old favorite authors.

Some of these thoughts that have been "finding me," as the summer has waned seem to beautiful that I feel that I should like to pass them on to others. Old and familiar many of them may be, but their sweetness only increases with passing years.

As whole acres of Persian roses are required to make a single ounce of pure attar, so the soul's balm is the slow product of a long course of right living and thinking, every separate thought and act of which contributes its own minute but precious particle of sweetness to the rich result.—[Anonymous.

To the thoughtful mind the lily blossom is a wicket in the great unseen portal of death, through which we may obtain bright glimpses of what is beyond. It opens in all its snowy purity and exquisite grace from the dry, weathered sheaf, as the transfigured immortal life bursts from the temporary imprisonment of death. And if the death of the plant should thus blossom into undreamt-of beauty, what infinite possibilities better than our brightest hopes are held by that darkness which bounds our vision here. He who raises up the lilies every summer, each from its own root in the mold, will not leave our life in the dust.—[Hugh Macmillan.

Faith is the star that gleams above,
Hope is the flower that buds below,
Twin tokens of celestial love
That out from Nature's bosom grow,
And still alike in sky, on sod,
That star and blossom ever point to God.
—[James Kent.

The Elixir of Life.

Laughter is the elixir of life, which sends good, red blood coursing down through the veins, calls the bloom of health to the cheek, the twinkle of joy to the eye, the elasticity of vigor to the step and soothes the soul with the balm of a good conscience.

It braces, invigorates, renews, brings back the sunshine and happiness of life, dispels the darkness and misery which have gathered by the wayside, lifts the funeral pall of gloom from the fair face of nature, revealing it in its true beauty and brightens and warms the heart of the world with the genial glow of its human influence.

Man was made to laugh, for he was created to be happy. And not alone does the cheerful individual create happiness for himself, but he instills it, exudes it around him as a fragrant perfume from some rare exotic, so that others partake of it, too.

If you look on the bright side of things it takes the drudgery and worry and pain out of life, snatches the sting from poverty, robs defeat of its conquest and disease of its worries.

Let no difficulties daunt us, but with courage let us face them and overcome them.

Trials only bring out the good in human nature, strengthen and refine it, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. Don't worry when you meet them. Face them boldly. Meet them with a cheerful countenance and a merry laugh, and these will chase away the cohorts of gloom by which they are surrounded and call happiness to your aid.—[Unidentified.

ANOTHER WOMAN'S VIEW.

Vexed With "Nellie" Because Her Views Are Selfish and Unfeeling, Says One.

One woman's views, signed "Nellie," seem to me so selfish and I might add unfeeling, I would like to give another woman's view of the situation. Perhaps "Nellie" has not read the report of statistics of the number of women in this country that have no safe refuge in the home of some good man, where they can train their sons in the way they should go; and then see them do it. I do not remember the number, but it is high up in the thousands. Many of these women pay taxes and depend upon their own efforts for support, and perhaps the support of several other people besides. They may desire a good home as much as Nellie does, and sons to train, but the good man has never materialized for them so she has to fill the position of man and woman too. Why should she then not vote? There are very few wives and mothers that influence the votes of their husbands and sons. When a woman tried to influence her neighbor's sons in their political views she is usurping the rights of another woman. I would feel very indignant toward a woman that tried to influence one of my sons in that way against my views. Home women as a rule have more time to read and keep posted on the conditions of the country and their own civic affairs than men. They say women's clubs make our laws now; but women cannot force the observance of those laws. If they could vote they would see that the officers of the law were persons of honor and integrity, not men that had a political debt to be paid, and who must have an office whether qualified to fill it or not. If we had a law permitting women to vote, no woman would be obliged to take advantage of it. Medicine, law and the pulpit have been elevated by the advent of women into these fields. Why not politics? Beaver feels terribly because if women were allowed to vote, every mother would have to hold office and turn her children out to pasture. There are so many men wanting office the women would not have to fill them all. Those that are fortunate enough to have a home with a good man, and children, might be allowed to care for them if they wanted to.

VOTES FOR WOMEN.

They Will Get the Ballot When They Really Want It, Is This Woman's Prophecy.

It is an awfully good thing that the members of this society have taken up the question of woman suffrage. I hope they will keep on discussing it until every woman who reads this paper is obliged to put on her thinking cap and give herself a reason for her opinion, one way or the other.

For my part, ever since it dawned on me that this was a live issue in every part of the world, I have been coming to the conclusion of Mr. Dooley—that there's no argumint agin' a woman's votin' that wouldn't make a man liable to arrest every time he tried to drop a ballot in the box.

Prof. Thomas, whose articles on various phases of the great question, "Woman," have excited so much comment during the past year, said in a recent number of the Saturday Evening Post that it would be easier to get up a respectable argument in favor of returning to negro slavery, than against keeping women in their present political subjection. The only argument that has weight with me, is that some of the women do not want to vote. Well, they need to take a broader view of things. They ought to want to. They ought to resent taxation without representation, classification with idiots, and criminals, government by laws which they have no share in making. They ought to crave the opportunity for wider usefulness.

These women claim that they have "influence." Is "influence" enough for the railroads, and the trusts, and the factory owners? Is women's influence apparent in the recent tariff revision? Have their children "influence?" Have the lonely, the poor, the plain, women influence? And is it fair to make getting your rights depend on your wheedling ability? You know it is not.

Until the great mass of women realize what the ballot means I do not want to see them get it. It would lead to the same evils that followed the sudden emancipation of the negro—they would be made tools of, and fools of. When they understand it, they will want it, and when they want it, they will get it.

"KENTUCKY BELLE."

Words of Appreciation.

It is wonderful how much the genuine manifestations of our appreciation of others do to brighten and sweeten our relations with them. In the home especially we are wont to take too much for granted. We reason that the members of our families know how much we think of them, and there is no need of telling them about it.

That is true, but there are other ways of showing our kindness than that of talking about it.

Tones may be quite significant as words, and manner always carries with it a multiplicity of shadings. But then there are times when words are not out of place, and they carry with them a blessing that is not forgotten.

Sometimes the most precious and gratifying thing in the world, to a loving heart, is just a few words of appreciation.

Where Women Fail as Citizens.

The women of Colorado now realize that their great mistake has been in merely voting, instead of living up to all their civic responsibilities, says Mrs. Alma V. Lafferty, the only woman member of the Colorado Legislature, in The Delineator for September. The indifference of the women themselves is at the bottom of their difficulty in gaining recognition. I have no sympathy with the woman movement unless women are ready to assume the full responsibility of citizenship.

I consider it a most natural thing for me to be in the Legislature. My position as an office-holder has never embarrassed me at any time. I have felt always that the loyal women of the State were supporting my efforts. It seems strange to me that I am an object of curiosity to some people; I certainly do not feel any less womanly on account of my experience in public life, and I shall always have pleasant recollections of my strenuous three months in the Legislature, and of the new friendships formed there.

While my associates and I differed on many issues and sometimes debates became rather warm, yet, after it was all over, the feeling of good-fellowship remained. I believe that I have gained a larger and broader view of life, and although I did not accomplish everything expected of me, I am not discouraged. What has been accomplished will set people to thinking and the conditions for working women in Colorado will steadily improve. Our failures will spur us on to greater activity in the coming two years.

A New Little Girl in Heaven.

"Oh, what do you think the angels say?"
Said the children up in heaven;
"There's a dear little girl coming home today.
She's almost ready to fly away
From the earth, we used to live in.
"Let's go and open the gates of pearl,
Open them wide for the new little girl,"
Said the children up in heaven.

"God wanted her here, where his little ones meet,"
Said the children up in heaven.
"She will play with us in the golden street,
She has grown too fair; she has grown too sweet,
For the earth we used to live in,
She needs the sunshine, this dear little girl,
That gilds this side of the gates of pearl,"
Said the children up in heaven.

"My little darling, arise and come
To the place prepared in thy Father's home,
To the home my children live in.
Let's go and watch at the gates of pearl,
Ready to welcome the new little girl,"
Said the children up in heaven.

"Far down on the earth do you hear them weep?"
Said the children up in heaven.
"For the dear little girl has gone to sleep,
The shadows fall and the night clouds sweep,
O'er the earth we used to live in.
But we'll go and open the gates of pearl
Oh, why do they weep for their dear little girl?"
Said the children up in heaven.

"Fly with her quick, oh, angels dear,"
Said the children up in heaven.
"See, she is coming! Look there! Look there!
At the jasper light on her sunny hair,
Where the veiling clouds are riven."
Ah, hush, hush, all the swift wings furl
For the King Himself at the gates of pearl,
Is taking her hand, dear, tired little girl,
And leading her into heaven.

The Health Chaper.

Versatile Verona writes as follows: One of the girls who has taken part in the suffrage discussion tosses a piece of silver into the Health Chapter stamp box, with the remark that Irvie must be in the right about the diaphragm as the good health I gathered up so carefully in the desert, basely deserted me at sight of sea fog on shore as soon as I came home. A number of members are reporting progress in generating life electricity and are glad they are learning how to combine foods, and how to conserve the electrical forces of the body.

Babies and School Children—Striking Pictures and Points Here and There.

A NOTABLE DOG.

Lucy, Who Escaped Death and the Pound and Reared Two Little Lions.

Nearly all the children of the city now or have heard about Lucy. She is the little brown dog who has taken care of Mark and Cleo, the two baby lions out at Eastlake Park, from the time they were born. Now these babies are nearly six months old, and although three times the size of their little foster mother, they are still very devoted to her, and play about her in delighted baby-lion fashion when she visits them. But Lucy's task is now over, her charges have been taken from her, and she has trotted back to her own humble little home on Henry street, all unconscious of the very wonderful thing she has done in raising two baby lions.

The little brown dog who has become such an interesting figure about Eastlake Park has been decorated for discharging her duties as foster mother so admirably. She now wears a silver plate, suitably engraved with the names and date of birth of her foster babies. Every day she makes her way to the park, and stands outside the cage in which her treasures are kept. She cannot understand why they should be imprisoned. She keeps her vigil until the little lions are let out at 5 o'clock for a final frolic before they are put away for the night, and there is great fun on the lawn for a half hour or so. Lucy would like to pet and cuddle her babies, but the lions push her over softly with their great paws, and she comes bounding back for another bout.

Lucy's loving mother-heart and affectionate nature is what really saved her life, for she was in the pound a doomed dog, when taken to the park to see if she would adopt the little lions as her own babies. Although she could not understand that her own life hung on this, she most willingly accepted the little charges and has since been as tender and loving to them as if they had been her very own. Cleo and Mark would never have lived without Lucy's watchful care. Their own mother, Kitty, the big lioness, would have killed the little ones if they had been left with her, because the lion mother in trying to hide her little ones from every one would lie on them and thus crush them to death.

Mrs. Brown, who lives in Henry street, is the owner of Lucy. When she came back one day last spring from a visit to the beach, Lucy was missing and although Mrs. Brown made a diligent search for the dog, she could not find her. Imagine her surprise one day several weeks afterward when she visited Eastlake Park to find Lucy contentedly nursing two baby lions. Lucy knew her mistress at once, and there was a great battle between two loves. The poor little dog went from mistress to the babies and then back again, as though she was trying to explain the situation, and that night, when the little [illegible] back to her old home. She stayed away a week from the babies, and they fretted and whined, telling as plainly as they could that they missed and wanted their little foster mother. Poor Lucy had her own little sorrowful problems to solve. It was very hard to leave her mistress. You see Lucy is 9 years old and had lived at her mistress' home all those years. Mrs Brown did not coax or encourage Lucy to stay, but let her solve the problem in her own fashion.

When a week was up Lucy went back to the park and was received with great glee by the little lions. She remained with them then until they were taken away from her. Now Lucy lives at home, on Henry street again, but goes to the park every day for a visit to her pets.

E. B. Rice, the keeper at the Eastlake Park zoo, and his wife are very fond of the little lions; they always call them "the babies." Mrs. Rice lets them in the lodge with her and pets them just as if they were the most harmless little creatures in the world. Lucy is a privileged character, [illegible] the little lions are playing both Mr. and Mrs. Rice keep a watchful eye on her, for fear the little dog may get hurt during the rough play, but Lucy seems to be able to take care of herself, and never even the tiniest bit of a snarl escapes the little lions while playing with their foster mother. Mrs. Mary Mitchell is the donor of the pretty silver plate which has been presented to the little dog.

Hope.

When brunette night doth gently fold
Her generous cloak o'er land and sea,
Sweet sleep brings fairy tales untold
And hope of joy that yet may be.

Then, sunny blonde, the morning light,
Comes, smiling brightly all the way;
Sad memories seem to lose their blight,
And hope again shines as the day.

Ah, hope, sweet hope, of words most blest,
How could the world without thee [illegible]
We pray take root within each breast,
And scatter peace throughout our land.

A Jolly Picnic.

One of the very jolly affairs of the week was the Central Presbyterian Sunday-school picnic, which took place at Eastlake Park on Friday.

Superintendent O. C. Holden led the festivities, and saw to it that the 150 boys and girls of the school had a merry time. There were races and songs and games, and a delicious spread of all sorts of picnic dainties was served under the trees. Mmes. Matthews, Monlux and Coryell attended to the refreshment supplies, and girls and boys of the Philathea and Baraca classes graciously served the little people.

Delegations from the Busy Bees, the Gleaners, Volunteers and the America Boys' classes made up the picnic.

Children's Musicale.

A delightful musicale was given by a number of little people at the home of Mrs. J. A. Zimmerman, No. 1204 West Thirty-fifth street, last Friday evening. The programme consisted of a piano duet, entitled "A Basket of Roses," played by Hilda Butler and Helen Zimmerman. Little Paul Zimmerman, who is the possessor of a splendid voice, charmed every one with several vocal selections. "Traumerei," a difficult piece for a mite of a girl, was faultlessly played by little Grace Butler, who responded to an encore with "Stephanie," gavotte. The several piano solos of Helen Zimmerman were especially fine..

Several grown-up musicians who came to hear the children, delighted them with several vocal and instrumental selections, as a compliment in appreciation of the little folks' work.

A Beach Baby.

Little Esther Quine, aged 3 years, a real bronze beach baby, has been one of the pets at Catalina Island this season. Every newcomer to Avalon soon spied Miss Esther, in red bathing suit and big sombrero, and probably a tiny doll under one arm.

"Oh, that cunning mite! She is the cutest thing I ever have seen. Let's take her picture," was the exclamation heard many times a day by Esther's mother, walking to the bathing pool accompanied by this animated doll. At least one hundred different snap shots of Esther have been taken during the season, and by this time are scattered to the four corners of the earth. The Salt Lake picture man took one for his railroad magazine, and by next year posters of this baby will be seen on the folders which tell of the joys of beach life at Catalina Island.

The tiny girl is the child of the bathing instructor at the island this summer. She went down every day to see her father at the swimming pool, and was encouraged to go into the water at her own pleasure. She has never been taken in or urged to go into the water, but has sat down of her own accord in the shallow parts and played with the wavelets. Her parents want her to feel no fear, and to adopt the water as a native element.

The Knowing Girl.

There is no one so trying to live with as the girl who knows it all. She is as persistent as the mosquito and more hopeless to extinguish. The knowing girl can give pointers to an expert. She counts herself compe-as colossal as her obtuseness to snubs.

If she would be content with her force it might not be so unbearable, but the girl who knows it all is never so happy as when thrusting her views on those who do not want them.

The knowing girl is always right, and such is her self-esteem that even those who know her to be wrong cannot muster up courage to convince her.

The knowing girl could stir a Quaker to contumacy, and set a Trappist to arguing. Even when you know her to be right she goads you to taking opposite sides.

Being incurable, the knowing girl must be endured as circumstances control. If she be one of your family, better treat her to silence in the interest of peace. She will have the last word, however stiff a fight you put up. If an outsider, escape her. Life is too short to spend hours in arguing.

In Sunday-school a Pendleton teacher told her pupils the tragic story of Samson and Delilah. Then she turned to a small boy, hopeful that he had extracted some lesson from it. The young son of a Louisville business man was taken on his first trip to the country recently. In town he has been wearing shoes and stockings constantly, but after he got out in the rural district he decided that he wanted to do like all the other boys and go barefooted. He refused to be hindered by warnings as to what would happen to him, and peeled off.

He enjoyed himself immensely for a while after that, but it wasn't long before he ran in crying. When they asked him what had happened he drew his sleeve across his eyes and said: "An old horsefly stuck a splinter into me."

WHAT'S DOING IN SAN FRANCISCO.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 3.—The news of the discovery of the North Pole by Cook interested the Portola Committee of Arrangements. He would be asked to come to the festival next month and bring the pole with him, but the committee is in doubt as to his present address. As a substitute, however, a Chinese prince will be here, and he may make things warmer than Cook.

Among the enterprising theatrical managers there was keen rivalry when it was announced that Evelyn Nesbit Thaw was going to take her residence in the divorce colony at Reno. It was thought that she might consent to come here for a brief engagement. The lady herself has settled the matter by saying that she intends to stay in New York until she makes a settlement with the Thaw family.

The ever-grinding divorce mill temporarily stopped when Inez Hayward wished freedom from her husband because he drank and once fired a bullet through the door. In denying her request, the judge said: "The idea is too prevalent that a divorce may be had for the asking. For my part, I intend henceforth to insist upon the strictest proof in all cases. I will refuse decree unless it is established beyond the shadow of a doubt that the complaining party is entitled to the relief asked."

Last year the police captains saw the people vote an increase of pay to the patrolmen from $102 to $120 a month, and they never said boo. Now they want an increase of pay themselves. They have asked the Police Commissioners to ask the Supervisors to put a charter amendment before the people increasing their pay from $2400 to $3000 a year.

These be troublous times for the United Railways. The authorities are going to force fenders on the cars and a speed limit of fifteen miles in Richmond. The Police Judges will not convict citizens for giving away transfers, and a law is to be made compelling a conductor to issue a five-day check in case of accident or lack of power.

Every time Hugo H. Lilienthal, organizer of the Juvenile Horticultural Society, walks in the State University grounds he shudders at the names given the plants. He has given President Wheeler six weeks to change them. If this is done, he will take his society through the grounds, but if it is not, he will visit other resorts where his botanical ideas will not be shocked.

It is a mere matter of $5,000,000 difference in the estimate of the assets of the California Safe Deposit and Trust Company, as computed by the receiver and the Reorganization Committee. The former believes that there are $4,000,000 in assets, and the reorganizers insist that there are $9,000,000. It is only a case of figures with the differing agencies, but it is a matter of bread and butter with some 10,000 depositors.

Henry Gilbert, a 12-year-old blind boy of Paschi, Pa., and an expert swimmer, saved from drowning his younger brother, John. With several companions the boys had been in swimming and were starting to dress when John took a last plunge. After a lapse of several seconds his head appeared forty feet out in the pond. The silence of the lad's companions indicated to the blind boy that something was wrong.

"What's the matter?" he exclaimed. "Where's John?" In that instant he became alert and started toward the bank.

After John came to the surface of the water, he started to swim to shore as if in pain, but after making a few feet he called for help and sank. At the first sound of his brother's voice Henry called out that he was coming and leaped overboard, clothing and all. With strong overhand strokes he fairly raced through the water to the place where he had heard his brother call, but he could not find him.

"He went down just where you are," cried the boys on the shore. Treading water, Henry waited there for fifteen seconds, when his brother appeared ten feet away, and called feebly once more. Turning quickly, the blind boy swam in that direction, but again his brother sank before he could be reached. When the boy again came up Henry caught him by the head, supported him and slowly swam toward shore, directed by the sound of the boys voices on the bank.

A CONVERSATION.

BY SIDNEY LOW.

"I hope you read the poets still," said my Uncle Benjamin.

"The poets!" answered the New Young Man. "Oh, one reads some poetry, of course. There is Yeats, you know—"

"I don't know," said my Uncle Benjamin.

"Ah, you should sir," said the College Tutor. "The Celtic Revival is one of the formative factors of the age."

"And there is Thomson," added the Young Man.

"What, the fellow who wrote the 'Seasons'? Quite right, quite right, though I always found him a little dull myself."

The Young Man tittered. "I suppose he never heard of 'B. V.'" he remarked to the College Tutor, under his breath.

"The eighteenth century," continued my Uncle, "is all very well; but I liked something more modern. Before I went to the East I knew half Tennyson's early poems by heart, and I read all the later ones out there. Ah, when shall we see another poet like Tennyson?"

"Never, I should hope," murmured the Young Man; and the College Tutor smiled. The old gentleman regarded them with suspicion.

"Don't you care for Tennyson?" he asked.

The College Tutor was discreetly silent; but the New Young Man replied with alacrity. "My dear sir," he said, "you really don't suppose that we are feeding on that Mid-Victorian sweet-stuff now. I do not know that poetry is in any case the vehicle for the expression of the Newer Thought; perhaps the drama is more suitable, or the higher kind of fiction, or the analytical essay, such as—er—some of us are attempting. But if we must have verse at all it should be verse that goes straight down to the actualities, that approaches the deeper aspects of life with sincerity and insight. Tennyson never did that. He lived in that world of dim conventionality, from which we have emerged, and mistook sentiment for reality, like most of the Mid-Victorians."

My Uncle Benjamin snorted like an old warhorse. "Mid-Victorian!" he said, "you think you can dispose of everything with a single silly epithet. What's the matter with the Mid-Victorians? I was born in the year the Queen came to the throne, so I suppose I may call myself one of them; and by Jove, sir, I am not ashamed of the company in which I find myself. I was a young man when Havelock died and Henry Lawrence and John Nicholson; and my best friend was on the parade ground at Mian-Mir that morning in 1857 when they disarmed the Sepoys and saved the British Empire. I wonder if your twentieth century young men would have managed that job any better than our Mid-Victorians."

"Ah, as men of action, no doubt," began the College Tutor, languidly——

"Well, take them as teachers and thinkers. Tennyson, for instance; his was the inspiring voice for two generations of us, the delight and the solace of tens of thousands of Englishmen in the old country and all the world over. If you have lost the power to enjoy his lines, I am sorry for you. I am sorry for any young man who does not share the emotion with which we read 'Mariana' and 'The Dream of Fair Women' and 'The Lotus Eaters.'"

"Pretty enough!" said the Young Man. "But grown men and women"—he was about five and twenty himself—"grown men and women want poetry that makes them think and does not merely appeal to the esthetic sense."

"Tennyson made us think; he has kept me thinking all my life."

The College Tutor, stared at him in amazement. "Surely, sir," he said, "Tennyson, as a thinker, has been 'found out' by this time."

"Oh, has he?" responded my Uncle Benjamin, wrathfully. "Perhaps your wisdom will tell me how and in what way."

"Well, we admit the beauty of his verse, his exquisite felicity of language, the delicacy and closeness of his observation of nature, and the variety and rhythmical fullness of his meter. He is a great poetical artist." The Young Man coughed, and the Tutor went on, hastily. "Though it is true he has not reached the highest level of symbolism and suggestiveness, the art of producing effects by a single impressionistic touch rather than by detailed brush work, elaborate stippling, labored cross-hatching."

"I don't know what all this means. Do please talk a language I can understand."

The College Tutor pulled himself together. "Then, to put it in another way," he said, "I will ask you to compare Tennyson's workmanship with that of some poets whom even you will respect. I admit that he can describe many things, including some human emotions, very well. But it is all done by a sort of cumulative method, giving you the particulars, item by item, until the thing is complete, and you see it plainly, especially if you read the passage a second time."

"I see what you mean. But it is not a bad method when it can lead to results like this:

'There lies a vale in Ida, lovelier
Than all the valleys of Ionian hills.
The swimming vapor slopes athwart
the glen,
Puts forth an arm, and creeps from pine to pine,
And loiters, slowly drawn. On either hand
The lawns and meadow-ledges midway down
Hang rich in flowers, and far below them roars
The long brook falling through the cloven ravine
In cataract after cataract to the sea.'

That's good enough for me, as this whipper-snapper here would say."

"It's good enough for anybody," said the College Tutor. "But, after all, there is something better. A greater man than Tennyson will sometimes give you the whole thing with a stroke, not so much by description as by a few words, an epithet, a sudden inevitable rhythm, that sets your imagination at work and suggests the reality that no words can convey. All Tennyson's Guineveres and Lynettes and Lily Maids of Astolat, with all their pages of sentimental remorse and regret, cannot get to the heart as Shakespeare does with a single line: 'Farewell, thou are too dear for my possessing.' All his auctioneer's catalogues of feminine charms, 'argent-lidded eyes' and the rest, no not reach the imagination like the apparent simplicity and spontaneity of Byron's:

'She walks in beauty like the night
Of cloudless climes and starry skies.'"

"I didn't claim," returned my uncle, "that Tennyson was a Shakespeare, or that he had Byron's tense energy, though I think he was, in many ways, far finer and more subtle in his workmanship and style. But there is more than one legitimate mode in every art, and the descriptive manner has its merits as well as the spontaneous and suggestive. You must recognize, I think, that the exquisite finish and delicacy of Tennyson's style could not have been displayed without this sort of elaboration, with which, no doubt, your Shakespeares and your Homers could dispense. That I grant you willingly. Perhaps Tennyson never touched quite the highest note——"

"As Wordsworth and Shelley do."

"Yes; as Wordsworth and Shelley do—sometimes. But at others they were intolerably diffuse and heavy, Wordsworth especially. There are whole blocks of the 'excursion' which are hardly readable. Now Tennyson may not be among the greatest of our poets, but scarcely any of them has written more verse which is so delightful to the ear, and to the imaginative eye. Look at his lyrics and elegies:

'O sad and strange as in dark summer dawns
The earliest pipe of half-awakened birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering square;
So sad, so strange, and days that are no more.'

"Then his blank verse. Why, the 'Idylls' of the King——"

But the New Young Man could contain himself no longer, and he dropped his cigarette as he ejaculated: "My dear sir! 'The Idylls of the King?' Surely you cannot admire that feeble travesty."

My Uncle Benjamin turned on him rather angrily. "I was speaking of the style, young man, not the subject. But I know well enough all you can say against the 'Idylls.' We didn't have to wait for the twentieth century to furnish us with the perfectly obvious criticism of them. You want to tell me, I suppose, that Tennyson turned the grim old legends into sentimental modern fiction, made the blameless Arthur a sanctimonious prig, Guinevere merely an erring wife, and Lancelot a co-respondent; that the whole thing is brought down to the level of contemporary conventionality. It is true, and I wish it were not so; I regard the 'Idylls' as among Tennyson's less successful works; though as to the reproach of investing historic and imaginary personages with the manners and morals of his own age, that is one to which many other great authors are open. Mallory himself had tarnished the figures of the Celtic stories with the licentiousness and cynical cruelty of the Renaissance. If there was ever such a person as Eve——"

"There wasn't," said the Young Man.

"No? Well, no doubt you know. But, at any rate, the Eve of the Book of Genesis could not have been in the least like the well-behaved seventeenth century housewife, with mild theological tastes, who is the heroine of 'Paradise Lost.' If Shakespeare was entitled to turn Greeks and Trojans and ancient Romans into gallants of Queen Elizabeth's court, I do not know that Tennyson was doing any worse when se gave up his ideal of nineteenth century gentility and sentiment in the garb of Camelot."

"But it was such a poor ideal," said the Young Man.

"Was it? I don't know. It was limited, I grant you; limited to Tennyson's environment and social outlook, which were somewhat circumscribed. But it seems to me—I suppose that is where my Mid-Victorianism comes in again—that there was something to be said also for this ideal of courtesy, decorum, gentle living, obedience to duty, temperance, respectability, if you like, which Tennyson had found in the class of leisured, cultivated, Englishmen and English women with whom he habitually associated. After all, it was by that code that the Britons were ruled who made Britain great and splendid in the time that has passed away. You say it was wanting in generosity and breadth. Perhaps. But your present queer chaos, in which nobody seems to have any standard of living at all, is not an entirely effective substitute."

"Still, sir," said the College Tutor, "you place the 'Idylls' among son's failures."

"Among his less successful yes; but if you do not troub self overmuch with the cha tion and the ethics, they are ful, full of noble music and pictorial presentment. But they show Tennyson at his best, as 'In Memoriam,' and in the idylls, and in those pieces like where he deals with a single plicated phase of emotion or enough to say so, but the proof? How will the following do?

Mr. George Giles and Mr. H. R. Kells, managers of the and lot department, Wright & Callender Co., have used 1907 Elmore cars 28 months each, with a total mileage miles, and a total cost for repairs of only $100, less per month per car! These cars, now in their third of steady use, are in first-class condition still. It is not year that counts, it's the years that come after that the real test.

Doesn't this convince you that you should have a 1910 Elmore? The Wright & Callender Co. has two of them.

CHOPS CHUNK FROM RECORD.

Columbia Roadster Breaks San Diego Mark.

Police Cheer Car and Crew in Southern City.

Nine Minutes Clipped from Harvey's Rambler Run.

Harold Stone, in a Columbia roadster, smashed the San Diego round trip automobile road record yesterday. The new mark is 10h. 23m. Stone made only two stops in the entire 320-mile run. He cut off nine minutes from Harvey's mark.

At a time of the year when the roads are roughest, and when record-breaking conditions are anything but ideal, Stone and the Columbia went after the coveted mark and earned the Chanslor & Lyon silver trophy.

In the face of severe difficulties which would have forced most drivers to give up, Stone sent his trim little car at a speed which averaged thirty miles an hour for the run.

A puff of dust flung from the road this side of the Broadway tunnel at 3:53 o'clock yesterday afternoon announced the travelers to the group of watchers in front of The Times office. While the minutes were slipping away and the chance of winning looked smaller than ever, A. M. Young of Bireley & Young shouted, "Here they come."

At sixty miles an hour Stone and Observer C. P. Illingworth shot through the tunnel and down North Broadway to First street. The men in the car were nervous. It was a close shave and fast driving was necessary. There was not a "cop" in sight and Stone broke all speed records.

ALMOST LOST.

At terrific speed Stone swung into the Alhambra road yesterday afternoon with less than fifteen minutes to spare. The record mark was so near that a puncture would lose the trophy. Stone's car is good for better than a mile a minute. He had watched the Columbia carefully for 9h. 30m. He wanted the record and therefore had not taken a desperate chance. Now was the time to risk his neck and he took the hazard.

Right into the heart of Alhambra Stone flew with his motor roaring and the throttle wide open. The town marshal heard the noise, saw the crowd gathering, and tried to stop the car. What chance had a man on foot to halt a hurling ton of iron and steel moving at such terrific velocity? He was lost in a maelstrom of dust and sand as the Columbia flew on with fourteen minutes to reach the goal.

Out over the turnpike Stone drove at breakneck speed. He was taking a desperate chance to win. He swung into Huntington boulevard with the time allowance almost gone.

NEW BASEBALL RULE ADOPTED.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—President Heydler, of the National League, received today information of a new rule adopted by the National Commission, relating to players purchased by major league clubs from the minor league teams.

The rule provides that when players are purchased for future delivery and afterward become incapacitated for service while playing with the club which sold them, the purchaser has a right to call off the deal.

ADMISSION DAY.

MOTORCYCLES READY TO RACE.

ASCOT PARK TO BE SCENE OF FAST SPEED TRIALS.

Los Angeles Motorcycle Club Arrange for Match Professional and Amateur Races Thursday—Derkum and Breses to Be Main Features. Thirty-Minute Race.

Motorcyclists will hold what promises to be a big race meet at Ascot Park Thursday. The entries for the races will close tonight, and by that time it is expected that a large number of well-known riders will have placed their names on the lists.

Fifteen races have been scheduled. The meet will be started at 1 o'clock promptly, and the races will be run off as speedily as possible so as to avoid all unnecessary delays. Special pains have been taken to accommodate the crowd.

Whenever a motorcycle race has been scheduled at Ascot, crowds of persons have evinced a desire to watch the machines spin over the dirt course. The track is rough, and the element of danger is such that those who delight to be thrilled always find time to visit Ascot when the motorcyclists are out for speed stunts.

There will be single and double-cylinder races, several fast professional matches, amateur races and races for owners.

One of the features of the day will be a thirty-minute race, which will be open. There is a ten mile special and a ten-mile free-for-all. The meet will be sanctioned by the Federation of American Motorcyclists.

The Los Angeles Motorcycle Club has arranged an interesting programme. Some of the fastest riders in the world, on the best of machines, will go after dirt-track records. Derkum, who was beaten at the Prince Coliseum, will have a chance to show how he can ride at Ascot Park.

On a dirt track Derkum seems to have no equal. He was repeatedly defeated by De Rosier on the boards at the Prince Coliseum, but at Ascot Park there is perhaps no motorcycle rider who could shake the Los Angeles boy.

HITT BATS IN HIS VICTORY.

Drives in Winning Run With Swat in Ninth.

Harkness Sent to Bench After Unlucky Seventh.

Long, Hard Drives to Fence Feature of the Day.

Vernon, 6; Portland, 5.

Desperate and disgusted at the manner in which the Beavers had been hammering him around the lot for nine innings, Roy Hitt grabbed his favorite club in the last of the ninth yesterday at Chutes Park, and, seeing Brown on first base, slammed a high fly far out to the center fence, and thereby won his own game, for he scored Brown from first base with the winning run.

It was about the most exciting game of the series, for they teetered back and forth with the lead, battering the ball for twenty-three hits, wrangling among themselves, ragging the umpires, and talking back to the fans in a way that kept things boiling from the first inning to the last. Such business dragged the game out far over two hours, and its length was all due to the many swats and the wrangling, for there were but two errors made.

Apparently hopelessly beaten in the first of the seventh inning, with a score of 3 to 1 against them, the Vernons came back with a rush in their half of that round, and grabbed off four runs from lucky hits and the explosion of Harkness, supposed to be the best heaver the Beavers have. Then the score was tied up by the enemy in the eighth, and it remained that way until the last of the ninth, when, with Brown on first base, Hitt leaned against the ball that big leaguer Carson handed up to him and tried to knock the center fence down with it.

It was a wonderful game for crabbing at the umpires, and there were a number of close plays that made their work more difficult, but they got through without being forced to throw any one off the field. The fans forgot the umps, however, in the general excitement, for the hitting was fierce at times, and the fielders were on the jump from the start. There were no less than eight doubles, of which Portland made six, and yet could not win. The Beavers should have grabbed the game on account of their swats, but apparently the signs were not right.

Vernon started off with a run in the second on Brashear's pass, Eagan's single, Devereaux's out and a long fly, but nothing more happened until the fifth when the Beavers jumped into the lead with two runs from Harkness's pass, a single by Cooney and a double by Olson. In the seventh they got another on a fielder's choice and Graney's second double. Such good luck was probably too much for them for in the last of the seventh Harkness blew up.

Brashear singled to center and had

"VIVA EL TORO!"

BULL'S CHANCE TO EVEN SCORE.

May Kill Tormentors, But Is to Escape Injury.

French Matador Planning to Educate Americans.

Local Official Says Laws Must Be Enforced.

Bull teasing, a new sport developed from the ancient Spanish bull fight, is to be introduced in Los Angeles this fall, and if successful will be taken all over the United States.

The sport involves all the essentials of a bull fight except injury to the animals, and it is not robbed of its danger to the matadors and toreadors which the enraged bull charges.

Laws applicable to the case are being looked into by Felix Robert, a famous French matador, who is in the city planning to promote the exhibitions if he can convince the authorities that it is a clean sport.

Robert anticipates a bitter fight from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals at first, but he believes that he will be able to convince them that cruelty to animals does not apply to his case, and that he can show that neither will the laws be broken nor will the animals suffer.

Officer N. W. Zimmer of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals said yesterday he would not take the initiative, but if Robert broke the law he would certainly not be allowed to continue.

Precedent cases covering attempted exhibitions at Santa Monica in recent years have given Zimmer ample authority to stop the proposed show, and the local officer will be on his guard to stand by the letter of the law.

Zimmer says the laws are not violated during the exhibitions, but in the preparation that leads up to them when the animals are maddened to frenzy by constant prodding and pricking by the attendants. He says that by that means the bulls are irritated into such a rage that they will fight at the slightest provocation in the ring exhibitions, and though the matador uses but a tinseled glue wand on the charging bull, the harm has already been done by the enraging process.

Robert claims the wild bull is by nature always ready for a fight, and that no warming-up "teasings" aree necessary to cause the animal to answer the call of the toreador. Robert says he is fully aware of the local prohibitions regarding bullfights, and that he has no intention of breaking the laws. The purpose of the French matador is to educate the Americans to the interesting science of "bull teasing" as exhibited in France.

ALL ONE-SIDED.

ACHIEVEMENT.

AUTO CLIMBS BEAR HEIGHTS.

Enters Forbidding Country for the First Time.

Ford Makes Remarkable Run in Face of Obstacles.

Rugged Hills Are Conquered by Little Automobile.

Bear Valley, the scenic mountain country a mile and a half high in the upper range of the San Bernardino Mountains, has been conquered by the automobile. J. H. Fisher and W. E. Rabbeth of Redlands succeeded in safely negotiating the severe grade from Victorville to Dobles, with two twin-cylinder Fords.

The in-trip was made by way of Victorville, the machines being driven 105 miles in a circuitous route over stretches of the most rugged mountain trails, and through sand dunes which, with one exception, have baffled the efforts of motorists on every attempt. Last summer Fisher and Rabbeth drove a Packard and a Thomas touring car into certain portions of Bear Valley.

Since entering Bear Valley the last week in June the Ford car, owned and driven by Fisher, has been run over 900 miles. The machine has been the first to run through Holcomb Valley, and has also made the steep ascent of Gold Mountain. Pine Lake, Baldwin Lake and the adjacent country have been circled many times by the Ford. From the Fisher Mountain bungalow, on the south shore of Pine Lake, the car has chugged uncomplainingly through long stretches of tortuous rocky country.

STEEP HILLS.

The severe grade from Cushenbury to Dobles, the last leg of the rough road entering the valley, proved an exceedingly hard trip for both machine and driver. Four hours were used in driving the runabouts four miles up the sandy slope. Fisher was supplied with seventy-five feet of canvas, block and tackle, shovels and sand-conquering paraphernalia. He was obliged to use the whole outfit constantly during the four miles.

On the steepest portion of the grade the power of one car was utilized to drag the second machine up the inclines. The block and tackle was secured to a tree. With the clutches of both cars slipped to the high, one car started down the grade, chugging spitefully in a crucial test to bring its mate higher up the hill. A bend in the grade broke the view of the separate drivers. The upper machine was almost wrecked against the tree before the lower car was stopped.

Added to the discomfiture of the drivers, the supply of gasoline was so limited that the tank of the lower car had to be replenished each time from the tank of the ascending car. Boulders had to be blasted, fallen tree trunks were removed in like manner, and obstacles of discouraging nature were encountered frequently.

MANY OBSTACLES.

Many motorists have attempted to reach the valley by the stage road from Bear Creek, but each time the pathfinders have been obliged to abandon the trip owing to the steep, sandy stretches. In places the grade exceeds 30 per cent., and this incline on a sandy curve has been found an impassible barrier to the most ambitious motorist in any make of car.

Although the nature of the Bear Valley country is rugged, on the whole there are many hard stretches of mountain road which are attractive to the motorist. In Holcomb Valley a hard, smooth road lies through avenue of tamarack and pine trees, through cienegas of soft green meadow, and through cañons of huge boulders. Numerous mining claims, worked intermittently by gold-seeking prospectors, are to be seen in the hills adjacent to the road, and picturesque scenery meets the eye at every bend.

Delay from necessary repairs is not a bugbear to Fisher, and the Ford car has been run almost constantly for over two months. A broken crank shaft was the biggest trouble encountered. In two days' time the new shaft had been sent for, received from Los Angeles, and had been fitted in place. The Ford will be kept busy in the valley till October, when the first snow is due to fall, and the car must be hurried back to Redlands.

STODDARD-DAYTON ACTIVITIES.

Manager Flint Keeps Things Humming at Olive Street Headquarters. Bakers on the Move.

Manager Frank Flint of the Stoddard-Dayton Motor Company, has launched his 1910 campaign with a number of important sales. Five-passenger, forty-horsepower touring cars were sold to Dr. C. L. Gavin and R. B. Rogers. A. N. Davidson purchased a thirty-horsepower touring car, Holmes & Pettibone, Miss M. Freeman and H. E. Gillis and the Electric Vehicle Company of Redlands purchased Baker electrics.

A carload of Bakers will arrive this week, and the new fifty-horsepower Stoddard-Dayton is expected the latter part of this month. The new car is reported to be a beauty. It is larger and even more stylishly finished than the Stoddard of former years. It has a large, roomy tonneau, and seats seven persons. The new models will have the three-quarter elliptic spring construction in the rear, which makes them very easy riding.

GOSSIP ALONG GASOLINE ROW.

W. H. Halliwell, Jr., agent for the Warner autometer, left yesterday for the East. He will visit the Warner factory at Beloit, Wis., and will be absent several weeks. On his return journey he will visit Seattle and the fair, and all the branch houses in Portland, Seattle and San Francisco.

The Thomas nineteen-ten demonstrator will leave the factory for Los Angeles next week.

Two carloads of nineteen-ten Peerless cars are expected this week by the H. O. Harrison Company.

Franklin cars were delivered last week to Henry G. Weyse of Santa Monica—a six-cylinder touring car; Dr. D. K. Dickenson, model G runabout, and Dr. O. O. Whitherbee, model G touring car. Two carloads of Franklins are en route to Los Angeles.

Percy Clark returned Friday from Lake Tahoe in his twenty-eight-horsepower Franklin. He reports the roads rough, but he had no trouble.

The electrical department of the Stoddard-Dayton Motor Company is running night and day. It has been equipped with a complete electrical outfit and is in charge of experts.

The American Automobile agency has sold the following cars: C. W. Pendleton, seven-passenger touring car; E. J. Stanton, five-passenger touring car; C. F. De Witt, American Traveler; R. S. Rohster, American Traveler.

The American Automobile Company is occupying its new quarters at Nos. 1210-12 South Olive street. The concern's business, which is rapidly increasing, demanded more sales and garage room.

The following is a list of sales made by Woolwine Motor Car Company: Rapid delivery wagons were sold to Hirsch-Harrison Produce Company, Arrowhead Springs Water Company, Walter E. Smith & Co., Southern California Hardwood Manufacturing Company, Braun Chemical Company, Times-Mirror Publishing Company, Bartlett Music Company.

Cartercars were sold to J. Ratsir, five-passenger; C. Bert Dudley, Arizona, five-passenger; F. R. Frederickson, roadster; F. Braasch, five-passenger.

Oldsmobiles were sold to Preston C. Daly, five-passenger; Citizens' Investment Company and Sterling Booth, close-coupled Oldsmobiles; Arthur M. McKenzie, seven-passenger Oldsmobile.

Marmon cars were sold to H. T. Green and A. B. Fanslow, five-passenger Marmon; E. Y. Booth, four-passenger toy tonneau; W. C. Symondson, five-passenger Marmon.

Charles A. Bradley, pice-president of the Golden State Life Insurance Company, has returned with his family from Wheeler's Springs. The trip with four people and two children, was made in a 1909 Columbia, and no trouble was experienced in getting over the severe grades which exist between Nordhoff and Wheeler's.

Mr. and Mrs. Y. R. Del Valle returned yesterday from a tour through Ventura and Santa Barbara counties. They drove a Brush runabout.

CHOPS RECORD.

ing. The autometer had shown speed as high as sixty-two miles, and the car had received a terrible beating and pounding over the rough roads.

At 3:50 o'clock, with twelve minutes to reach the goal, Stone took the Downey-avenue hill and made the run of his life. Right through the East Side traffic the Columbia tore with the two men rocking in the low seats.

Idlers on the corners at River Station saw a gray streak fly around the corner over the rails. Stone bumped into San Fernando street with less than ten minutes to spare. He tore through the Broadway tunnel with the record in his hands, but kept his car almost wide open until he reached The Times office.

STORY OF THE RUN.

The stock Columbia, stripped of fenders and looking wonderfully fit for a road battle, with Stone at the wheel, shot away from First and Broadway at 5:30 in the morning, on what was to be the most remarkable automobile record run between Los Angeles and San Diego.

The road between Los Angeles and Santa Ana is in wretched shape. Stone took the straight run out First street to Boyle avenue, and left the city on that thoroughfare. The Columbia reached Santa Ana in 1 hour and 10 minutes.

Once out of Santa Ana, Stone drove for the record. He intended to cut it to nine hours. The engine worked like a clock. The smooth run to San Juan Capistrano was made at terrific speed, and the nine-hour schedule seemed possible.

Out of San Juan a thick fog bank cut down the hopes of the two men in the car, and almost spoiled the record run. It was impossible to drive faster than twenty miles an hour. The fog banks hung close to the hills, and the run to Oceanside was slow. The Columbia reached Oceanside in 3 hours 15 minutes. This was not remarkable, but was spectacular, as the ninety-five miles had been covered in the face of mighty obstacles.

Another obstacle was to hinder the Columbia. The La Jolla road, usually a splendid boulevard on which sixty miles an hour could have been made, is soaked with water. This cut down the time of the racer, which was covered with mud as it swung into San Diego at exactly 10:10 o'clock. The run of four hours and forty minutes had not broken the one-way record now held by the Kisselkar.

SAN DIEGO'S WELCOME.

There was a mighty cheer as the little car swung up in front of The Union office. San Diego's welcome was of the right kind, and marks an epoch in the automobile history which the local autoists will not soon forget.

Young had made arrangements with the Chief of Police and other officials of San Diego for the record-breaking run. He had promised to instruct Stone to exercise all care possible, and the San Diego officials offered to aid him.

Without saying a word to his driver, Young prepared a reception providing the Columbia was on time. As the car passed the city limits a bluecoat, with club raised, gave Stone a heart chill. Preparing to halt, the Columbia man reached for the brakes, with his eye on the patrolman. Instead, the man in blue waved a cheery welcome and shouted "Beat it."

POLICE ROOT.

Stone knows how to take a cue and his car leaped into the run straight down the main street where the group of policemen stood keeping a crowd back. Again clubs were waved and Stone let the Columbia out a notch or two. Through a lane of people the car was driven to the stopping point and the police were the most enthusiastic rooters for the record-breaking car and crew.

Less than five minutes were wasted in San Diego for gas and oil and the police again helped Stone leave the city. Out over the pavement the little car tore at top speed and into the inland country.

Elsinore was reached at 1:30 o'clock and the record seemed possible. The drive from Elsinore to Corona was accomplished in forty-five minutes. Watchers at Corona telephoned Young at the local branch and the Columbia agent saw that Stone had a chance.

Nine minutes torn from the record after a drive which Stone says he can better any time is the summary of the mad dash through coast and inland route. The record is now down so low that it takes special preparation to tear a minute from the mark.

L. B. Harvey, in the Rambler roadster, was the former holder of the Los Angeles-San Diego record, which Harvey set at 10h. 32m. Stone drove on a closer schedule than Harvey. He held the wheel the entire distance as did Harvey, and left his seat only twice during the more than ten hours run.

The Columbia wore Hartford tires and made a remarkable tire record in that Stone was not hindered by a puncture or tire trouble of any kind during the trip.

TAXICABS STOP RUNNING.

Western Motor Car Company Sells Chalmers-Detroit Cabs to Bay City Firm.

All Chalmers-Detroit taxicabs belonging to the Western Motor Car Company were taken off the streets last night and will be shipped to San Francisco tomorrow. Every machine has been sold to the Taxicab Company of California doing business in the Bay City. The business does not pay in Los Angeles, according to Earle C. Anthony, manager of the Western Motor Car Company.

When a flat rate of 40 cents a mile one way was charged it was impossible to reap a profit, says Anthony. The public demanded the rate and it was necessary to make the small charge in order to keep the cars moving. In San Francisco the rate is 60 cents a mile with a charge both ways. The same rate is in force in New York, Chicago and other large cities. Los Angeles would not stand for the extra 20 cents.

That the Los Angeles general public would rather use the street car than pay more than 40 cents for a taxicab ride was demonstrated when the cars were first put on the streets. It was absolutely necessary to drop down to 40 cents, with a one way charge only, in order to get people into the little chuggers.

The cars were taken off the streets after an investigation of the methods employed in other cities. Chicago and New York are taxicab towns. The little buzzers are kept constantly on the move and are in great demand for theater parties and for shopping tours. Here the demand is not nearly so great.

Until Los Angeles demands the little cars in a more vigorous manner than she has heretofore manifested Anthony will not bring taxicabs to this city from the Chalmers factory. The Western is now out of the taxicab business.

Robert Sherman and party have returned from an extended trip in Sherman's Stevens-Duryea touring car.

Fenner is out of the White he still has enough interest in the race to wish the fast steamer again to take the honors. He owns the car that he has entered and it looks the part of a fast racer.

The machine was taken out of the shop for the first time yesterday. It looks wonderfully fit. It was driven over the Baldy course slowly in order that Seyfreid, who will drive the car, can get used to the bumps and curves.

WHITE FAST.

If Black Bess was fast, and Mercury was faster, the latest product of the White factory is a whirlwind for speed. This new White creation slides along faster than sixty miles an hour. if Seyfried lets it out.

Fenner expects to set the record below three hours. He says the car that wins must put the mark at two hours and some minutes. Seyfreid says he can drive to the mine any day in three hours.

Nothing has been spared that will make the White the fast machine that it is. To guard against accidents and delays on the road, Fenner has taken every precaution possible.

The betting yesterday favored the White two to one. Several wagers were laid with the White against the field. This may be the result of the three former victories of the White, but those who have been arrayed against the steamer in former contests like the car this year and are placing their money on Fenner's pet.

Two weeks from today the race will be held. The three cars will start from Seventh and Broadway thirty minutes apart. The first car will leave at daybreak.

No car has been barred from the Baldy race. It is open to all makes of machines of any price and any horsepower. There are no restrictions as to stripping, drivers or equipment.

Though Fenner no longer handles White cars, he is as much interested in the outcome of this Baldy race as in any other. He has offered a handsome silver trophy for the winner. He says he is not boosting the White factory and will not throw the race. Fenner himself is wagering large amounts that his car will win.

SLOW RUN TODAY.

The Pope-Hartford has made its last fast trip over the course. Ruess will drive his car today for a slow run over the entire road. He will leave about noon and by maintaining a six-hour schedule will make the 100 miles to the top of the mountain easily by dusk. The record to date is 3h. 38m.

The car which he will use is the former demonstrator, stripped and fitted with racing seats. He claims it is a stock car and not a factory-prepared racer.

Frank Siefert, the former crack Stoddard-Dayton driver, has joined the Ruess forces and will be ready to drive the car should anything prevent Ruess handling the wheel two weeks from today. Siefert has been giving the Pope-Hartford camp the benefit of his valuable experience and will be a good man to have in reserve. He is a daring driver and knows how to handle a fast car.

STILL THEY COME.

SHARP-ARROW MAKES DEBUT.

CAR WHICH HAS MADE GOOD IN EAST HERE TO STAY.

Macris-Messenger Company Opens Headquarters on Main, and Will Handle Stylish Car Which Proves Good Hill Climber With Plenty of Power.

Another visitor, the Sharp-Arrow, has made its début in the local automobile field. Vic Macris and A. C. Messenger have the agency. The young men expect to get twenty-five cars. The new company which will handle the Sharp-Arrow will be known as the Macris-Messenger Motor Car Company. Its headquarters will be on South Main street.

The Sharp-Arrow is well known in the East. Up to the time that Hanshue made his remarkable record in the Apperson Jackrabbitt the Sharp-Arrow held many of the road records for stock cars. The machine has plenty of power and is a good hill climber.

As a demonstration Macris drove the car over the grades in Elysian Park yesterday and then took the machine to Elysian street, a newly-graded thoroughfare which rises abruptly to a 35 per cent. grade. Macris sent the machine at the incline and when almost to the top stopped the car. Starting in the soft earth the motor took hold again and Macris climbed to the summit, turned around, and came back down the hill.

The Sharp-Arrow is manufactured in Trenton, N. J. The four-cylinder motor is cast in pairs. The transmission provides for three forward speeds and a reverse. The change gear control is selective. There are two ignition systems, the battery and Bosch-magneto. The rear axle is of the full floating type.

The car is made in a 116-inch wheel base which makes it easy riding. The tonneau is roomy. It is made in touring car, roadster, toy tonneau and runabout styles. The bodies are stylish and the lines are pleasing.

LARGE AUTO PARTY.

Owners and Guests Pass Pleasant Days at Del Mar by the Sea—Roads Are Fine.

One of the largest week-end parties entertained at Del Mar this season included many well-known autoists. Thirty-six were the guests of the following owners: R. C. Hamlin, Franklin; L. A. Denker, Franklin; Eugene McLaughlin, Peerless; C. J. Kuback, Pope-Hartford; Fred Baker, Packard; Simon Maier, Pierce-Arrow, and A. J. Bayer, Pope-Hartford.

The cars left Los Angeles Friday morning and made the run down the coast to Del Mar, headquarters being established at the Stafford Inn. The roads were found in fair condition. Saturday afternoon the party went to San Diego and visited many of the points of interest near there. It is a run of eighteen miles to the Bay City.

R. C. Hamlin says the boulevards out of San Diego are the finest over which he ever róde. The joy of rolling over these perfect roads is ample payment for taking the long run, says Hamlin.

Sunday was passed at Del Mar and Monday the party returned to the city.

TOURS FROM CANANEA.

Mining Man Makes Cross-Country Trip in Big Six-Cylinder Franklin.

Automobiles have become a big factor in the mining business, according to R. K. Clancy, a mining man from Cananea, Mex., who drove down from San Francisco in a new six-cylinder Franklin last week.

The car will be taken from here to the Mexican mining country, where it will be used in the business connected with the mine. The Cananea Consolidated Copper Company, which adjoins the property controlled by Clancy also uses a six-cylinder Franklin.

"I enjoyed the ride from San Francisco," said Clancy, "but I want to say that some of the highway over which I passed is worse than anything you will find in Mexico. We went over the San Marcos Pass and while the scenic beauty is grand the road is awful."

ROOYEN OFF FOR EUROPE.

S. Van Rooyen, manager of the Auto Supply Company of this city expects to leave this afternoon for New York and Europe on an extensive business trip. Van Rooyen will buy a new line of automobile novelties for display here in Los Angeles. He expects to be absent about six weeks.

"Big Six" Thomas touring cars have been sold by the Thomas Motor Car Company to Mrs. Frederick H. Rindge, Henry Fisher, Dan MacKenzie and Henry Blackman.

INTO THE WILDS BEYOND BORDER.

LOWER CALIFORNIA TOWNS ARE REACHED ON TOUR.

Studebaker E.M.F. With Haskett and Party Reach San Rafael on Trip, Which Takes Little Motor Car Into a Country Never Before Visited by Machines.

Roscoe C. Haskett of the Lord Motor Car Company, and a party which included Miss Nancy Hovey and Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Gustin of Pasadena, have returned from a trip into Mexico. Haskett drove a Studebaker E.M.F. "Thirty" and sent the little car to the outskirts of San Rafael below Ensenada.

Over roads where an automobile has never before been driven, Haskett sent the little E.M.F. It was his intention to reach a point in Lower California never before touched by a motor car driver. He passed Ensenada and then struck out across what appeared to be a barren waste, where only a mere trail exists.

Strange to say, in spite of the uninhabited country through which the E. M. F. passed, the roads were good for almost the entire distance. In Lower California the country lends itself to good road conditions and for miles and miles the autoists passed over a level country where touring was a pleasure.

Into the sage brush and cactus land, where there is little water and scarcely any vegetation other than the sage brush, the little car was driven on its tour of exploration. The few natives took a keen interest in the car and manifested a desire to inspect the mechanism.

Haskett drove leisurely over the long dusty roads and found but few inhabitants. The trip was enjoyable and much game was sighted. A number of deer, many rabbits and flocks of quail were seen during the drive.

After leaving Los Angeles Haskett drove by way of the coast route to San Diego. The party crossed the bay to Coronado, and made the hotel the starting point for the second day's journey. Down the backbone of the peninsula to Tia Juana the little thirty-horsepower car was driven on its long run.

After crossing the border Haskett set the nose of the car toward what was to him an unknown country. He found natives who were familiar with motor cars everywhere this side of Ensenada. After leaving that quaint old town he entered a country where the car was an unfamiliar sight.

For miles and miles the little Studebaker chugged along, giving the autoists no trouble. An extra supply of gasoline was carried but the car made a wonderful gasoline record.

Touring in Lower California is not expensive. There are few stiff grades to climb. The country is interesting and can be viewed from a motor car for several hundreds of miles in a day's run.

The return to Los Angeles was made by way of the inland route through Escondido and Elsinore. Riverside was one of the stopping points. Redlands and the surrounding country was visited before reaching home.

NEW POPE-HARTFORD.

Nineteen-Ten Demonstrator Here and Wheels Are Kept Humming Over Streets and Roads.

About the busiest car in town last week was the new 1910 Pope-Hartford, which arrived Wednesday. The machine was kept busy taking people over Grand avenue on the high and performing many other such stunts which are now demanded of the high-grade cars.

The new arrival is a five-passenger touring car finished in Pope-Hartford blue with cream running gear. It retains the lines of the 1909 model to a large extent, but is trimmer in appearance and will show more power and speed.

The car can be had in a runabout, single rumble roadster, double rumble roadster, or with baby tonneau. A seven-passenger touring car with a larger body, heavier springs, and larger rear tires, is another model. The car is also made in all of the enclosed and semi-enclosed types.

The rear axle is the floating type. It is made of two solid nickel steel shafts, running inside of tubular sleeves. All the weight is carried on the heavy outer tubes, permitting the solid inner axles to drive the wheels perfectly free of weight and strain. The outer ends of the steel shafts are squared and on each there is fitted a square-jawed hardened steel clutch. This clutch engages with corresponding notches in the hubs of the rear wheels, which run on Timken roller bearings of large size on the outside of the rear axle tubes. The clutch and hub are held in engagement by means of the hub cap, which is locked to the axel shaft. By this construction it is possible to remove the axle shafts and the entire differential construction while the car is standing on its wheels.

The clutch is of entirely new design, leather-faced, with cork inserts, positive and smooth in action. It is accessible and easy of adjustment without the use of special tools.

The wheelbase is 118 inches, and the wheels 36 by 4.

A new style torque rod has been adopted, of trussed tubular construction, its rear end pivoted on the rear axle case, the front end being fitted with spring buffers and attached to a special cross member of the frame.

Manager William Ruess announces many advance sales and a limited allotment for 1910. The cars will begin arriving for delivery this month.

FORD MANAGEMENT CHANGE.

Roger Stearns, Live Eastern Man, Takes Charge at Standard Motor Car Company.

Roger Stearns will assume the management of the Standard Motor Car Company this morning. L. L. Brentner and his brother will step aside. Stearns has been associated with the Ford Motor Car Company for nearly thirty years, and knows the sturdy little car like a book.

Before coming to the West, Stearns was assistant manager of the New York branch of the Ford factory, and also represented the Ford people in Buffalo. He later became their general representative, and did an immense amount of business for the manufacturers of the stocky little cars.

The entire policy of the Standard Motor Car Company will be changed by the new man. He expects to handle a large number of cars, as he says the demand for the Ford is stronger than ever. He will make this a distributing point for 500 cars, if possible.

PICATO AND BROCK READY.

Both Boys Are Now Near the Lightweight Limit.

Phil Confident He Can Knock Out Local Pug.

Jim Barry to Begin Tomorrow for Johnson Bout.

Fight fans are warming up to the fact that the Pacific Athletic Club has arranged one of the best general cards for next Tuesday evening that the old Naud pavilion has had in many a day. With five bouts and thirty-six rounds of boxing scheduled and all of the contests of considerable caliber, the fans certainly will see plenty of action during the evening's entertainment.

Phil Brock will make his second "début" before the Los Angeles patrons, and judging from the workouts he has had at the pavilion during the week the spectators of Tuesday's show should see a rejuvenated Brock and one capable of putting up a classy fight for ten rounds or more. He has been boxing with two extremes—Dick Given, the 145-pounder, who is to meet Young Solomon, and Curly O'Connell, the 122-pound lad who is to give Frankie Sullivan an argument the same evening.

Brock has handled each of these fighters with the same ease and gives evidence of more speed than at any time before. He is confident that he will take Picato's measure and has given it out that he will end the contest in the shortest time possible after the initial gong has sounded. Brock is down to weight already and should not budge the beam when he steps on the scale Tuesday afternoon.

Just as confident at Vernon is Frank Picato, who is trudging away under the guidance of Roy Page, and those who have seen Picato work are assured that he will be right there when it comes to fighting. He has been practicing all week to school himself how to keep away from Brock's deadly left and his boxing with Herb White and Kid Snyder has been of great benefit to him.

Picato has been getting lighter daily and now is down to 134 pounds, so that he will have no difficulty in making the 133 mark at the time of weighing in.

The sentiment is divided among the fans as to the outcome of the battle and each boy has many followers. So close have they figured that there is no choice in the wagering and admirers of either one can get plenty of coin from the other side on the outcome.

The measurements of the two are as follows:

	Brock.	Picato.
Height ...	5 ft. 5½ in.	5 ft. 6 in.
Neck ...	15	15
Chest ...	35½	37
Chest expanded ...	36½	38½
Biceps ...	12	13
Biceps contracted ...	14½	15
Waist ...	31	29
Wrist ...	7	7
Thigh ...	21	20
Calf ...	13¾	14
Reach ...	68½	71

ORDER OF BOUTS.

Young Jeffries and Joe Livermore, four rounds.

Herb White and Gene Sullivan, six rounds, 133 at 6.

Young Solomon and Dick Given, six rounds.

Frankie Sullivan and Curly O'Connell, ten rounds.

Phil Brock and Frank Picato, ten rounds 133 at 3.

Frankie Sullivan and Curley O'Connell have been trying to get together for nearly a year, and Manager McCarey finally succeeded in matching them for Tuesday evening. The boys are to meet at catch weights, which will give O'Connell a slight advantage, but will place both boys in a position in which they can do the best work, and the fans are assured of a great fight between the featherweights. The boys are so evenly matched that it is difficult to pick the winner with any degree of certainty, and each will have plenty of admirers when he steps in the ring.

Herb White's bout with Gene Sullivan will excite interest, as White is matched to meet Sam Coulter at Venice Thursday evening over the twenty-round course, his bout with Sullivan being scheduled for only six sessions. If Sullivan should succeed in flooring White for the count it might disarrange the plans of the beach promoters, who have counted on White's ability to stow away the lanky Sullivan. Sullivan has made good both times he fought at the pavilion, and as he has had the aid of his brother, Dan, in his preparation for this contest, he expressed himself yesterday as confident that he will knock out White.

Dan Sullivan has shown such good work in his exercising at the pavilion that Manager McCarey is anxious to give him a trial with some middleweight against whom he can show the fans of Los Angeles just how good he is. Arthur Collins has asked to go on with him, and this match may be consummated for September 20.

Jim Barry will start training tomorrow for his ten-round contest at McCarey's pavilion, September 22. He probably will use Jim Tremble as a sparring partner. Barry hopes to get in the pink of condition in the two weeks that he has to prepare himself at Venice, and declares that he will give the fans a surprise when he hooks up with Jack Johnson.

Joe Willis has asked the Pacific Athletic Club to put him on with Jim Flynn next month if Willis succeeds in beating Young Peter Jackson tomorrow night. Willis is showing great form in his sparring with Al Kaufman at Millett's training quarters at Colma and some critics say that he might stand a good chance with Kaufman in a long contest.

Walter Fisher wants to get back in the game again, and he will be matched with one of the 126-128-pound boys in a few weeks. Fisher was going great guns until he stacked up against Danny Webster, and since that defeat he has been lying quiet nursing a broken hand. Now, however, the member has mended nicely, and he will try and regain the favor of the fight fans. Kid Sapp is training with Fisher.

KETCHEL BUSY.

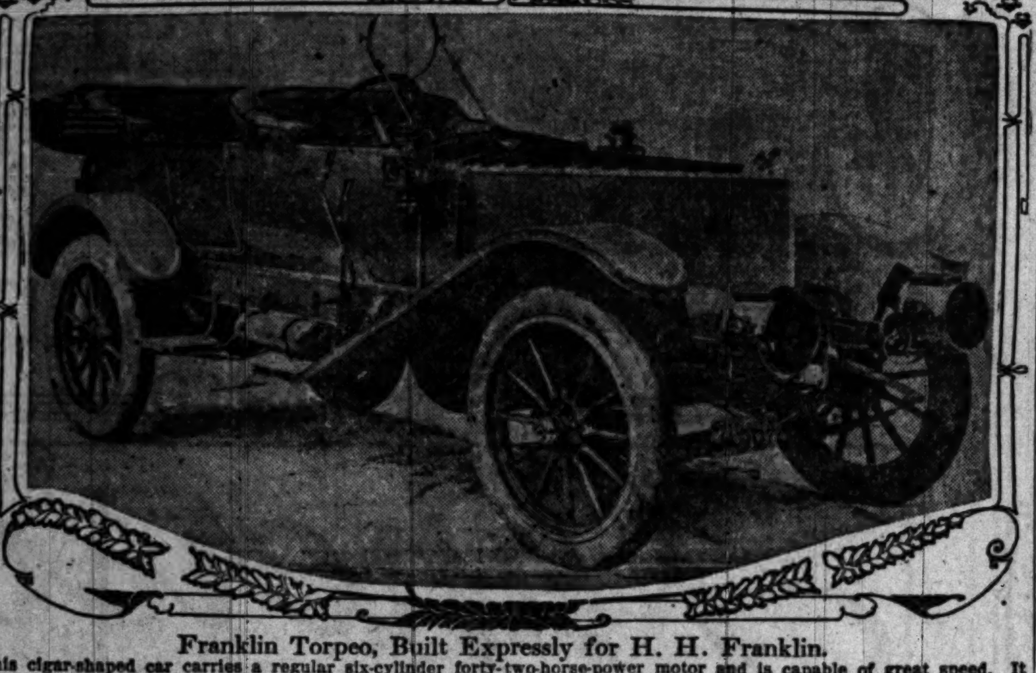
PREPARING FOR BLACK SAM.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS DAY REPORT.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 4.—Stanley Ketchel took up headquarters at a little inn in the Bronx today, to begin active training for his ten-round fight with Sam Langford, to be held before the Fairmont Athletic Club of this city on September 17. With the arrival of Ketchel and the announcement by the club management that the public officials have been satisfied, it is considered practically certain that the much-talked-of fight will take place.

Ketchel says he weighs 185 pounds now and critics believe that he apparently is in the best of physical condition. His appearance, as well as his work, conclusively refutes the many stories emanating from the West which pictured him as dallying with the life that dissipates. He has been in the mountains of California and says that every minute he has been preparing for his fight with Langford. The training now is to put on the finishing touches, such as arm and foot work.

Ketchel displays a right hand which shows that there was no myth in the story that he broke several bones in the first round of his fight with Papke. The bones have not knitted properly and there is a heavy ridge across the back of the hand. But Ketchel says that now he is as strong as ever, and that he can whip Papke in any round he might mention.



Franklin Torpeo, Built Expressly for H. H. Franklin.
This cigar-shaped car carries a regular six-cylinder forty-two-horse-power motor and is capable of great speed. It has an aluminum body and is very graceful.

AN INNOVATION.

FRANKLIN TORPEDO IS BUILT TO CONQUER ALL DUST CLOUDS.

THE Franklin "Torpedo," a speedy motor car built on lines much like those of a projectile, has just been completed by the Franklin factory in Syracuse. It is for the personal use of H. H. Franklin.

Along what would be its water line, if the car were a boat which in its coat of battleship gray it much resembles, the motor car is cigar shaped, presenting little resistance to the air. It has a long, low body, the hood of the automobile being fashioned like the bow of a boat. The shape is an ultra development of what Europeans are seeking in what they call dustless body design. The exterior is smooth like the hull of a boat; nothing projects to catch the dust of the highway. The boat design is an American solution of the European problem.

In the carrying out of the dustless construction the Torpedo is inclosed with sides flush with the top of the dash. In front there is only one door, at the left and away from the driver.

The car is capable of making from sixty to seventy-five miles an hour. It is provided with a regular six-cylinder engine and chassis of the forty-two-horse-power Franklin cars of 1910 model, with a special gear.

The Torpedo's equipment includes even such details as an electric cigar lighter, special monogrammed stationery, caps, goggles, gloves, maps, toilet articles, and a first-aid-to-the-injured outfit.

A circular windshield is an innovation. Its glass is about a foot in diameter and is held by an adjustable nickel standard close before the face of the driver. This was specially designed for the Torpedo.

The electric equipment includes a speedometer light and small electric lights auxiliary to the oil side and rear lights. The headlights use acetylene gas.

The seats are low and are heavily upholstered with goat skin of a light chocolate hue. The same material is used for the rest of the interior. Special dust covers covered the seats when the car left Syracuse. The exterior metal work is of polished nickel.

The body is made of aluminum, and its battleship gray is striped with pearl gray; on the sides appears the Franklin monogram. The aluminum is given a rubbed instead of a highly-polished finish.

The top instead of being the regular black is made of dark blue auto cloth. Long sloping mud guards surmount the forward wheels, harmonizing with the long, unbroken lines of the car; semi-circular ones surmount the rear wheels. A nightingale whistle is carried instead of a horn. The emergency brake and gear-change levers are just without the side of the car instead of inside.

A circular hood of regular Franklin design is made interchangeable with the one of prow design; the latter provides for the admission of the cooling current for the air-cooled engine by means of a row of openings in the top of the hood.

SANTA ANA AUTO RACES.

Preparations Are Made for Carnival Week and Fast Field of Motors Is Promised.

Preparations for an automobile race meet to be held at Santa Ana, Saturday, October 2, are complete. During a canvass of local autoists yesterday a number of cars were promised and the five events, which included a fifty and a twenty-five-mile race, will probably be well filled.

The race meet will be held in connection with the Carnival of Products, which begins September 30 and ends October 2, the day of the auto race meet.

H. D. Connell, J. W. Tubbs and F. A. Ross of Santa Ana have been appointed a committee to look after the race meet. The race track at Santa Ana will be prepared specially for the meet and will be put into shape for fast work. The fifty-mile race is to be a free-for-all and some of the fastest cars in Southern California will probably be seen in action during this race.

Following is a list of events:

Fifty miles, free-for-all, cars costing $2000 and up.

Twenty-five miles, for cars costing from $1000 to $2000.

Fifteen miles, for cars costing from $600 to $1000.

Mile dash, for cars costing $600 and less.

Cupid race, five-mile, drivers to pick up and drop passenger at end of each mile.

Special race, old-time cars for leather medal.

Exhibition mile by New York-to-Paris Thomas racer.

WALDO IS BEST.

WINS FLATBUSH STAKES.

[ASSOCIATED PRESS NIGHT REPORT.]

SHEEPSHEAD BAY, Sept. 4.—Waldo today won easily in the twenty-fifth renewal of the $2000 Flatbush Stakes at seven furlongs, defeating a high-class field and virtually settling the question of the champion two-year-old of the year.

Five and a half furlongs: Intrinsic won, Helen Carroll second, Glen Helen third; time 1:08.

Autumn Steeplechase, two and one-half miles: Rampart won, Denier second, St. Nick third; time 5:12 4-5.

Flatbush, $2000 added, seven furlongs: Waldo won, Dalmatian second, Grasmere third; time 1:26 1-5.

One and a quarter miles: King James won, Zienap second, Pins and Needles third; time 2:05.

Mile and one-sixteenth: Blackford won, Rockstone second, Bird of Flight third; time 1:45.

Six and a half furlongs: Racquet won, Demund second, Dreamer third; time 1:17 1-5.

The five-passenger thirty-horse-power Stoddard-Dayton will arrive Tuesday. The little roadsters of this model have attracted much attention and the coming of the touring car is awaited with interest. The motor has shown plenty of speed and hill-climbing ability and the car is built along stylish lines.

AMATEUR NOTES.

With the opening of the fall semester only two weeks distant, college and prep school athletes are beginning seriously to speculate on the chances of their respective institutions to turn out winning football teams.

With Los Angeles and Polytechnic High Schools playing Rugby, football in Southern California will be divided more sharply into distinctive college and prep classes. No longer will the High School teams be bidding against college elevens for Southern California honors. Both college and prep football should profit by the segregation.

Local football coaches are busy scouting the counties in eager search for likely athletic material ere the college season reopens. Apparently college athletic teams, like orange trees, thrive under the occasional process of "grafting."

Coach Gorton of Occidental is brokenhearted over the decision of Art Argabrite, the crack athlete of Ventura High School, to enter Stanford. Art registered with his brother at the Palo Alto university, and should prove another "find" for "Dad" Moulton.

Fred Thomson, athletic mainstay at Occidental, engaged in a warm dispute with the college registrar concerning library ethics, and is said to have canceled his registration for the coming college term. Neither Thomson, Gorton or Occidental can afford to miss Thomson in the Tiger teams this year, and the "hot spell" should disappear when college opens.

Coach Dean Cromwell, Manager Tom Clay and Football Captain Hal Paulin of the University of Southern California took a flying trip to Ventura Wednesday ostensibly to investigate the bean crop. Incidentally the trio visited every High School athlete in the country, making more calls in two days than a Methodist parson could in a week.

Grant Richardson, one of Santa Paula's famous contributions to U.S.C.'s athletic teams, is anxiously awaiting the opening of the Methodist college. Grant will make his initial bid for football honors this season, and will try for a back vacancy. The boy has the speed, endurance and sufficient "head work" to make good.

Paul Martin, distance runner last season on the University of Southern California track team, has entered Dartmouth College. Leonard Martin, crack Methodist sprinter, is traveling in Japan, and is expected to reënter the university the coming term.

Ben Scott, 'varsity miler at the university, has been summering at Seattle, and is expected home this week. Harry Gower, last year's 'varsity freshman prodigy, is a member of a surveying party operating in Washington. Harry is counted on to register at the university, and is reported to have several likely athletes in tow for the 'varsity teams.

Vryden Hall, one of the best basketball players in Southern California, and brother of Walter Hall, the all-around athlete of U.S.C., is to register in the freshman class at the university for the fall term. Walter Hall is undecided whether to return to college or remain out a year.

Bovard field is undergoing its yearly fall treatment preparatory to football scrimmages. Wednesday the oval was flooded, and tomorrow the field will be harrowed and raked free of stones.

KEMPTON PARK (Eng.) Sept. 4.—The Waterloo selling nursery handicap of 250 sovereigns for two-year-olds, at five furlongs, was won today by Maggie May. Woodland Maid was second, and Aye Aye third. Twenty-one horses started. The Eagles Field Handicap of 200 sovereigns, for three-year-olds and upward, one mile, was won by Spikenard, Auburgine was second and Alaric third. The September Nursery Handicap of 300 sovereigns, for two-year-olds, seven furlongs, was won by Munita; Duchess Christine second, Amadens third.

SCRIMMAGING.

VARSITY SQUAD IN THE MAKING.

CALIFORNIA CANDIDATES IN EARNEST PREPARATION.

Coach Schaeffer Neglects Freshman Team to Whip First Fifteen Into Shape—"Baby" Aggregation Disappointingly Small—Fight for Positions Is on.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, Sept. 3.—After two weeks of football practice, it is very evident that Coach Schaeffer intends to sacrifice everything for the sake of 'varsity victory in November. Never have the 'varsity men received the attention that they are getting this year, and it has been some time since the squad has been composed of such good material.

The freshman squad is not being neglected, but it is not receiving the great amount of attention that it formerly had. Jimmy plans to put a good freshman team in the field, but a first-year victory is going to be a very secondary matter. A majority of the 'varsity men would have little regret if the Stanford "babies" were victorious next month, for a Cardinal triumph would be taken as an omen of good luck for the big game. This feeling has grown from the fact that the California freshmen have always had much more attention given them than have their opponents, while the 'varsity is reputed to have had less.

"Mother" Howe,
otherwise known as William J., who will be assistant Rugby coach at California.

"Mother" Howe, the assistant coach from Sydney, Australia, is making good, if the comments of the men with whom he is brought into touch count for anything. He is full of energy and keeps his scrum candidates moving. His personality is such that the men try to please him.

Schaeffer has taken particular charge of the backs, while Howe is instructing the forwards. Schaeffer's present problem lies in finding a fullback capable of filling Butler's shoes. Black, five-eighths from last year's freshman team, is making a good fight for the position, as is Vail from the 1910 team. Some of the wise ones say that Dwiggins, who played three-quarters on the 1907 'varsity game and half in the match last year, will be switched to fullback.

Dwiggins is one of the best Rugby players on the Coast, and uses his head every minute of the game. He is small but nervy, while his punting is of the highest order. If Dwiggins should be shifted to fullback, Keith Vosburg of Los Angeles stands an excellent chance of being put in at half. The southern boy has been out for football for three years now, and has shown a wonderful improvement each season.

THE BACKFIELD.

The remainder of the backfield is being played as in the 'varsity game last year. Capt. Cerf and Elliott are the five-eighths, Harris the center three-quarter, and Johns and Watts the outside three-quarters. Other backfield candidates are making a strong bid for positions, and there is strong material for the coaches to choose from should accident happen to any of these.

Swartz, the hard-fighting wing forward of last year, is supreme in his position, but the remainder of the forward positions are being fiercely contested. More 'varsity scrum material is available than ever before, and keen contests are being made for every position.

The freshman squad is something of a disappointment. With the biggest freshman class that has ever been in the university, it was hoped that the first-year squad would be exceptionally large. Contrary to expectations, the squad is only of usual size and many of the men are slow in getting onto the game. The backs are doing better than the forwards in this respect, and one or two have shown themselves of 'varsity caliber. Ben Stroud, the famous center of '03, has a freshman brother, who is going to make good, while there are two other big 'varsity brothers, in Stern and Mini, who are also showing well. Mini is the brother of "Little" Mini, 'varsity half in '04-05, while Stern's 'varsity brother was Ed Stern, guard in '04.

Richard Montgomery of Los Angeles has been selected commodore of the university navy, and in this capacity will act as assistant crew manager for the year.

NEEDS MORE ROOM.

Golden State Garage Will Push Out the Walls of Present Building to Make Room for Business.

Larger quarters are demanded by the Golden State Garage, agents for the Palmer-Singer and Simplex cars. O. Werner, owner of the garage, will enlarge the place to almost twice the present capacity and will install a down-to-date repair shop.

In the repair department fifteen men will be given employment and some of the latest machinery will be installed. Recently, Werner visited some of the great factories of the East and Europe and secured ideas which he will incorporate into the improvements at the garage at No. 2122 West Pico street.

The new four-cylinder Palmer-Singer demonstrator will reach here in a few days, Werner says he is unable to give the demonstrations asked for with the six-cylinder machine. He says he has sold eight of the six-cylinder Palmer-Singer motor cars.

When the four demonstrator arrives Werner expects to perform several stunts in the way of hill-climbing and fast running. The Simplex will not be here for several weeks, as the factory has sold its entire output and can promise but few cars for early delivery.

SIX MOTORS FOR SAND BATTLE.

There will be at least six cars in the Los Angeles-Phoenix automobile road race this year. Late last night Woods R. Woolwine of the Oldsmobile agency decided to enter an Oldsmobile. Dan Kuhl may drive the car. The Elmore Motor Car Company will enter an Elmore, to be driven by D. B. Rose and Clarence Smith.

Coney C. Slaughter plans to enter a Stearns. At the present writing Leavitt, who is now in the East, expects to enter a Locomobile. There will be an Apperson touring car and the Franklin "Greyhound." There is a possibility that other cars will start, but the above-named are almost certain entries, making the race one of the greatest ever held in the West.

PERTINENT COMMENT ON SPORTS.

THE WEEK'S EVENTS.

Amateur Baseball Managers.

The question of payment by organized baseball interests for players taken from amateur ranks has developed great possibilities. An amateur manager heretofore has handled his team largely for love of the game, for self-glorification, or for business advertisement. Considering his unusual expenses and small "gate" he makes no money and frequently digs down into his own pocket to make up a deficit. The players are in a condition somewhat similar. Although they [illegible] nothing, the "cut" of receipts averages about a dollar in the ordinary game, which shows that the player is working largely for the love of the sport. It would seem then that the idea of the National Commission is to recompense somebody for digging up a good player, and the manager is the legitimate head. But under present conditions it is hard to see how an "amateur" manager is due anything for the reason that he pays the player money out of his own pocket and loses nothing on him personally. He is fortunate indeed, in securing the man's services. It seems that the only way out of the difficulty is to arrange a new baseball classification in which contracts can be made binding and in which an amateur manager is paid a certain fixed sum for a player, that player to be subject to draft by any league team, rather than the object of competitive bidding. The manager should be compelled to accept the first offer at a fixed rate and only in his way will a player be protected. It might even be arranged that the player get a slice of the purchase price, and in this way it would be an incentive for him to join a team. However, it would be unfair to tie a player too closely to a contract as he might be put to great inconvenience by sticking with the "amateur" team with which he has signed. It is a problem worthy of more consideration by the National Commission.

Contracts of Amateurs.

The controversy over contracts of amateurs has brought a peculiar condition before the sporting world. A contract to be legal must have a consideration of at least on dollar, and managers in Los Angeles assert that this amount is paid in return for the contract, besides splitting a certain proportion of the receipts among the players. According to the interpretation of the A.A.U., an amateur must receive no compensation for playing any game or taking part in any sport, unless possibly it be the payment of his necessary expenses. Therefore it is hard to see how these ball players can be classed as amateurs. They are semi-professionals in classification and professionals in the eyes of the A.A.U. If they in any way are in the professional class they certainly must be considered outlaws by the baseball trust. If they are outlaws, then by adopting the rule to purchase these players from their managers the national baseball organization is guilty of discriminating against the California State League and other similar organizations. It seems that the only way out of it is the plan suggested by [illegible] and Berry of the Los Angeles [illegible]—to have all amateur organizations register with the National Association and be put on a different plane from the outlaw organizations. Even then the question of invasion of territory would come up. It seems as though the National Commission has bitten off more than it can chew.

Pacific Coast Golf.

The recent golf games at Del Monte seem to indicate that the sport has a stronger place in the realms of recreation than enthusiasts in other lines [illegible]. There are those who do not care for more strenuous sport or are unable to be so active in their recreation. For these persons golf is ideal because it gives opportunity for [illegible] walks, good arm and shoulder [illegible], and the development of accuracy of calculation in estimating distances and placing shots. For the [illegible] athlete, one who delights in strenuous exertion and intricate detail, golf does not fulfill his desires, but to others it gives just the right amount of exercise, both in body and mind. The coast is the ideal place for golf as in the proper season the days are dry and pleasant.

The Baseball Business.

The business end of baseball has become one of the greatest in the country, and the sport is becoming a close rival to the theaters in receipts and number of interested persons. Millions are spent at the gate each year, and thousands of persons make their livelihood from the profits. All baseball employes, whether players or groundkeepers, are well paid. The losses all fall to the stockholder. In many cases the profits of the stockholders are abnormal. It is a great game, both in sport and in business.

Coming of the Airship.

Automobile enthusiasts are not in the least worried about the coming of the airship. Inventors say that it will be twenty-five years before the flying machine will be fully developed. Even in so simple a problem as the motor car it has required ten years or more for development to the present high standard, and many improvements are noted this year. The auto industry is at its heighth and the "craze" will last for years to come. When the American people get tired of it, as they do with most everything, in time, and the auto becomes a purely business machine, then there will be occasion to take up the airship. Meanwhile the inventors will be kept busy for years perfecting aërial mechanism. The automobile still has its uses, and not the least of there is the pleasure it gives.

Four-Flushing of Fighters.

The fight fans are wondering just how much of the hot air will evaporate with the steam in Jim Jeffries' Carlsbad baths. If, when Jeff gets back, he will get right down to business of preparing for a fight with Johnson, and not open his mouth to say a word, and also keep his managers muzzled, the fans will believe in the great efficacy of the baths. Otherwise they will consider it money misspent. Jeff could take off all the fat necessary in the ordinary baths in this country, so the bugs are looking for a real cure. "Quit you're four-flushin', Jeff; you are not used to it. You are not so much to blame as your immediate friends. The public wants to see you again in you're true character."

Rugby Football Invasion.

In securing the adoption of Rugby football in both the Los Angeles and Polytechnic High Schools, the northern universities have struck a hard blow at the southern schools, for in recent years the athletic features of a school have attracted many students. There is no doubt but that northern influence was brought to bear on the southern high schools, as it is unlikely the students would have adopted the Rugby style of their own volition. In fact, the game was forced upon L. A. High students. Rugby has its merits, but southern colleges believe that the American game is best. Pomona tried the new style and went back to the old. It will be a survival of the fittest.

BEGIN PRACTICE.

Olympic Reliance and Barbarians Open Rugby Season in the North.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—The Rugby football squads of the Barbarians, Olympic Club and Reliance Athletic Club held informal practice at the Stadium in Golden Gate Park this week, and tomorrow morning real work is to begin in preparation for the games among themselves and with Stanford and California. Each organization has plenty of experienced material, and it is expected that teams will be developed that will play exciting league games as well as make things interesting for the university men.

The Olympics appear to have the best material at their disposal, and followers of the game believe that the "Winged O" aggregation will be the fastest exponent of the English game that has ever been formed on the American Pacific Coast outside of the two California universities.

John O. Miller, Erb and Evans, who played on the Stanford fifteen last year, have signed up for the team, and Freeman and Webster, of last season's California team, also have been out for practice. The team will be weakened by the absence of Ollie Snedigar, the famous ex-California athlete, woh has decided to stay out of the game this year. Thorpe and Minturn of Stanford also were counted upon, but they have reëntered Stanford and again will play against California.

The veterans of last year who have turned out for practice are Molfino, Brennan, Hickey, Wallfish, Aquirre, Brong, Laumeister, Webster and Cavanaugh. Harry McKenzie, forward last year, is to be switched to five-eighths, where it is believed he will be more effective.

Munn, the great California athlete, has joined the Barbarians. Harry Elliott again is to lead the "Barbs." The local teams have arranged one or more games with Stanford and California, and the strongest fifteen may meet the Vancouver team when it comes South to play the universities.

Harry Trotter, the versatile Methodist athlete, was last seen moving his domicile from Piru to Fillmore. Harry occasionally hurls the sixteen-pound shot over forty-two feet, and is scheduled to appear on the Methodist campus the opening day of college. Trotter is forbidden the pleasures of gridiron glory this season by parental objections. He will confine his surplus energy to breaking intercollegiate track and field records.

BULL'S CHANCE.

favor of the bull. This form of the sport is known as the Races Landalses because of its origin in a certain part of France. The bull holds all the trumps, the capadors, banderilleros, and matadors taking all the chances. The bull comes from the ring without a scratch on him. It is simply a matter of skill and agility on the part of the man. These contests are in high favor in France. M. Robert proposes to make them as popular in America.

The bull enters the ring. He is prepared to charge anything he sees. The capadors advance with their ever-ready capes before them. The bull charges—whisk goes the cape to one side, and the man leaps for safety. Just how close the bull can come without striking him is the business of the bullfighter.

A mimic contest is then indulged in. The cruel barbed banderillas are not used. In their stead, tinseled wands smeared with glue, are produced. The banderillero must show the same agility and caution in the use of these as he would with the barbs. He stands before the bull and calls him to the charge. On comes the animal, head down. The man leans fairly over his horns and places the wands between the shaggy shoulders. In the case of the barbs, the bull leaps about, frantic with pain. With the ones to be used in the local contests the glue will simply hold the wands to the hide to show that the proper spots have been touched.

Another pretty trick of the game is the double somersault. This is performed by the toreador, who whirls over the horns of the charging animal. Jumping over the horns of the bull, leaping lightly on his head and running the length of his spine, pole vaulting over him and many other tricks of the kind, requiring wonderful agility, nerve and caution will be used. The matador will seat himself upon a chair. The bull charges straight at him. With a deft movement he steps aside, just as bull and chair collide.

When the contest is over there is not a scratch upon the bull. The men take all the chances of death.

TO BE "EDUCATED."

"I have always thought that Americans, if they would study the fine points of the bullfighting game, would appreciate it more than they do," said M. Robert yesterday. "A matador studies his trade for years. He is in danger of terrible injury or death every minute he is in the ring. If he makes a mistake he generally pays with his life, while if he bungles his work he may be frequently arrested.

"I do not see how there can be any objection by the authorities to the contests I propose here. The bulls used are fighting bulls. The domestic animal could not be used at all. When a horse is an outlaw, he is always bad. It is the same way with a bull. A fighting bull is never good for anything else. It is their joy to charge at any and everything. So they are not tormented or baited when taken into the ring. We take all the risk. We pit our agility and cleverness against the terrible charges of the bull. He leaves the ring unharmed. It is not like the contests of Mexico and Spain, for there is not a drop of blood shed unless a man is hurt. The exhibition is more remarkable by far than your prize fights or polo games and there is all the thrill and danger of sudden death to be taken into consideration."

M. Robert is one of the old school of famous matadors. He was presented his diploma by the Queen of Spain along with a handsome cape, valued at $6000. He is the greatest of all French matadors and has few peers among the Spaniards. Several of his classmotes in thebullfighting school, all famous matadors, have been killed in the royal arenas of Spain during the past two years.

Robert, however, has no fear of death in the ring. In fact he never thinks of danger while plying his trade, taking accidents as a matter of profit and loss.

Today he will fight four bulls to the death in the ring at Tia Juana, just across the Mexican border. Next Sunday four more fighting bulls will be given the death stroke. A special feature of next Sunday's contest will be a fight to the death between a Bengal tiger and Chihuahua bull. The sport is popular in Mexico, but as in most of the contests held at Tia Juana, the majority of the crowd will probably be Americans lured to the ring by the novelty of the affair.

Even in these contests held across the border M. Robert has done all he can toward improving the game. He has eliminated the horses. The horse slaughter has always been the great drawback of bullfights from the American standpoint. Robert fights his bulls while they are fresh without sending the horses and riders in first to tire the big animals.

ATHLETIC FESTIVAL.

Programme for Portola Benefit Includes Wrestling, Rowing and Swimming Contests.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The athletic programme for the Portola Festival again has been revised and the committee in charge believes that the events will be run off as they now have been arranged.

Instead of a formal amateur boxing tournament, a series of special bouts, in which the contestants will be the best available on the Coast, are to be held. These contests are scheduled for October 19.

Wrestling bouts, to be conducted on the same general plan as the boxing matches, are to be held October 20.

The rowing regatta is to be held Friday afternoon, October 22, and in the evening the swimming tournament is to be conducted in the new Lurline Baths. Arrangements have been made for bringing four of the best amateur swimmers from Los Angeles to compete in the tank events.

Professional sports of various kinds are to be held during the week. It is the intention of the Athletic Committee to have "something doing" continuously during the celebration.

CALIFORNIA WINS.

'Varsity Defeats Reliance Club in First Rugby Contest—Olympics Beat "Babies."

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERKELEY, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] California 'varsity, 39; Reliance Club, 0; Olympic Club, 8; California freshmen, 0.

The University of California football season was opened this afternoon by games on California Field between the two blue and gold teams and the Reliance and Olympic Athletic Club fifteens.

The 'varsity outclassed the Reliance men, scoring nine tries and converting six. Elliott kicked six out of seven chances to convert. The veteran 'varsity backfield, with improved style of passing, was responsible for much of the gain.

In the second half Vosburg of Los Angeles went in at half, and Evans of Pomona at wing forward, and played excellent Rugby. The freshman game was mostly modified intercollegiate.

A few of the babies showed that they were getting the first principles of Rugby, but most of them wanted to hang on to the ball and buck. The backs showed the greatest promise, while the forwards were slow.

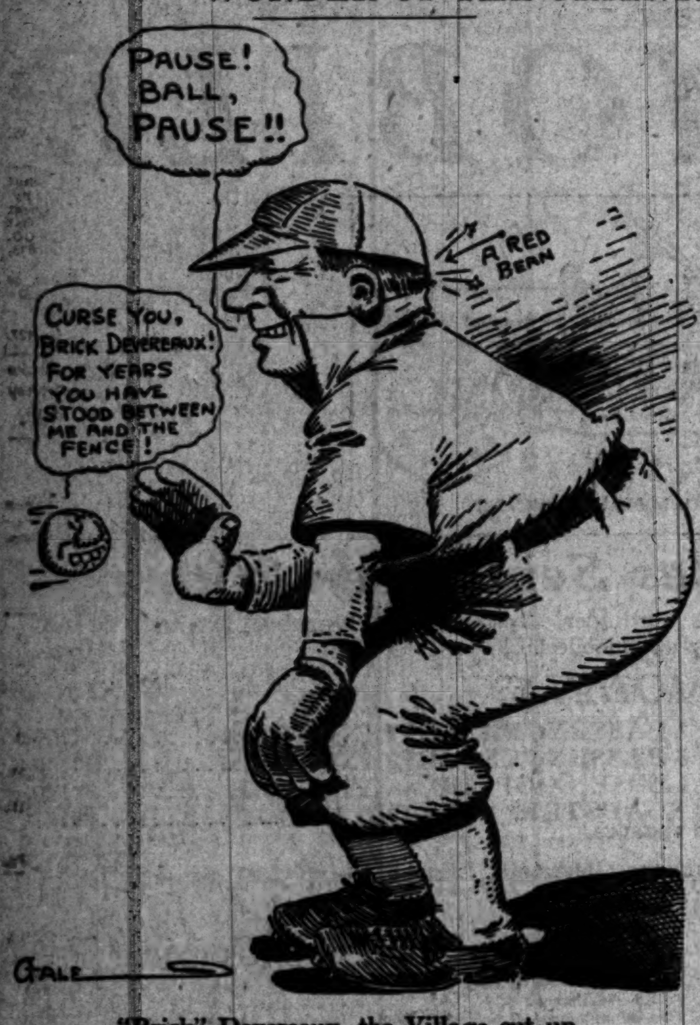
"GOOD MORNING, BARON."

RED-TOP BILL DEVEREAUX, WONDER OF THE ORIENT.



PAUSE! BALL, PAUSE!!
A RED BEAN
CURSE YOU, BRICK DEVEREAUX! FOR YEARS YOU HAVE STOOD BETWEEN ME AND THE FENCE!
GALE

"Brick" Devereaux, the Village cut up.

BY GREY OLIVER.

ONE morning in Oakland eight years ago he was pitching for Sacramento against Oakland, and with two out, three on bases, and the Sacramentos liable to win if they could make a hit, a big busher named Beville came to bat. It was the tenth inning and everyone was about as nervous as a cat with her head in a pitcher. You need nerve pills after any Sunday game, and you generally have to slip yourself a couple before the last man is out.

He was the only cool one on that side of the bay, and when the ice wagon came around to the house that morning he calmly motioned the thing away with the statement that he would put the butter in his pocket that day. He hitched up his trousers and then stopped the game long enough to go to each of the fielders and give the instruction to play deep. He then spit on his hands and when about to pitch yelled at Umpire Graves to knock that stick off the plate. There were "two and three" on Beville, and just as the busher looked down at the plate he shot the ball straight over the plate and the ump called a strike. There was no stick there, of course.

It was the third one, and it hit Truck Eagan, at that time also with Sacramento, in the breast and bounced out in front of the plate. As Truck was catching that day for Sacramento he at once grabbed the ball and threw the busher out at first and the game was won for Sacramento.

Of course he is none other than Bill Devereaux, the most fanciful figure in baseball in the west, in days gone by as he is today, for he has had about as many experiences as any player who ever lived. He is the only ball player in the history of the world who ever had the Asiatic cholera and got over it in two days, and that makes him a wonder.

Some old men like Dr. Osler Joe think that all other old men should have their throats cut as soon as they begin to admit they are 35 years old last May, but like Limburger cheese to the noses of some persons, Bill seems to become better with age. He was born 38 years ago in Oakland, and although he has been playing ball about twenty years, he never played better than he does right now. When it comes to ginger he has every other player ever seen here dead and buried in the cold, cold grave. He was the life of every club he ever played on, and even makes the laugh come to Ote Johnson, who is as solemn as a goose.

Bill admits that his first baseball was played on the Emerald team at Oakland in 1891. He stayed with that team three years, starting out as a second baseman and winding up as a pitcher. This is no joke, for he was really a pitcher and can do it now. In 1893, when the then California League broke up, he joined what was left of the Oakland team. The next year he pitched for the Lincoln, Neb., team, and changed off occasionally as shortstop. He then went to the Santa Cruz team and remained there four years, pitching and playing various positions. During 1899, 1900 and 1901 he was with Mike Fisher's Sacramento team as third baseman, shortstop and pitcher, and pitched every Sunday morning at Oakland and won eleven straight games. It was in one of these Sunday morning games that he fanned the busher Beville with the stick trick, Truck Eagan being catcher at that time.

In 1901 Oakland traded Eagan and one of the many "Cy Young" pitchers for Devereaux, for they traded players every week then. For the following six years Bill was with Oakland on third base, and occasionally pitching a game. Last year he played with the Santa Cruz outlaws and is now with Vernon, and Unhappy Hogan says he would not take $5000 for him.

While Bill was with the Sacramento team Moskiman was heaving against the Senators one morning at Oakland and with the score tied and two out, Bill went to bat. He stopped the game long enough to tell the ladies and gentlemen present that he intended to break up the game with a home run. Moskiman laughed and after Bill had fouled off the first one he announced that that foul showed that the pitcher was a mutt, couldn't strike out anyone, and that the next ball he pitched would be hit over the fence for a home run. To the everlasting joy of the fans, Bill did hit the next one over the fence for a homer, and thus he gained his fame as the only truthful ball player in the business.

Bill went over to China and Manila last winter with Mike Fisher's invading ball team, and to hear him tell some of his experiences there proves that when it comes to telling the truth he can make George Washington and Truthful James look like sick cats. He says that while in the Sandwich Islands he visited one extinct volcano and after going down 1700 feet into the stomach of it, reached the floor of the crater, which was twenty-three miles wide, and it was not a particularly good day for visiting volcanoes either, for the atmosphere was hazy and the snow was about to fall on Mt. Wilson.

When Bill got over to Manila he was entertained by the first Mayor of the town at his private plantation, where there was nothing to drink on the place but champagne. The gin-rickey men used to follow him around by the hundreds like dogs, and barked at him as the little big Americano. There were a million Japanese lanterns in the garden alone, and a brilliant ball every night. He stuck around the place quite a spell and all the guests did every five minutes was to crouch like tigers and wait for someone to start something, and then there would be a free-for-all fight to keep someone from stopping it. When there was nothing else to do Bill slept, and during the twelve days he was there he slept four hours, which might be considered as four hours wasted.

If you think he is sleepy sometimes on the ball field, because he boots a hard grounder, just please remember that he was over at Manila last winter.

FADING, STILL FADING.

HOSP LOSES ANOTHER GAME.

OAKS SLAM IN WINNING RUNS IN EIGHTH INNING.

Los Angeles in Front Twice During the Struggle, But Hoodoo Works Against Them—Duff Lewis Starts His Team Onward With Home Run Over Right Fence.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Another eight-inning rally, another upset for the Southerners, who had come bravely to the front in the first inning with a couple of runs and Henry Berry's Angels were beaten for the fifth time in a row at Recreation Park this afternoon.

In many respects, it was Friday's game over again. Los Angeles took its first inning lead, finally allowed the Oaks to tie the score, and then came again in a fashion that made it look as if they were really to break the hoodoo that had been chasing them all the week. But the hoodoo wasn't ready to quit. Just when Capt. Wheeler thought he might pick out a victory, the slate was smashed all to pieces and in the eighth the Commuters showed the stuff that is making them finish.

It was another good rally, with a battering down of Francis Hosp, who seemed for a time immune to attacks. Jim Wiggs had all of his trouble at the outset, but he gained heart when the Oaks tied the score on the first occasion and was an unbeatable pitcher after that had happened.

Duffey Lewis's homer over right field was the signal for the Oakland rally. It came in the sixth, unattended by other tallies, as Lewis lead off in the batting, but it gave the Oaks hope and they couldn't be stopped with that run in front of them.

The Angels opened up in the first in this wise: Daley was out on a grounder but Godwin hit one to McKune that was fumbled. George Wheeler hit the right field fence for two bases and then came Ross with a single to center. It was easy for Godwin to score, but Wheeler came around from second because as the ball was thrown in from center, it took a bad bound, just in front of the catcher.

Kelley for the Oaks worked himself as far as third in the same inning on a walk, a sacrifice and a hit by Maggart to right but bad judgment was used by the coacher in sending him home and Kelley was out at the plate. After that and up to the sixth, the Oaks had men on bases but could accomplish not a thing.

Duffey Lewis started the sixth with a home run over the right-field fence. Maggart drew a pass, was sacrificed to second by Hogan and came home when Cameron put the ball into center. Cameron was out at second on the throw back from the plate. Cutshaw hit to right and when he was caught napping off first, made second in safety because of Wheeler's bad throw to the keystone sack. McKune, however, retired the side and the score was two all.

The Angels once more went to the front in the eighth. With two out, Ross was hit, stole second and scored when Jud Smith hit one to left field that was badly handled in returning to Carl Lewis.

The Oaks, however, came back stronger than ever in their half of the same inning. Duffey Lewis, singled to right and Maggart laid down a fielder's choice, the effort to nab Lewis at second being a failure. Hogan's drive to right center scored Lewis and a short hit to center by Cameron sent Maggart the balance of the way around the sacks. Cutshaw forced Cameron and then with Hogan, allowed himself to be caught in a double play, the squeeze play failing to work.

HITT BATS VICTORY.

no trouble in scoring when Eagan doubled to the Chutes gate. Wild Bill Devereaux was passed and then Mott hit a sacrifice bunt to Harkness, who tried to catch Eagan at third but failed. Brown fouled to Fisher, much to his disgust, but Hitt bumped a high-bounding single between short and third that caught Olson asleep. This scored Eagan and put Devereaux on third and Bill raced in on Stovall's sacrifice to the infield. Mott got to third on this, to the music of loud cheers, and Bernard came through with a scratch infield hit to Olson that scored Mott.

The fans raised the roof off the grandstand almost with their yells, and in the attempt to rattle Harkness Stovall ran across the field toward the pitcher's box and Bernard was called out for the "interference."

These runs put the Vernons two to the good, but the Beavers evened things again in their half of the eighth on Ort's double, Guyn's pass and singles by Cooney and Olson. The end came in the last of the ninth, and was started by Mott, who beat out a bunt toward third base. He was forced at second by Brown and then Hitt won his own game with that hard high double to the center fence that scored Brown.

The playing was of a high order, the two errors made not being mixed in any way with the runs, while the hitting was all that could have been asked for.

RECORD SQUAD AT STANFORD.

Many Players Scramble for Positions.

Big Nucleus of Veterans Is Available.

'Varsity and "Baby" Schedules Completed.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Sept. 4.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The first football practice of the season was held on the supplementary field this afternoon. One hundred and sixty men turned out, the largest number of candidates that has appeared on the field since the English game was adopted, and Coach Presley is pleased with the prospects.

Many of the new men have no chance even to make the second team this year on account of the large number of last year's players that have returned to the university, but the coach intends that every man who is able to stand the gaff will be taught the game, even if half a dozen assistant coaches have to be engaged.

With eighteen players of 'varsity caliber in the squad, the students are confident that California will be no more dangerous this year than last season. Twelve of the old men have played in intercollegiate games and four were members of the 1908 second fifteen.

In the backfield, Floyd Brown, the husky fullback with the heavy boot, and Mow Mitchell, captain and five-eighths, are considered here the best players on the Coast. Leland Scott and John Holman also are practically sure of their places back of the scrum, and Coach Presley will have no trouble in filling the other vital places. R. Pemberton, "Babe" Crawford, G. Cheda, K. L. Dole, C. A. Thorpe, R. Minturn and R. H. Reynolds, 'varsity scrum veterans, were out for practice and undoubtedly will occupy the same places they held in the previous intercollegiate games.

The work yesterday consisted chiefly of passing and catching the ball. The new men were divided into small squads and placed in charge of the older players. At the opening of the practice, Coach Presley announced that training rules were in force, and that any violation of them would result in the offenders being dropped from the squad.

DEVELOPING BABIES.

The freshmen will receive much attention from the coach next week. Their game with the California "babies" is scheduled for October 16, more than a month before the 'varsity game, and as the youngsters across the bay have been victorious in the annual games ever since 1904, a strenuous effort is to be made to develop a winning team. The coach has not yet had the opportunity to get a line on the 1913 men, but the most likely candidates will be picked out next week.

The first game of the season on the ... field is to be played next Saturday, when the freshmen are to meet Lowell High School of San Francisco. They will play weekly games. The 'varsity will open its season with the Barbarians, September 18.

Several Southern California men are expected to land places on the 1913 fifteen. Stan Mitchell and Louis Cass, who played brilliant football on the Los Angeles High School eleven, are trying for the team. They have had little experience at the English game, but their athletic ability probably will pull them through. Fyfe of Harvard Military School also is out for the team. Men from Redlands and Pomona, who have played interscholastic Rugby, also are in the squad.

The new athletic field was put in excellent condition during the summer. The field is covered with splendid turf. Much of the practice is to be held on the supplementary field so that the regular gridiron will be in perfect condition for the intercollegiate contest.

"Dad" Moulton, the veteran trainer, has had a heart-to-heart talk with the new men regarding training rules. If necessary, the spy system will be installed in order that any men violating the rules will be detected.

The fourth Rugby football season was opened with a wildly enthusiastic rally in Encina Hall Thursday night, and nearly 150 men signed up for practice and training. All candidates who expect to try for the 'varsity, freshman or class fifteens put their names on the list that was turned over to Coach Presley, and the manner in which the men responded to the call for volunteers is regarded as indicative of another successful season.

SEASON SCHEDULE.

Graduate Manager D. W. Burbank has completed the schedules for the 'varsity and freshman teams. The 'varsity is to play nine games, only one of which will not be played on the university campus. October 23, a contest will be held with the University of Nevada at Reno, and on the following Saturday the Nevadans will play at Stanford.

Ten games have been arranged for the "freshies," most of them being with high schools in the Santa Clara Valley. The complete schedules follow:

'Varsity—Barbarians of San Francisco at Stanford, September 19; Olympic Club of San Francisco at Stanford, September 25; Barbarians at Stanford, October 2; Olympic Club at Stanford, October 9; University of Nevada at Reno, October 23; University of Nevada at Stanford, October 30; Vancouver at Stanford, November 3; Vancouver at Stanford, November 6; University of California at Stanford, November 13.

Freshmen—Lowell High School of San Francisco at Stanford, September ..; Santa Clara College at Stanford, September 15; San José High School at Stanford, September 18; Palo Alto High School at Stanford, September 22; St. Mary's College at Stanford, September 25; Palo Alto High School at Stanford, September 29; Santa Clara College at Stanford, October 2; St. Mary's College at Stanford, October 6; University of Pacific at Stanford, October 9; University of California freshmen at Berkeley, October 16.

Twelve veterans of former intercollegiate contests have reëntered the university and the students are confident that Coach Presley will succeed in turning out a team that will defeat the bitter rivals of the Cardinal across the bay. Seven members of last year's team have been graduated, but four men who played against California in 1907 and were not in the university last year have again matriculated and will endeavor to land their places on the 'varsity. Among the auxiliary material of last year are several men who are strong enough for the first team and with a large number of new men from which to draw, there promises to be little difficulty in forming a fast fifteen.

CAPT. MITCHELL.

Mow Mitchell, '10, of Los Angeles, who is the captain of the 'varsity team, is expected to be the Cardinal star this year. In the last intercollegiate game he shared first honors with J. R. Holman, '09. He knows the game thoroughly and his services will be of great value to the coach.

The members of last year's eleven who have again signed up for the team are: K. L. Dole, '11; D. P. Crawford, '09; J. R. Pemberton, '08; H. P. Cheda, '11; M. M. Mitchell, '10; L. S. Scott, 10; J. R. Holman, '09. The members of the 1907 'varsity who did not play last year but who will try for the team this year are: C. A. Thorpe, '09; R. H. Reynold, '10; L. R. Minturn, '09; F. C. Brown, '11.

John O. Miller, W. Koerner, C. C. Terrill, D. G. Heinley, B. E. Erb, C. E. Ganong, T. R. Cadwalader, M. P. Cook and G. C. Faulkner, who played against California last year, will be missing from the squad this season. Five of them graduated and the others are not expected to return to the university this semester.

As the big game is to be played on the local campus this year, the students are already beginning to make preparations for supporting the team in the most enthusiastic and spectacular manner. The three successive intercollegiate Rugby victories have caused the Cardinals to believe that to drop their first game on their own field would be an almost ineffaceable blot upon their athletic records.

BUCK LUCK.

MANY HUNTERS SECURE DEER.

SAN BERNARDINO MOUNTAINS HARBOR BIG GAME.

Redlands Sportsmen Kill Three Spike Buck on Whitewater Creek. Deer Plentiful on Sugar Loaf and San Gorgenia Peaks—Game More Numerous in Lower Ranges.

Deer are more plentiful in the San Bernardino Mountains this year than for five seasons and the bucks secured by hunters so far exceed the number shot in the last two years put together.

The continued hot weather last year drove the game to the inaccessible reaches of the upper ranges, and the gunners scoured the hills in vain quest of their quarry. Unmolested through the natural protection of rugged surroundings the deer multiplied.

This season in the same localities which produced no sport last year, deer have been shot in gratifying numbers. The north and east slopes of Mt. San Bernardino, Mt. Sugar Loaf, the east slope of San Gorgonia, and even Earton Flats, a cienega three miles distant from Seven Oaks, have all been hunted with success.

Three spike bucks were shot on the south fork of Whitewater Creek last week by a party of Redlands gunners. G. B. Hoover and Frank Sucres each shot a buck, and Bill Knickerbocker, keeper of the dam at Pine Lake, secured the other deer. Fred Hill, also of Redlands, was the only member of the party failing to connect for a killing.

The quartette left Seven Oaks Sunday afternoon, and camped for the night at Dry Lake. Crossing the divide into the cañon of Whitewater on the east slope of San Gorgonia, deer tracks were found fresh and plentiful. In two days' tramping six deer were seen, three being far out of range and three being shot. On the return trip tracks were found and the hunters have given the tip to their friends as to the whereabouts of the game.

Above Horse Meadows on the north slope of San Bernardino Mountain Bert Crafts shot a spike buck and entertained his friends last week with venison steaks. Bert was out but one day, getting the game early in the afternoon. Art Meyer, deputy ranger at Upper Bear Lake, got a spike buck on the south slope of Sugar Loaf recently. Art says the game is unusually plentiful in that section this year, and he is going next week after his second deer.

To have a shot at the same deer two days in succession was the freak experience of George R. Mansfield of Redlands, who killed a spike buck at Barton Flats. Tuesday Mansfield took rifle and horse to the Flats and came upon a buck in short order. Sliding from his mount, Mansfield drew bead with his repeater on the game. The trigger spring balked. Quickly realizing gun sickness Mansfield dissembled his rifle, adjusted the spring, and reloading his gun, was just raising the rifle to shoot when a tramper slouched into view, scaring away the buck, which had remained feeding unconscious of danger all the time.

Strong in the belief that the buck would not wander very far away Mansfield started early the next morning for the scene of his first encounter. Letting his horse feed in the vicinity the gunner shortly came upon his quarry lying in its lair of pine needles. The deer jumped with a startled snort, but a single shot brought the game to earth again.

George Mattern, Clarence Requa and Hubert Bingham of Los Angeles, while tramping through the same flats, ran across three bucks a week ago. Armed only with a .38 caliber Colt's revolver, Mattern chased the game for several minutes, securing three shots, none of which took effect. The deer ran in a circle around the boys, but when fired upon beat it to the hills. The following day Mattern scoured the same locality in quest of the game, but the luck of Mansfield was not repeated.

The sport in the San Bernardino mountains seems to be improving as the season advances. Now that cooler weather prevails, and the early bombardment of opening week has subsided, the deer have retraced their tracks into the lower valleys and cañons, and the gunner who visits the more likely meadows should be fairly certain of securing a buck. Several parties of hunters are preparing to track the south slope of Mt. San Bernardino, and judging from the number of fresh tracks seen there recently the spiked game should be found in short order.

TARGETS.

RIFLE LEAGUE IS ORGANIZED.

GUN CLUBS OF COAST JOINED FOR MUTUAL SPORT.

First Contest Arranged for September 12 Between Southern California Rifles, Tacoma, Seattle, North Yakima and Los Angeles Rifle and Revolver Club.

To stimulate interest in range shooting a Pacific Coast rifle and revolver club league is being organized by members of the Los Angeles Rifle and Revolver Club. The new league will include the clubs on the Coast that shoot both rifle and revolver and which use the military rifle to some extent at least.

Monthly or biweekly shoots will be held between the clubs. Fixed ranges and other conditions to be agreed upon later, and the standing of the clubs will be determined upon from the percentages at the end of the season.

The first shoot will be held September 12, and will be participated in by the Los Angeles Rifle and Revolver Club, the Southern California Rifles, Spokane, Tacoma, Seattle and North Yakima. The conditions of the match are: Ten men per team, ranges 200, 300 and 500 yards, five shots per man, with 2 sighters before each string.

There are eight or ten strong rifle and revolver clubs on the Pacific Coast, including the Seattle Rifle and Revolver Club, the Tacoma Rifle and Revolver Club, the Southern California Rifles of Los Angeles, the same organization at Santa Ana, the Bisbee Rifles and the Los Angeles Rifle and Revolver Club, with other organizations in the Northwest. The Salinas Rifle Club is a possible member of the league.

Favorable replies have been received from Tacoma, Seattle and the Southern California Rifles, which with the Los Angeles Rifle and Revolver Club, already forms a nucleus for next year's organization. Owing to the rains, the shooting season in the North ends about the first of October and the present plans are for the season of 1910.

It has been the experience in all clubs that the greatest interest is aroused by the team matches with other clubs and that men will come out and fight for a place on the team who would not show up if they had a cinch on a gold medal.

Telegraph contests, while not as exciting as matches shot on the same ranges, are of enough interest to make those interested in shooting lay aside other plans and devote their Sundays to working for places on the team of their club.

A practice shoot in preparation for the coming match will be held by the Southern California Rifles this afternoon at Schuetzen Park. The men who will take part are Olden, Backus, Watkyns, White, Andrews, A. Orrill, Stein, McBride, D. Orrill and Ostrander.

CLOSES MANY CONTRACTS.

Earle C. Anthony Prepares for Far-Reaching Campaign in Southern California Towns.

Preparations for one of the most extensive campaigns in the history of the Western Motor Car Company have been completed by Earle C. Anthony, manager. Contracts have been closed with every agent with whom the Western people will do business in Southern California, and it only remains to ship cars to the several branch houses throughout the South.

Until the end of November and perhaps later the Western Motor Car Company expects to handle two carloads each of Hudsons and Chalmers-Detroits a week. These will be used to supply local trade and the out-of-town representatives.

Following is a list of agents: George H. Foster, Fullerton; Parker & Thompson, San Diego; John Rarick, Uplands; Thomas & Kreabil, Pomona; Crossley & Harsh, Riverside; Sanders & Gammin, San Jacinto; Central Garage, Pasadena; Austin T. Park, Redlands, who will build the handsomest garage in the town to take care of the Hudsons and Chalmers-Detroits; F. S. Whitman, San Pedro, and R. B. Millard, Monrovia.

Charles Reynolds has been given charge of all adjustments on Chalmers and Hudson 1910 cars to be done at the Western garage. Reynolds will look after all complaints and will be on hand to aid those who have trouble with their machines. His work will be exclusively with the Hudson and Chalmers owners.

The Western has inaugurated a new system in the garage, which will resemble a shop. There will be cash registers and desks, and all articles will be signed for in triplicate.

New Golf Champion.

HOMEWOOD COUNTRY CLUB (Flossmoore, Ill.) Sept. 4.—Miss Vida Llewellyn of the La Grange Country Club, La Grange, Ill., defeated Miss Caroline Painter of the Midlothian Country Club, Chicago, for the women's Western Golf Championship here today, 6 up, 5 to play.

MOUNTAIN ROADS ROCKY.

Elmore Driven From Cananea and Shenk Finds Good Roads Only in Imperial Valley.

A. M. Shenk, secretary of the Uncle Sam Gold Mining and Milling Company of Calexico, drove to Los Angeles the early part of the week in an Elmore. Shenk came by way of San Diego, and says the roads are wretched across the mountains.

Following one of the proposed routes of the Los Angeles-Phoenix race, Shenk sent his car over what he says is the roughest country in Southern California. In places he found no road at all. It was necessary to drive the Elmore over rocky defiles and through water courses from which every semblance of a road has been washed way.

Though the road was so rough the only trouble which Shenk experienced was two punctures as he neared Los Angeles. He says he had absolutely no trouble with his car.

Soon after leaving Cananea the roads became rough. Through the Imperial Valley they were found to be much better. The run over the hills from El Centro to San Diego was particularly hard because of the rough country.

The H. O. Harrison Company reports the following sales for the past week: C. H. Sessions, a close-coupled Peerless touring car; James Slauson, Peerless roadster; J. W. Owen, Peerless touring car.

GETS HIS BUTTON.

COST HIM NINE THOUSAND FOR HIS FIRST BIG TUNA.

L. G. Murphy and His $9000 Tuna, with Capt. Tad Gray, who gaffed it. Converse, Ind., man, whose hunt of nine years for a tuna has been rewarded.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

AVALON, Sept. 4.—After spending $9000 in nine years fishing at Catalina, in a vain endeavor to land a tuna, L. G. Murphy of Converse, Ind., has at last been rewarded in landing one of the much-sought-after sea-fighters, a 100-pound tuna being brought to gaff by the ambitious angler last week.

Murphy now wears the coveted blue tuna button in a conspicous place, and the veteran angler is boasting that the catch of the first tuna was fully worth the prolonged efforts and tremendous expenditure.

"That tuna cost me $9000," said Mr. Murphy, "for I have been nine years catching it, but I got the worth of my money."

Murphy is one of the mightiest anglers in the land, and besides registering his first tuna catch, also brought in one of the largest sword fish ever seen at Catalina, the sea monster measuring over eight feet in length and weighing 141 pounds.

The big marlinspike fish leaped from the water fifty-eight times in its effort to free itself from the line, and two hours of the hardest fighting of the season was seen before the fish was brought to gaff.

Murphy holds the tarpon record of Aransas Pass, the great silver tarpon which he caught on light tackle in June weighed 156 pounds, and measured 6 feet 6 inches. The scales of this beautiful fish, gleaming with silver, are cherished souvenirs of the wonderful catch, and a number of them have been sent through the mail to his friends, like postal cards.

Last night W. Greer Campbell of Pasadena brought in the first tuna from Clemente, and it tipped the scales at 140 pounds, a beautiful specimen. It is said that the tunas are off Clemente now, and when Gifford Pinchot reaches there next Tuesday he may have the pleasure of catching one of these famous fighting fish.

The second minor to be admitted to the Tuna Club is George E. Pillsbury of Los Angeles, who has caught two of the tunas weighing over 100 pounds, one tipping the scales at 104¼ pounds, and the other at 126 pounds.

The power of a tuna to draw men from all quarters of the globe was shown yesterday, when a telegram came to the Tuna Club from A. W. Hooper of Boston, Mass., saying he would reach Catalina next Thursday. Hooper passed the early part of the season on the island, and fished assiduously. He had been gone about a week when the news of the first tuna electrified the fishing world. Now he is obeying Horace Greeley's advice to young men, and is coming West as fast as possible.

The sight of a life-time may be seen just now at the fish-mounting quarters in Avalon, where twenty-two tunas, all over the 100-pound limit, are hanging on the walls. The splendid symmetry of this ocean monarch, with its blue back and silver under parts is perfectly preserved, and makes one realize the might of the fish in its native element.

Among the fish recently mounted is an exquisite variety of Canadian salmon. The angler had an Indian skin the fish, wrapped it in a cloth, and brought it in his trunk to Avalon.

HOOKIN' 'EM.

FAIR ANGLER TAKES TROUT.

MISS MERSCH CATCHES RECORD-BREAKER FOR WOMAN.

Bear Lake Dam Scene of Good Sport for Many Los Angeles Fishermen—Councilman Blanchard a Frequent Visitor—Helgamite Proves the Best Bait When Obtainable.

Miss Clare Mersch, of Los Angeles, with 28-inch salmon trout caught off Bear Lake dam.

Miss Clare Mersch, formerly actress in the Burbank Stock Company, has proven herself a Lady Walton among the trout fishers at Bear Lake, and last Monday hooked a twenty-eight-inch salmon trout off the dam the big fish weighing five and a quarter pounds. The trout is the largest fish ever known to be taken from Bear Lake by a woman, and is one of the largest caught this season.

Bear Creek below the Bear Lake dam is conceded to be the most inaccessible trout stream in Southern California, and has also been the fishing ground for the popular Angeleño, and in frequent trips to the creek Miss Mersch has never failed to bring home a nice mess. Helgamite is the favorite bait of the actress angler. One of these shrimp-like bugs securely spiked on the hook is apparently an unfailing lure to lake trout, and in skillfully bringing the fish to gaff Miss Mersch has shown remarkable agility.

Helgamites, like gold nuggets, are sought by all but found by few. Hiding under rocks and rotten logs in from three to six inches of water, these prize bugs are to be found with great difficulty. The insects are exceedingly quick and dart into deep water at any disturbance. But once secured the brown bug is the bait de luxe for lake trout, and is the barometer of fishing. If Mr. Helgamite remains undisturbed on the hook the trout are not within "striking" distance, for any fish within range is attracted to the bug like iron shavings to a magnet

Lake fishing at Bear Valley has continued unusually good this season, and in the early mornings and evenings close to the "limit" hour before sunrise and after sunset, the salmon beauties have been taking the hook greedily. Fish averaging fifteen to twenty-five inches have been taken daily from the dam, and campers from many points of the mountains have tried their luck with success. The sport waned somewhat during the rise of the moon, when the fish fed at night, and kept away from the bait during the day.

Councilman Blanchard of Los Angeles is one of the enthusiastic trout devotees at Bear Lake, and has sought the dam frequently with varying success. Blanchard has also tried trolling with a spoon bait from his launch, and took one three-pound trout in this manner recently. J. H. Morrison of Redlands has fished a good deal from his canoe and has caught several beauties around the roots of the rice plant.

At present the lake trout are not as gamey as earlier in the season. The water is several degrees warmer than it was at the opening of the season, and the fish have become soft and are not as active and aggressive.

DOW DEMOUNTABLE RIM.

Chanslor and Lyon Have Novel Locking Device for Which Many Claims Are Made.

The new Dow demountable rim manufactured by the Hartford Rubber Works Company, is being demonstrated by the Chanslor & Lyon Motor Supply Company.

The felloe of the wheel is fitted with a steel band which has eight wedge-shaped blocks riveted to it. The rim proper also has eight wedge-shaped blocks which counteract with the eight on the felloe.

The locking device on the rim is attached to the rim and gear on the side of the rim which sets into the gear, and which works on an eccentric gear. There are only two moves to be made with one tool to take the rim completely off the wheel.

RESUME.

LOCAL SHOTS SCORE HIGH.

STATE RIFLE TEAM MAKE EXCELLENT SHOWING.

Matched Against Representatives of Fifty States, California's Men Shoot Their Way to Honors—Must Now Compete in Highest Class With Strongest Teams in Country.

The California State rifle team landed fifteenth place in the national match at Camp Perry. The 1908 team landed nineteenth place, and the results this year show a considerable pull-up in form for the California boys, as the other teams had all improved considerably during the past year.

Nearly fifty teams entered the match, and the California boys beat out thirty other States and Territories in the great match. The match this year was shot by classes, the fifty teams of last year being divided into class A, B and C, Class A consisting of the first fifteen teams in last year's match, Class B in the second fifteen teams, and Class C of the remaining teams and such other teams as have not entered the match before.

Under the present arrangement, any team can win a prize in a class ahead of it, providing it can shoot well enough to land the place, but the teams in the higher classes are prevented from winning prizes in a lower class. For example, had the California boys landed fourth place in the national match instead of fifteenth, they would have taken the fourth prize in Class A instead of a prize in the lower class. As it was, the team landed fourth prize in Class B—in which they were classified from their last year's showing, but they shot themselves into Class A and in the future will have to try for the prizes in this higher class.

The Californians, had they taken sixteenth place, would have gone into Class B, with a chance for the prizes of this class, but having won the fifteenth place, only the Class A prizes are open to them for the next year, and they must shoot against teams like the U. S. Infantry, the Navy, the Marine Corps and Massachusetts to land in the money.

The skirmishing of the California men is higher than any team skirmish on record up to the time of the Camp Perry shoots this year. The team averaged over 90 per cent. on the "B" target used, and the fine run of the westerners pulled them up from twenty-third place to fifteenth.

In the team shoot, the conditions were ten shots per man at 200, 600, 800 and 1000 yards, ten shots rapid fire at 200 yards and a twenty-shot skirmish run from 600 down to 200 yards, possible score to make 350 points. The scores were:

CENTURY PAST AND PRESENT.

UR minds are turned to the century which is now open before us with expectations of great achievements. Those born in these first years of the cen who live until well toward its close will see mar changes in the world. Things not dreamed of come to pass, and new discoveries in mechanics science now struggling to survive will grow in im nce to a development not anticipated.

t raise our expectations as high as we please in anticipation for the new era, we must not forget great things must be done if the twentieth cen is to surpass in change, improvement and develop the record of the nineteenth. And in reflecting hat was achieved in that period, we must not for he impetus given it from the century preceding it. hemical discoveries of the eighteenth century were erunners of much that came to pass in the nine h. To them let us add the influence in politics and of the American and French revolutions, and we see the springs that worked the forces of the last ry.

k at what was accomplished in the world be the years 1800 and 1900. First, we have the ac ion of the French possessions in America by the d States, giving us the heart of the continent in h to work out our destiny without interruption. the admission of Texas and the ceding of New o, Arizona and California, our country became an e in which the problem of popular government be perfectly solved. A year after we purchased rench possessions, Lewis and Clarke explored the west, and later Oregon and Washington came 1815 the battle of Waterloo freed Europe from the shadow of the insatiable ambition of the first eon. Not important changes were made from time e on the map of Europe, and indecisive wars were . In 1848 the thrones of that continent all were shaken, but did not crumble in decay. The Crimean war was one of the indecisive struggles except in a negative sense. It held Russia back from the expansion the country might have had if allowed to secure an outlet to the sea.

The unification of Germany was an event of the greatest importance. It has been followed by a development industrially and commercially of the greatest significance. With an important overland commerce, Germany has found it necessary to build a great navy which aims to match that of Great Britain, which, since the destruction of the Spanish fleet called the Armada, has claimed the sovereignty of the seas.

In our own country we have gone through our Civil War, wiping human slavery out of existence. We have also freed Cuba and acquired a foothold in the West Indies, another in the Pacific by the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands, and a third in the Philippines. With these steps we have become a world power whose decisions weigh heavily in the settlement of international affairs.

Last in the way of important wars we have the new birth of Japan following the victory of that island empire over China, and the still more decisive victory over Russia.

With these events we have a new coalition of the great powers of the earth in an alliance between Great Britain and Japan, another between Great Britain, France and Russia, this last forcing Germany and Austria into a close compact, with Italy rather loosely bound to these two powers. The United States stands aloof in the position of arbiter of the affairs of the world. The general tendency of all this is to make international wars difficult, and will be to create a way of settling international disputes otherwise than by an appeal to arms.

In the same direction we have warships which cost $10,000,000 to build, guns which cost $55,000 to cast, fleets from which a broadside would cost from $100,000 to $500,000. To mobilize an army for war would cost a modern nation $50,000,000 to $100,000,000, and each day the war lasted would cost $1,000,000 to $2,000,000. A conflict at sea between two great powers might mean in a few hours a total destruction of property which had cost $300,000,000. In the face of these facts will there be another great war? Perhaps. But it will not be set in motion by any trifle.

Turn to the peaceful vocations of men and the past century gave us the steamship, the railroad, the telegraph and the telephone. There may be improvements to make in each of these great instrumentalities on whose use the progress of the century so much rested. But they are all nearly enough perfect to be forever attributed to the era known as the nineteenth century.

That period also gave the world the vast output of gold from Australia, California and Africa, which has poured into the lap of our material industries motive power for business greater than our forefathers had from the day the first bit of metal passed from hand to hand as a medium of exchange. One result has been the establishment of gold as the standard of value between all the nations of the world. The effect of this in commerce is beyond all estimation.

Intellectually the past century has done its share of the world's work, and has set a record not easy to surpass. This year 1909 we have been celebrating the birth of Mendelssohn, Chopin, Darwin, Cyrus McCormick, Poe, Tennyson, Fitzgerald, Holmes, Kinglake, Lincoln and Gladstone. Those were the births of one year early in the nineteenth century. Working side by side with these we had Spencer, Emerson, Miss Evans (George Eliot,) Matthew Arnold, Mill, Browning, Carlyle. To these we might add Webster, Clay, Whittier, Longfellow, Swinburne, and dozens of others, Lyell, Tyndall, Huxley, Hallam. All these are English-speaking, and to these might be added the names of others writing in many languages. The whole would constitute a glorious army of students, a goodly fellowship of thinkers, whose influence on their century goes on in this and will be fruitful for many long eras yet to come.

Time will not permit to lengthen out the list or to dwell in detail on the achievements of these separately or in the mass. By the side of the reaper we might place the sewing machine, by the steamship the power loom, by the railroad the automobile. So we might make this sketch a large volume and not exhaust the story of the century. We merely desire to impress on the young men of the day the work cut out for them by their fathers and grandfathers.

The Anxious Parent.

"See here, young man," said the stern parent as he entered the parlor, "you have been calling on my daughter rather frequently of late. Are your intentions serious?"

"They certainly are, sir," answered the young man. "I'm trying to induce her to exchange $300 and her old piano for a new one."—[Chicago News.

The Hour of Peace

By Wilbur D. Nesbit

The day goeth away, for the shadows of the evening are stretched out.—[Jeremiah vi, 4.

Now fall the brazen bonds of toil
From wearied limbs
That through the day our labors spoil;
The blue sky dims
To undertones of softened gray
With purple mists that die away
When slowly, slowly from the west
Drift on the shadows bringing rest—
And this is best.

The echoed trumpet call of dawn
Is stilled at last;
The endless hours that bore us on
Are in the past;
Day's prison gates swing in release
And we are in the land of peace,
Far from the ever-driven throng;
And faintly sweet and softly strong
There comes a song.

There comes a song—a blended croon
Of soothing strains
Caught from the morn and afternoon
In drowsy lanes
And meadow lands far, far away;
In forests where the shadows play,
From rivers where the ripples dart,
A song that heals in every part
The weary heart.

And out and over all the lands
The shadows drift,
As though from gracious, blessing hands
That freely lift
And drop their grace upon our heads—
A grace that in the twilight sheds
Heartsease and soul peace to us all;
And lullaby and slumber call
Now softly fall.

So come the legions of the stars,
And we forget
The pain of all day's battle scars,
For they are set
As promises through all the years—
And now the soul contented hears
The gentle footsteps of the night
Come swift and sure and wondrous light
Upon the height.

Changed Farm Life.

The dull silence that hung over that New England dinner table has been lifted of late. It is gone like the dew in the sunlight of the new social influences. The isolation of the farm was the chilling cause that drove men into the cities. Now, by telephone and free mail delivery, all the warm world currents are being carried to the country and are vitalizing the rural community into a life that is rich and abundant in the variety of its interests. A real heart hunger has been answered. Over hill and down dale flashes the impulse that electrifies existence with the thrill of human life touching other human life.—[Delineator.

A Lack of Confidence.

A minister, frequently away from home, was in the habit of getting some one to stay with his wife and small daughter in his absence. Once, however, he went so unexpectedly and hurriedly that he had no time to make such provision for them. The wife was very brave until night came, when her courage began to fail. After exhausting every reasonable excuse for staying up, she put the child to bed with the injunction to pray especially for God's protection during father's absence. "Yes, mother, we will do that tonight," said the little girl, "but the next time we will make better arrangements."—[Delineator.

The New Peking. By Frank G. Carpenter.

THE OLD CHINESE CAPITAL.

HOW IT IS CHANGING WITH THE MODERN CIVILIZATION.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PEKING, 1909.—Come with me this bright Sunday morning and take a look at the new capital of the new Chinese empire. We are in the ganglionic nerve center of one of the greatest movements of history. Old China, with its vast population of one-fourth of the whole human race, is being reborn, and Peking is throbbing with the young blood of the new civilization. From it are trickling the streams which are starting these mighty provinces into action. They are daily increasing in volume, and promise to form a tidal wave which will engulf the whole world. Peking is the fountain of the revolution, and it is already spouting sky-high.

Let us sit in its spray with the steam whistle of the railway cars dinning our ears, and the new electric plant turning the silvery drops into diamonds, while we think of the past and try to realize where we are. We shall have to shut our eyes and turn our minds back into the ages. We are on a spot where men were living under a municipal government five centuries before Romulus and Remus were sucking at the teats of the wolf to grow up and found Rome. There was a town here when the great pyramid was building and when the Israelites worked under their taskmasters in the valley of the Nile. That town fell into ruins and was rebuilt and destroyed again. Eleven hundred and twenty years before Christ, its place was taken by the city of Chi; and, during the days of Nebuchadnezzar, it was the capital of the state of Yen. At the time of the crusade it was the chief city of the Kin Tartars, and today vestiges of the Kins are still to be seen.

The Walls of Peking.

The walls of Peking! What a wonder they are! Those which now surround the city were constructed by an Emperor who reigned seventy-three years before Columbus tried to find a new way to China and discovered our world. There are about twenty-five miles of them; and they are so high that they can be seen for a long distance outside Peking. They are as tall as a four-story house and as wide at the top as a country road. You could drive wagonloads of hay abreast upon their tops without crowding, and, throughout, they are as solid as stone. They consist of two walls, of gray bricks of twenty or thirty pounds each, laid in mortar, which has outlasted the centuries. These two walls are parallel, and within them has been packed a mass of stone and earth, which the ages have cemented to granite.

These walls were first erected almost 500 years ago. They have been kept in good order from that time to this, and the Chinese are repairing them today. While they were building their electric-light plant and laying the tracks for their railroads, they reërected the great gate of Chien Men, which was badly injured at the time of the siege. Right next the station, this massive structure of red, blue and gold has gone up, and it now forms a part of the old wall. It is of brick and wood beautifully carved, its roofs being upheld by many red pillars. It cost, I am told, $500,000 in gold. It is on the lines of the wall, and in perfect harmony with it. It shows how the old and the new are going along hand in hand.

Peking in 1909.

But come with me to the top of the wall and take a look at Peking as it lies out here on the northern edge of the Great Plain of China in this year of our Lord, 1909. Those hills at the back fade away into the mountains of Mongolia, and the level lands in front stretch on and on to the Yellow River, and thence down to the Yang-tse-Kiang. We can see villages here and there spotting the landscape. The country is swarming with people and there are tens of millions within a day's ride by train. The soil surrounding us is some of the best in the world, and for ages it has suported a vast population.

Now drop your eyes to the city itself. These walls divide it into two great divisions, forming two separate cities. The one at the north is a mighty rectangle, perhaps thirteen miles round. It contain the Tartar city, in which are the great government builidngs, the foreign legations and also the Forbidden City, where, surrounded by thousands of eunuchs, the Emperor lives. You can make out his home by following the lines of those temple-like gates which rise high over the walls which surround it. His palaces are huge one-story structures with throne rooms and other great halls. The roofs are of yellow tiles, a color which is reserved for His Majesty alone.

No one but the Emperor and his household and princes, and still farther out is the vast coll

A large proportion of this city is Manchu.

The other city, on the south of the wall, is know the Chinese city. This has the chief business of Peking. It has thousands of stores and the Chinese banks. It is the place in which the most of commercial business is done, although there are shops in the Tartar city as well.

Looking over the Chinese city, as we stand on wall, we can see some great temples with circular of blue tile at its extreme southern end. Those on left belong to the Temple of Heaven, where, on a circular altar of the purest white marble, the Emp kneels and prays for his people. The little baby arch is too young to kneel now, and until he grows ger, the nation will be prayed for by proxy.

Just opposite the Temple of Heaven, on the oth of the wide roadway, is the Temple of Agri

tion, and away up at the north, outside the wall

The Legation City.

Now, let us look at foreign Peking. It lies ri on his way to his prayers at the Temple of and the northwest corner of it adjoins the imperi itself. By all rights, it should be the most property in Peking, and the ground upon which it is worth millions. This city is, I judge, about mile long and perhaps two-thirds as wide. It is on the south by the great structure which Yung L

The whole is more like an armed camp than a city, and the ministers live like feudal lords in their castles, with their retainers about them.

The legation city is divided up by wide streets. It is lighted by electricity and is kept as clean as a pin. It represents the great world outside China, and is one of the most striking parts of the Peking of 1909.

An Orderly City.

I knew the old Peking well. I visited it when President Cleveland was still in his first term at the White House, and I saw it again just before the Japan-China war. At those times the streets were crowded; there was no order whatever, and a stranger could hardly make his way through. The streets were the sewers. They were wide, miry and unpaved; and I saw Chinese carts which were so stuck in the mud that the silk-gowned mandarins within them had to be carried out on the backs of coolies before they could reach solid ground.

Today Peking is as well policed as New York and Chicago. The street traffic is better managed, and the vast mass of yellow humanity is handled with but little exhibition of force and with little noise. The chief streets have policemen in the middle of the roadway at every few feet, and the endless streams of almond-eyed mortals, which are always moving this way and that, are not allowed to flow out of their proper courses. Maintaining such order is far more difficult than in America, for the traffic is much more diverse. It is composed of every sort of vehicle, from the wheelbarrow, hauled by a donkey and pushed by a man, to the carriage with coachman and footman in livery and retainers on horseback in front and behind. It comprises hundreds of donkeys and ponies loaded with goods; caravans of camels, ridden by red-faced Mongolians, or led along single file by ropes fastened to sticks thrust through the thick flesh of the animal's nose. There are jinrikshas without number, which have come here since the Boxer rebellion, and there are men and women dressed in silks and cottons on foot. The people are from all parts of the Chinese empire. Half of them cannot understand the language of the others, but nevertheless these policemen keep perfect order, with their broomstick-like clubs.

The New Streets of Peking.

Within the past five years, the streets of Peking have been remade. The main avenues have been divided up into sidewalks and roadways. Granite gutters now run along on each side the main streets, and trees have been planted throughout the whole city. The roadways have been leveled and built up with macadam, so that they are as solid as those of any street in Japan. The material used was stone broken by hand into bits of various sizes. A deep roadbed was dug and the larger pieces fitted in like mosaic. Then the smaller bits were laid together in the same way on top, layer after layer being placed until the right level was reached. A steam roller then crushed the stones fine and the roads thus made are perfectly firm.

The Peking streets are clean. When I was last here they were covered with filth. The city had no sanitary conveniences and one had to pick his way everywhere. The streets were not watered, and in the summer the dust frequently obscured the town like a fog. Today Peking is putting in waterworks, and pending their creation, is sprinkled by men who fetch the water in tubs from wells to the center of each block and then spread it over the roads with dippers of basket work, to which are attached long wooden handles. This watering goes on summer and winter, and the dust is well laid.

The pipes of the new waterworks are now on the ground, and they will have been laid before this letter is published. They will go first through the main streets, and thence be extended to the side streets and houses. The water from a river nine miles away will be raised to a tower inside the Chinese city and will be distributed by gravity. The new Peking has many artesian wells. At 200 feet an inexhaustible supply of good water is reached, and many of the larger buildings, including some of the palaces of the imperial city, now have plants of their own.

Electricity in Peking.

Modern Peking has its telegraphs and telephones. Every official and prominent business man now has his own phone. The service is under the government board of communications, and I understand it is good. A few years ago, the city had no street lamps, but candles placed inside a wooden framework backed with white paper. It was impossible to walk the streets after dark without a servant and lantern, and the night life of the people was confined to their homes. At that time a story was current in the foreign quarters that the government appropriated $80,000 a year for lighting the city, and that this sum was distributed as follows: The official in charge of the matter took $40,000 as his squeeze, and the other $40,000 was handed over to his chief lieutenant, who pocketed $20,000 and gave the balance to a third man, who made a similar division. The distribution went on until the sum was at last reduced to a few copper cash, which were given to coolies to buy oil and wicks to be placed in saucer-like lamps. They set the lamps on the streets, where the beggars drank up the oil, and that was the end of the light appropriation. However this may be, no real light was furnished until the new Peking was created. Today the city looks most beautiful at night. Its long, wide streets shine with incandescent globes. There are thousands of lights about the gates of the palaces and on those which go through the walls. There are many street lamps, and one can find his way anywhere at any hour of the evening. The new electric-light plant stands close to the wall of the Tartar city, and its smokestack is visible for miles over the country. In addition there is a plant which lights the palace, and for obvious reasons the legation city has a plant of its own.

The New Government Buildings.

The Chinese government is just beginning to erect office structures in accord with the new civilization. It has already built many schools of modern architecture; and it has just completed a large office building for the Wai Wu Pu, or the board of foreign affairs. This is the best office building I have seen in Eastern Asia, and is by far the finest of the Chinese capital. It is right next to the old Tsung Li Yamen, on the ground where stood the old mint which was established forty-two years before our world was discovered and which was coining money for the government up until the year 1900.

The new building and its grounds cover seven acres; and the building itself one-fourth of an acre, not including the large offices for clerks at the back. The Wai Wu Pu is a great structure of two stories, built of gray bricks. Its architecture is entirely foreign and is remarkable for its massive simplicity and beauty. Indeed, it would be an ornament among the public buildings of Washington or London.

The Wai Wu Pu is heated by steam, lighted by electricity, and has all modern sanitary conveniences. There are a number of rooms for entertaining, including large reception halls and a dining-room which will seat 500 guests. The dining-room has a stage for theatrical entertainments, and it is lighted by 700 electric globes, hidden from view in a groove round the ceiling. The building is beautifully finished, the mantles and all its woodwork having been made in China. Much of the wood is of Oregon pine, but most of the other materials, including the steel construction, are from England and Germany. The structure cost 400,000 taels, and it could not be built in the United States for twice that many dollars.

The architect is C. D. Jameson, a well-known American civil engineer. He has been connected with the Chinese Foreign Office as its architectural engineer for a number of years. It was he who put the electric-light plant in the palaces of the Emperor, and he has also made some most beautiful additions to the summer palaces outside Peking. Mr. Jameson comes from Bangor, Me. He was for a time a professor of engineering at the Boston School of Technology and, later on, was connected in a similar capacity with the Iowa State University. He came out to China about thirteen years ago, and since then has done much engineering and architectural work here.

A Proposed Parliament Building.

The Wai Wu Pu is one of a large series of buildings which China is to erect in the not distant future. With the adoption of the new civilization, buildings of many kinds will have to be created for the legislative, judicial and executive machinery necessary to carry on its various departments. This is the biggest nation on the face of the globe, and it will eventually have an army of clerks and officials. Within eight years from now, China is to have a parliament of its own and the officials are already thinking of how this can be accommodated. One idea is that the plans should be made out on a broad scale, the erection of government departments and the parliament buildings running through a series of years, and eventually forming one architectural and artistic whole. It might be well to have the new capitol the center, and the others grouped around it, a large space on the edge of the city being set aside for that purpose. According to some sketches already made, the Parliament houses may cost about $7,000,000 in gold. This would be just $1,000,000 more than the cost of our National Library at Washington; and with Chinese cheap labor, it would mean structures equal to any that could be constructed for $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 in the United States.

Flag Pole 165 Feet High.

When Hans Frederick Jorgensen, the rigger of the Park Department for the last twenty-four years, learned that the steel mast of the cup defender Constitution could be purchased for $600 he went to Park Commissioner Henry Smith and obtained his consent to buy it and erect it as a flag pole in Battery Park, in place of the old liberty pole.

It was something of a job to get the pole into position. It was set on a steel base imbedded in concrete. On top of the pole is a weather vane and gilded ball.

The pole is the highest in the United States, if not in the world. The length of the main pole is 100 feet, diameter at the foot, 22 1-3 inches and at the top, 14½ inches. The topmast is 56 feet in length, diameter at the foot 12 inches, and at top 3½ inches. This makes the entire height of the pole 165 feet and the estimated weight 5800 pounds. It is made of steel.

The flag flown from this pole in ordinary weather is 40 by 60 feet, each stripe being a yard wide. The flag can be seen from the narrows, as well as from places along the Jersey and the Brooklyn shore. On squally days a much smaller flag is run up.

The Park Department is considering the question of whether or not to erect a cross-tree at the junction of the main pole and the topmast.—[New York Sun.

Sir Babington Smith.

OFFICIAL WHO WILL REORGANIZE TURKEY'S FINANCES.

From a Special Correspondent.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—By the establishment of a national bank, Turkey has taken a decisive step toward reform and order which all Europe is watching with interest, and England with the keenest interest of all, for the bank has been floated chiefly with English capital and its president appointed "at the request of His Majesty's government" in the person of Sir Henry Babington Smith, who will resign his present appointment of secretary to the postoffice and proceed to Constantinople next month to take up his new duties.

Until now, the Ottoman government has been at the mercy of two foreign banks, the Ottoman Bank and the Deutsche Bank, and whenever Turked goes into pecuniary difficulies, and found herself without the wherewithal to pay overdue salaries to government officials or the troops were on the verge of mutiny without their money—a not at all infrequent occurrence—she hurried off to one or the other of these concerns and humbly begged a loan to pacify her creditors. Needless to say, they took advantage of the position, and imposed such onerous burdens on the debtor, that she was generally in a state of chronic financial "sickness."

SIR H. BABINGTON SMITH.

Now, however, Turkey is regenerating her system of government, and henceforth will have a regular budget, so such a state of affairs will no longer be necessary, and the national bank, as soon as it gets into working order, will perform those financial transactions which the two foreign concerns formerly carried out.

As soon as the idea of such a national bank was mentioned, not a few European governments hastened to assure Turkey that the financiers of their respective nationalities were much the best people to find the necessary capital, but British interests have been slowly gaining ground in Turkey, and early this year, Sir Ernest Cassel went over to Constantinople to confer with the Turkish Foreign Minister in regard to the formation of the bank, and as a result final statutes for such an object were drawn up and approved by the Porte. The appointment of Sir Henry Babington Smith as president is the last step necessary to set the concern going.

It will not be Sir Henry's first experience of Turkey. Before his appointment as secretary to the postoffice, he was British representative on the council of the Ottoman public debt for three years, and the experience gained during that time will doubtless prove of great value to him in his present position. Besides that, he has served in many parts of the world in the British Civil Service.

After an education at Eton and Cambridge University, where he took several honors, he began his public life as examiner in the education department, afterward becoming private secretary to Mr. (afterward Lord) Goschen when Chancellor of the Exchequer. In 1894 he went to India as secretary to the then Viceroy, Lord Elgin, for five years, and in 1899 was sent to Natal on a financial mission.

He became a Knight Commander of the Bath in 1908, and he also has the Turkish order, First-class Osmanieh. He is 46 years old and is a tall, broad-shouldered, youthful-looking man with a brown mustache and brown eyes under a clever overhanging brow. His wife comes of diplomatic stock also, being the daughter of Lord Elgin. He married her in 1898 while holding the post of secretary to her father in India

Taking the 13th Census.

HUGE ARMY OF INQUIRERS WILL SOON SWEEP THE COUNTRY.

UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT AND WITH NEW MACHINERY, THE CENSUS BUREAU IS ABOUT TO TACKLE THE BIG JOB OF TAKING THE DECENNIAL SNAP-SHOT OF THE UNITED STATES.

By a Special Contributor.

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS of inhabitants! Such is the advance estimate made by the Census Bureau of the population of the United States in 1910.

To count them, and reckon up their manifold activities—giving, as a properly-taken census must, a complete picture of the people and their doings—will be an enormous task. There will be 330 supervisors, appointed by the President, to look after as many geographical districts, and in Washington alone at least 3000 additional clerks will be employed.

These clerks, three-fourths of them women, will be

Thus it appears that, whereas in the early days of the republic there was a very large proportion of young persons, at present the percentage of children in the population is comparatively small. In view of which facts, it is easy to understand the statement of the late Carroll D. Wright, that the artificial limiting of families was the cause of a greater loss of population than war, pestilence, and all other agencies combined.

Nevertheless, a baby is born every twelve seconds, and, thanks to this fact, about 2,500,000 fresh citizens will be added to our population in the census year 1910. The passing bell will toll every twenty-three seconds, ushering 1,350,000 Americans out of the world during the twelvemonth. Every twenty-four seconds a marriage will occur, giving expectation of filled cradles, and five of these latter will be supplied with occupants every minute during the year.

So huge has the population grown that the taking of the census of 1910 would be a job nothing short of appalling, were it not for the recent introduction of machinery into the business. It is reckoned that the mere tabulation of the sex, age, nativity, and occupations of

It will be understood, then, that all the

there are of each age; how many are white, of mixed blood; how many carpenters, undertakers

To do all this by hand would be a vastly and almost interminable job. But the machines appointed through the Civil Service Commission, which will hold examinations for the purpose before long in every State and Territory. Any person, male or female, who is not afflicted with tuberculosis, will be considered eligible. As a matter of course, there will be a tremendous scramble for the jobs, which pay from $600 to $1000 per annum.

When the first census of this country was taken, in 1790, the work was done by 650 employés. To gather and put together the data of the census of 1910 will require the services of an army of nearly 70,000 men and women—a number much greater than the entire population of New York and Boston combined at the time of the taking of the first census.

If one were to put side by side the figures of the census of 1790 and 1910 (as the latter will present themselves when assembled,) the most striking single fact shown by the comparison would be the disappearance of the children. A century ago, one-half the population of the United States consisted of boys and girls under 16 years of age. Today the proportion is only one-third.

The reason for this fact is that people bring fewer children into the world nowadays. If the average family in this country today were as prolific as in 1800, there would be 16,000,000 more children in the United States than are actually living. In 1790, there were in this country 780 persons over 20 years of age for every 1000 girls and boys under 16. Today there are 1600 such adults for every 1000 children.

the people, if made by hand, would consume, for those four items alone, the entire time of 100 clerks for eight years. But most of the work is now done by machines which may almost be said to think, and which, when the facts are once gathered by the enumerators, attend to the task of putting them together.

The Census Bureau is buying a large number of machines of entirely new patterns, which are a great improvement on any apparatus of the kind hitherto known. They are run by electricity, and so perfect is their operation that, if the clerk makes a mistake, the contrivance stops automatically. The tabulating machine will handle as many as 415 cards a minute; but the average speed in actual work is about 350. This is an average of 80,000 or 90,000 cards in a working day of seven hours, including stoppages for reading dials, etc.

As the census returns come in from the enumerators all over the country, in the shape of filled-in blanks, the facts they contain will be transferred to cards—each card representing one person. The facts in question are copied on the cards by punching holes; and the position of each hole indicates its significance, so that no writing is required. Thus, for example, a few holes will tell that the individual represented by a card is white, of male sex, 45 years old, married, a teacher by profession, able to read, write, and speak English—with the additional information that he was born in England, that he has been in the United States ten years, that he is a naturalized citizen, and that he resides in the eighth ward, Albany, N. Y.

The enumerators employed to gather the census of 1910 from all parts of the country work for the last census very efficiently; but it is too rough, not infrequently involving hardship of one kind or another. The busin majority of them young.

Experience has shown that women are

The greatest difficulty is to curtail their chatter. Yet in the long run they make better clerks than the men."

The Census Bureau is now a permanent establishment in Washington. It is kept running, with a comparatively small force of clerks, all the time—whereas it used to go out of existence after each enumeration of the population was accomplished, springing up anew and suddenly every ten years, like a gigantic mushroom. As things are at present arranged, however, the plant is always in existence on a small scale. There is a skeleton organization, so to speak, and this is readily expanded, when the occasion arrives, into a huge and effective machine for the gathering of facts. Such an expansion is now beginning to take place, and within a short time the machine will be in full operation for the taking of the thirteenth census of the United States.

MOUNTAIN AND MAN.

The Mountain was there first. It had been there long, long before the Man appeared. It would remain there long, long after the Man had passed on. The Mountain was, therefore, much wiser than the Man, for it knew these things. Nevertheless, the Mountain feared the Man. He had powers which the Mountain had not.

The Man came and stood before the Mountain at its base. The Mountain trembled ever so slightly, for it felt the thrill of life reflected from the Man's mind.

The Man thought: "Mountain, how great you are—would that I had your strength. With it I might conquer the world."

The Mountain, in the silence of its great heart, replied: "Man, I am merely a reflection of strength. Within my true self, I am weak. I am inanimate and I fear all life. Upon my jagged side the beast makes sport or hides himself, as suits his choice.

"The snake and his kin abound on my flat, sunbaked surfaces and make homes within my crevices.

"The scavengers of the air alight upon my crest and there make feast upon their prey. To this insult they add still more—their nests they build in my inaccessible parts and hatch their filthy young.

"The tempest hurls itself at me with all its fury as if I stood within its path. It tears away great portions of my side and carries them to the level plain, by water's aid.

"And you, Man, come with your tools made from the product of my rocks and tunnel far into my heart in search of wealth. You haul me down and place me where you will. You show even less mercy than the beast, the reptile, the buzzard or the tempest.

"Think you, Man, I would submit to all this could I assist myself? Am I strong, or but the reflection of strength?"

The Man thought well, and gave answer: "All that you say is true, and yet you are here. Yesterday I came—today I am here—tomorrow I will be gone, but you remain. By your presence, I have been enabled to live.

"To you I come to find the beast and slay him to feed upon his flesh.

"The water and the tempest carry you down to enrich the plain whereon I grow my food and build my home. My forefathers came to you for this same aid and my children will likewise come. You will be here to mete out to them their share of your great generous self.

"Your mission is to serve the helpless creatures of the world and give them the things they need. Your head is reared proudly in the sky, and it need never be bowed, for you can well glory in your work.

"I am proud of you, Mountain, and I come to commune with you. I have come before, and I will come again. You are inspiring. In these communions with you, I obtain strength to continue the fight. You are poorly paid for your services. I can but thank you and return for more. Your recompense must be the joy of giving, of helping those who need it."

The Mountain listened and believed the Man. His words renewed its broken spirit and helped make its burden lighter.

And thus the Mountain and the Man were of assistance to each other and they parted friends, for the Man passed on, but the Mountain remained.

Late Summer Musings.

THE HOTEL CLERK ON OUR LANDED GENTRY.

By a Special Contributor.

"WELL," said the Hotel Clerk of the St. Reckless, "she's about over."

"Meanin', I s'pose, summer," said the House Detective.

"Summer it is," said the Hotel Clerk. "We've got our last rose out of summer and she's got her last rise out of us, or will do so on next Monday, the same being Labor Day, when the workingman will take a day off and rest up, by walking twice as far in a parade as he would if he were doing his little eight union hours, meanwhile carrying on his brawny shoulder a transparency that weighs about three times as much as a hod.

"And all next week the vacation hordes will be pouring back to town from the mountain and the seashore tanned and freckled and broke; and some of them will rally rapidly and be their own selves again in a short time, but it will take months for the others to recover from the heartbreaking, nerve-exhausting strain of enjoying themselves. Yes, sir, summer with her record high temperature, its record high tariff, and her record high prices, is about to pass into history, and I hope history gets more out of her than we did. The summer Chautauquas are closing and the summer Chatalkers who went to 'em and talked, are also closing. The fellow who went to the mountains to get shut of the hay fever and the fellow who went to the same place and caught it are on their way back together swapping symptoms and pocket handkerchiefs. The summer hotel will soon be deserted of all except its regular winter residents—the night watchman and the cockroach. The fishing line and the lawn tennis pants will cuddle up together for a long rest in the bottom tray of the trunk, and the haunting intangible witchery of the camphor ball will fill the September air as the first fall overcoat comes out of the closet and chases the last straw hat into winter quarters.

"Our main street will regain its wonted air of gaiety and life. The sidewalks will be filled again with actors and authors, pugilists and pikers, battle axes and battle actresses, play, song and sheet writers, and all the known varieties of agents, including press, wine and road. The fall crop of new plays will be coming on and going right off again. The new playwright who thought he was about to be discovered will read the papers on the morning after his first night and learn that he has not been discovered, but only exposed. The devotees of fashion, brave women and fair men, all, or nearly all, will once more be seen in our midst, and many a noble country estate will be given over to the caretaker for the long silent months while the landed gentry of our country, may heaven bless them, will come back to their town houses and stay there almost fifteen minutes before going elsewhere."

"Wot makes you say heaven bless them guys?" asked the House Detective with a trace of bitterness in his tone.

"Because they deserve it," said the Hotel Clerk. "If it wasn't for them where would the masses turn for entertainment? With seats at the theater selling for one-fifty and up and the lad at the box office telling you he has nothing left but the ups, the great common people would be in a bad way for a little wholesome enjoyment these times if it wasn't for the moving-picture shows, and the overworked leisure classes. I think I'd even put the latter ahead of the former because the picture shows cost you 5 cents a throw and the others perform for nothing and pay their own expenses.

"We think we're a blithe, gay people in this country, Larry, but we're not. We work so hard to have a good time that then we're too tired to have it. Some of us laugh from happiness, but more of us from hysteria. We spend half the time on the merry-go-round and the other half taking the rest cure. We've studded our fair land with chute the chutes and sanatoriums for nervous wrecks, and the only reason why so many people live to middle age is that before then they couldn't spare the time to die.

"Free shows are getting scarcer all the time. The circuses are cutting out the street parades, and public hangings have been abolished in most of the States of the Union. I really don't know what we of the lower orders would do for a little entertainment that doesn't cost anything if it wasn't for the very wealthy.

"Who is it that buy automobiles that are so high-powered they travel twenty-five miles an hour when they're standing still and break the speed limit after they've been taken apart in the repair shop? And who is it that go joyously jousting down the highway in the same, until they skid into a large immovable object, such as a brick barn, and are brought home wrapped up in a bit of newspaper? Who is it that give the monkey dinners, sometimes with an outside monkey present and sometimes with only the regular members of the set? Who build the great country estates with Scotch gamekeepers to keep the ferocious white rabbits in subjection and great houses designed by artists of the Matteawan Asylum School of Architecture? Who set the fashions in evening clothes, divorces, private yachts, new diseases and other things that would be luxuries to us but are only necessities of life to them? Who produce the young women with the kind of faces that the society writers call interesting because it would not be polite to say startling? And who are the fathers of all these young men with the thought-proof expressions and the brains that never tire because they never have anything to tire them? You know the answer without my stopping to tell you, Larry.

"Even the name that we've given them lately is good for a laugh with me every time it comes into my mind. Only the other day I was reading it—the landed-gentry class—the paper said. Think that over, Larry, my boy. You and I along with a good many others, were raised to believe that the only true landed gentry we had in this country were the kind that landed at Ellis Island and came ashore looking for a job of work. But it seems we were wrong. We now have a real landed gentry, some of whom have been owning the land in question for as long as seven or eight years.

"It's a fine thing, too, and we ought to be proud of it as a new institution. It's not every country that could produce a landed gentry in such a short space of time. Here most of us are only about two generations ahead of an ancestor who eased his coffee into himself from the saucer, yet we now have a race of superior beings in our midst who have learned to call their servants by their last names and make the native peasantry of the soil climb a tree when they come by in their touring cars. I haven't learned yet to touch my hat when one of them speaks to me, but I suppose that'll come in time. I also have a feeling that if a haughty youth of the ruling classes should address me as his good man, I'd probably take off my coat and show him I was not only a good man, but the better man of the two. But that is merely the old prejudice lingering in me. I presume I'll get over it in time.

"It'll be fine and nutritious for those new census enumerators that the President has been appointing when they start out with their little books under their arms, and their lead pencils all sharpened up. 'Name?' Jones, the census lad says to the aristocrat. 'Fitzsnob Von Squirtt,' says the other in a bored tone of voice. 'Born?' says the man from the government? 'To be sure,' says the Mr. Von Squirtt in refined surprise; 'if I hadn't been born, how else would I be here?' 'Age?' says Jones. 'I'll ask my man,' says Von Squirtt, 'he keeps track of those details for me.' 'Business?' says Jones. 'Certainly not,' says Von Squirtt, drawing himself up to his full height of five feet, one and a quarter, and tapping the end of a monogrammed cigarette on a gold cigarette case with a petulent gesture. 'I mean what do you do for a living?' says Jones. 'I don't do anything,' says Von Squirtt, pushing his handkerchief further up his left cuff as a sign of growing annoyance. 'It is all done for me. I belong, my good fellow, to the landed gentry.' 'Ah hah, I see,' says Jones in his coarse, common way. 'Any relation to Gentry's Dog Show?' and then they'll call the under footman and the second man and throw him off the terrace.

"But I'd love dearly to see the total figures on the landed-gentry class when they get the census all made up. It ought to make gratifying reading, as showing what the soil of America can do in a comparatively short space of time. It ought to fill our bosoms with pride, Larry, to know that in this country which only a few centuries ago was but a howling wilderness, and is still doing quite a little howling in spots, such as when the Elks hold a convention or Taft appoints a Democrat to office in Texas, should produce a bunch that will favorably compare with anything the older civilizations of Europe have been able to evolve, ours being just as foolish as theirs and just as useless except as I have stated, for amusement purposes, and oh, ever so much wealthier!

"Just think it over for a minute. Great-grandfather laid the foundation of the family greatness with an ax and chisel, using one to hew a fortune out of the forest primeval and the other to chisel the Indians out of anything of value which they might have. Grandfather quit bathing when the regular bathing season ended, which was early in October, believed that a bird in the hand was worth any number in the bush if the bird happened to be the kind that grew on an iron dollar, named the oldest boy Henry Clay and ate his chewing tobacco on the ear. Grandmother smoked a pipe, believed in Infant Damnation and the efficacy of herb tea in the spring of the year, and did her own work. Father got in right with the family fortunes on railroads or coal oil, and now the sons belong to the Landed Gentry of North America and have absolutely nothing on their minds, with estates stretching all the way from Palm Beach to Nova Scotia and a brain like a tube of library paste that somebody, in a careless moment, has stepped on."

"Well, it takes all kinds of people to make a world," said the House Detective.

"There's one or two kinds I could spare and never notice the loss," said the Hotel Clerk.

Shoemaker's Candles.

I well remember some seventy years since seeing flat candles in use. To produce what was known as the flat candle, which was also sometimes called "shoemaker's candle," two newly-made "dips" were pressed close to each other while soft and then again lowered into the hot fat, thus holding them together as one candle with two wicks. The size could then be increased if desired.

This flat candle was most generally used by shoemakers and tailors, but was made use of in some households whenever an extra bright light for working or reading was required.—[Correspondence the Dickensian.

New Secretaries.

SOME WHO SEEK PLACES IN OUR DIPLOMATIC SERVICE.

By a Special Contributor.

FOURTEEN lucky young men have just passed their examinations for secretaries' commissions in our diplomatic service. They will be scattered all over the earth, from Tangier to Rio Janeiro and from Montevideo to Tokio. Each has a glorious chance to see the world and rub elbows with kings and queens, if he will but stick to the service and make himself useful to the State Department.

Two commence as second secretaries of embassy, at $2000; three as third secretaries of embassy at $1200; one as secretary of legation, at $2625; seven as secretaries of legation, at $2000, and one as second secretary of legation, at $1800. Each begins in the lowermost secretaryship at the capital to which he is accredited. At some capitals we have two and at others three secretaries of embassies; at some one and at others two secretaries of legation. In the entire service there are sixty secretaries of embassy and legation in grades receiving respectively $3000, $2625, $2000, $1800 and $1200.

All holders of these secretaryships must be confirmed by the Senate before being finally commissioned by the President. Such is the importance given them by the fathers of the republic. But before being nominated to the Senate, all candidates for appointment must now be examined at the State Department by a board consisting of the second assistant secretary, the solicitor and the chief of the diplomatic bureau. These examinations are both oral and written, and include international law, diplomatic usage and modern languages. No one can now hope to become a secretary of embassy or legation unless he is proficient in at least one foreign language. Immediately after receiving their appointments, new secretaries are, under a new regulation of this summer, required to spend an instruction period of thirty days in the Department of State. Here they confer with and listen to talks by government officials on subjects having an important bearing on diplomatic work. This is the extent of the government's "diplomatic school," lately exploited in some of the papers.

The poor young man has but a slim chance for success as a secretary of legation or embassy in one of the large European capitals. Those accredited in such capacities to these posts are expected to spend five or ten times their salaries in making a social showing to the glory of their republic at home. As part of the suite of our Minister or Ambassador the secretary becomes, for the time being, a courtier of the ruler to whose capital he is accredited; and in Europe all courtiers must be lavish hosts and good spenders. If the secretary is married, his expenses manifoldly increase. His wife must have a new gown for each separate appearance at court and he must have accommodations for returning hospitalities proffered her. At oriental and South A ican capitals the demands upon the secretary are heavy. In Tokio and Peking, our government qu our principal secretaries in homes and they do not to pay Uncle Sam any rental.

Sons of Diplomats Enter.

After being graduated at Princeton, he traveled in the Arctic regions, where he made a study of the Takudh Indians. Returning to New York, he wrote of his travels, and then for seven years was one of the editors of the New York Press. Christmas week, 1906, he married at the American embassy, Tokio, Hallie Erminie Rives, the Kentucky novelist, who is the author of "Hearts Courageous," "The Castaway," and other novels. Mrs. Rives-Wheeler now has an attractive study in her husband's quarters within our embassy grounds, Tokio, and her future novel will have a Japanese setting.

Still another author on this roll of under diplomats is Lewis Einstein, first secretary at Constantinople. He is a Columbia graduate and has produced four books besides many book reviews and special articles. He has also edited two sets of books, "The Humorists' Library" and "Leonardo da Vinci." Among his own works are "The Italian Renaissance in England" and "The Relation of Literature to History." Speaking of writers in this connection, Montgomery Schuyler, Jr., our secretary to St. Petersburg, is the son of the veteran journalist of the same name, who was with the New York World for eighteen years, until the early eighties, when he joined the staff of the Times, where he still remains.

Sheldon Whitehouse, who goes as secretary to Caracas, Venezuela, is the son of William Fitzhugh Whitehouse, the New York explorer, who died last spring at Beaulieu, France, and Alexander Benson, who goes to La Paz, Bolivia, is the son of Edwin North Benson, who was president of the Philadelphia Union League, back in the eighties. He is a bridegroom, having only this summer married Miss Natalie, daughter of Elihu Chauncey.

The Pick of the Posts.

The Paris post is the pick of all those on the continent. Arthur Bailly-Blanchard, who has been assigned to the French capital since 1900, when he became third secretary, now succeeds his fellow-Louisianan, Henry Vignaud, the veteran diplomat who, at the age of 78, has just retired, after more than a quarter century's career as first secretary at Paris. During this time, while secretary in name, Mr. Vignaud was often Minister—or Ambassador—in fact, and, indeed, he would have had the full rank and title of Ambassador had he possessed the means. Mr. Bailly-Blanchard has been his understudy since eight years ago, when promoted from third to second secretary. The only other new first secretary of embassy is James G. Bailey of Kentucky, who goes to Mexico from Stockholm.

Sons of Millionaire Daddies.

It is a story of wealthy and influential fathers the remainder of the way down the revised list of secretaries. Young Robert Bliss, who goes now to Buenos Ayres, is the son of William Henry Bliss, the rich New York lawyer and clubman, who was United States District Attorney at St. Louis for fifteen years at a stretch, and who has later been an influential railway official and attorney. Henry C. May, who is promoted from third secretary at St. Petersburg to first secretary at Stockholm, is the son of Col. Henry May, the wealthy Washington clubman, who dates his ancestry back to William the Conqueror. Robert Winthrop, who will now be second secretary at Athens, is a scion of the Massachusetts colonial family of Winthrops, and W. Bayard Cutting, Jr., is the son of the rich New York reformer of the same name, who has been civil service commissioner of New York and who is a director in many big corporations. M. Marshall Langhorne, our secretary at Christiania, is a scion of the Virginia Langhorne family, famous for its beautiful women. Young Waldorf Astor and Charles Dana Gibson are among his brothers-in-law.

Lorillard and an Astor.

George L. Lorillard, our secretary at Lisbon, is the son of Louis L. Lorillard (who married Katherine Beekman) and the grandson of Peter Lorillard, the founder of the Lorillard fortune in America. He is a nephew of Pierre Lorillard, who died eight years ago.

That of Astor is another multi-millionaire American family with a scion occupying one of our diplomatic secretaryships. Peter Augustus Jay, our first secretary at Tokio, is not only a descendant of John Jay, but is the great-great-grandson of the first John Jacob Astor. He comes down through the latter's daughter, Dorothea Astor, who, just at the outbreak of our second war with Great Britain, married Walter Langdon.

As the years go by, our diplomatic service approaches nearer and nearer to a permanent organization, in which party lines are disregarded. Thus we have Oscar Straus accredited to Constantinople under both Democratic and Republican administrations, and this tendency is shown more particularly among those young secretaries of legation who show genius for the calling of the publicist. William F. Sands, who commenced his diplomatic career as second secretary to Japan under Cleveland, is now promoted from the first secretaryship at Mexico to the rank of Minister to Guatemala. Lloyd Griscom began under Cleveland as private secretary to Ambassador Bayard at London, and after serving as secretary of legation at Constantinople, became Minister to Persia and Japan, and then was an Ambassador while only 34. He could have remained as Ambassador under President Taft had he so desired. W. W. Rockhill, our new Ambassador to Russia, began as second secretary to Peking under Cleveland.

His Wife Chummed With Queen.

Henry White began as secretary of legation at Vienna under Cleveland's first administration, and is now Ambassador to Paris after having remained in the service with only a four-year interval. His wife was a chum of Queen Alexandra while she was Princess of Wales, and during the many years that he was secretary to London. Herbert H. D. Peirce started in the service as secretary to St. Petersburg under Mr. Cleveland, and held the same rank under Mr. McKinley, while Mr. Roosevelt made him third assistant Secretary of State, and now he is Minister of Norway. Herbert G. Squires, our Minister to Panama, also began his diplomatic apprenticeship under the Democratic administration of Mr. Cleveland, who appointed him second secretary to Berlin in 1894. Alvey A. Adee, the dean of American diplomacy, had his foot placed upon the lowest rung of the diplomatic ladder by President Grant, who commissioned him secretary to Madrid thirty-nine years ago, since when he has been continuously connected with the diplomatic service under two Democratic and eight Republican administrations. Arthur commissioned him third and Cleveland made him second assistant Secretary of State, the latter of which positions he now holds.

Other former secretaries of legation and embassy who have worked their way directly to the front rank of our diplomacy are Arthur M. Beaupre, Edwin N. Morgan and Spencer F. Eddy. Mr. Beaupre was secretary of legation to Guatemala early in McKinley's first term, and is now Minister to The Hague and to Luxemburg. Mr. Morgan began as secretary to Korea at $2000, and is now Minister to Cuba at $12,000. Mr. Eddy started in as private secretary of John Hay when the latter was Ambassador to London, then he was third secretary to London at $1200, and now he is Minister to Belgium and Servia at $10,000. His wife was Lurline Elizabeth Spreckels of the multi-millionaire San Francisco family, and his sister is the wife of Senator Beveridge of Indiana.

The Day We Celebrate.

PLAYFUL SIDE OF CALIFORNIA'S ADMISSION TO THE UNION.

By a Special Contributor.

COMPARED with the usual slow, preparatory process of territorial government, the admission of California as a full-fledged State was as spontaneous as the pressing of an electric button. But for the electric button to be effective the house must first be wired, and the work of the political electricians began at the notable convention held at Monterey in the early autumn of 1849.

After long days of weary tinkering at a constitution, regulating finances, and discussing boundary lines, virtue was rewarded by the gleeful delight of a ball.

The convention at $25 a head—an aggregate sum of $1100—played host to the citizens of Monterey and the visiting strangers within her gates. Colton Hall, an impressive two-story building of yellow sandstone erected by Don Walter Colton, one-time Alcalde of Monterey, from the proceeds of the sale of town lots, had been the meeting-place of the Legislature, and now forum, tables, and other paraphernalia of office were removed and the hall festively decorated with young pines from the near-by woods and a proud display of American colors, the lights of three chandeliers adding brilliance to the gala scene when the merry-making began at the fashionably late hour of 8 o'clock.

But dim was the artificial illumination in comparison to the flashing beauty of the sixty or seventy belles of Monterey, Los Angeles, and Santa Barbara who tripped the light fantastic toe in best bib-and-tucker party finery, "now a fetching creation of pink satin and gauze flitting by; next, perhaps, a bodice of scarlet velvet and gold buttons, then a rich figured brocade such as one sees on the stately dames of Titian."

As for their gallant partners who, businesswise, had come to the capital without an evening trousseau, fearfully and wonderfully collected were their festive garments, "scarcely a single dress belonging entirely to its wearer, while white kids could not be had for love or money, and as much as $50 was paid by one gentleman for a pair of patent-leather boots."

Two violins and two guitars made up the band, every tune played with spirit, though each ended with an amusing little squeak.

The midnight supper was served in the courtroom on the lower floor, and since it was too small to accommodate all the guests at once, the ladies were served first, the bountiful spread consisting of turkey, roast pig, beef, tongue, and patés, with a generous flow of wines and liquors.

The day after the ball was the last of the convention, and in the afternoon the momentous signing of the completed constitution.

Bayard Taylor, in his "El Dorado," gives the following thrilling account of the event:

"At this moment" (when the signing began) "a signal was given; the American colors ran up the flagstaff in front of the government buildings and streamed out in the air. A second afterward, the first gun boomed from the fort and its stirring echoes came back from one hill after another till they were lost in the distance. All the native enthusiasm of Capt. Sutter's Swiss blood was aroused; he was the old soldier again. He sprang from his seat, and, waving his hand around his head, as if swinging a sword, exclaimed: 'Gentlemen, this is the happiest day of my life. It makes me glad to hear these cannon; they remind me of the time when I was a soldier. Yes, I am glad to hear them—this is a great day for California!' Then, recollecting himself, he sat down, the tears streaming from his eyes. The members with one accord gave three tumultuous cheers, which were heard from one end of town to the other. As the signing went on, gun followed gun from the fort, the echoes reverberating grandly around the bay till finally as the loud ring of the thirty-first was heard, that was a shout: 'That's for California!' and every one joined in giving three times three for the new star added to our confederation."

But the "confederation" had its own ideas about new stars, and California's earnest yet dignified request to be admitted to the Union was not received with cheers at Washington, the matter not a simple, personal one, but badly complicated with the vexed question of slavery and States' rights, forensically fought over by Congress for many months.

On the 9th of September, 1850, the bill of admission was finally signed by the President, but it was not until October 18 that the news reached California. The golden message was brought through the Golden Gate by the steamer Oregon, bedecked in bunting and flying a gorgeous flag that had been made on board, bearing the triumphant legend: "California is a State."

The little city went mad with joy. Every one talked at once—and between times read Washington papers sold at $5 apiece.

Crowds congregated in Portsmouth Square, where the general excitement found expression in enthusiastic impromptu speeches.

Then followed a gay, wild drinking of the new State's health in champagne, the most hilarious rendezvous being Delmonico's saloon, where the merry company formed in squads, "each squad going to the bar, drinking a bumper and falling back until its turn came again, every man with a stiff-crowned hat having it crushed down over head and face."

The next day, the news was carried to the new capital, San José, two rival lines of stage coaches racing all the way. The stage driver Crandall with Gov. Peter H. Burnett seated beside him won out, the fifty miles made at a breakneck speed by his six fiery mustangs, Crandall waving his hat and yelling: "California is admitted to the Union!" as they dashed lickety-split past people on the roadside who had run out of their houses to wonder and remained to shout and cheer.

A grand formal celebration took place in San Francisco on October 29, the ships in the harbor, as well as the streets and buildings of the city decorated with bunting and flags; salutes fired all day, and at night fierworks and bonfires lighting up the hills. A grand military and civic parade also took place, while an inspiring oration was delivered at Portsmouth Square by Justice Nathaniel Bennett.

Christianity That Counted.

On the other side of the continent, in the province of Quebec, lives a medical missionary, known among the rough habitants and lumber jacks whom he tends as "old Dr. Spear." That is the title of respect which he goes by from La Prairie to the falls of the Chaudière. Down the dim forest road one night rattled the hooded gig of the old preacher practitioner, bound on a hurry call, for at some lonely cabin in the big woods a new soul was about to see the light. Suddenly his horse shied, then halted, quivering, as a shadowy figure leaped from the bushes by the roadside and a shadowy hand grasped the bit. "Halt! Hands up!" came the curt command. "Hands up and be quick about it!" Three masked figures, sinister, menacing, ranged themselves beside the gig; three revolver barrels covered the startled doctor. "Come now, hand over your money, or it'll be the worse for you," ordered one of the highwaymen, and flashed a bullseye in the physician's face.

"Why, boys, we've made a mistake," he exclaimed; "it's old Dr. Spear. Doctor, we surely beg your pardon. You see," he continued, apologetically, "we were looking for the paymaster of the mines, but we couldn't see who it was in the dark. But you can't keep on by this road, for the river bridge has been washed away; you will have to go by the lower road and cross at the ford. Jacques, here, will show you the way." The bandit called Jacques removed his mask shamefacedly and climbed in beside the doctor, his two companions raising their hats in respectful salutation as the gig turned down a path into the heart of the forest. The river was running high under the impetus of the spring freshets, but the outlaw guided the vehicle across the treacherous ford in safety. "Doctor," he said hesitatingly, as he alighted, "if you don't object I'd feel proud to shake your hand. If there were more of your sort in the big woods, there'd be less of ours."—[E. On Yeda Island.

WHERE JAPAN'S NAVAL SAMURAIS ARE MADE.

By a Special Contributor.

THE Japanese navy is the life of the Island Empire. Its navy is its glory. It sufficiently proved its strength and capacity of heroic sacrifice for its country's sake in the China-Japan war fifteen years ago. The world is still wondering over its daring act at Port Arthur. The Japanese say that their fighting spirit and undaunted belief in their growing empire are given them by the 808 gods who guard Japan. It may be not without interest to tell where Japan's naval academy is situated, and how the officers are made.

Japan's scenic beauty is especially picturesque in the inland sea. After leaving Osaka, the boat sailed past the hundred isles, fantastically shaped and covered with silhouetted pine trees. I felt as if I were in some garden pond in a far happier realm. The Japanese sky was blue, a Hiroshige blue. The sea grew narrower at Onomichi and Itozaki. Slowly the boat went into the Strait of Ondo. Ondo means "Master of Music." Presently Kure, the Japanese naval station, was sighted. There, calmly facing the station, lies the Yeda Island, on which is situated the naval academy.

The water of the Bay of Yeda Shima was all silver, the silver that reflects as in a looking glass. The white walls of fifty buildings and their high roofs amid the pine and cedar trees were seen, when I raised my eyes from the bay.

As I approached the school yards, I saw some students engaged in athletics. Some were amusing themselves playing tennis. Others were learning jiu-jitsu or fencing. Several boys were in rowboats on the river, practicing. In the springtime (Yeda Shima is eternal spring with a soft breeze,) they climb the hills in the neighborhood.

It was interesting to chat with the students. We sat on the velvety moss of the yard and talked. I asked them questions of their school life, their training. In return, they were anxious to know of the naval life of students at Annapolis. They all knew of the great naval academy in America. I was told, first of all, of the orderliness of the school. If any bugle were to blow, they would all have to jump up, leaving their talk abruptly. They would be punished if they were late. hTey drill as strictly as any soldier. They proudly begged me, not to compare theirs with the drills of any other higher academies; and they did not hesitate to declare that it is simply child's play as compared with their own.

Ten students make one division, which is superintended by one officer. The average yearly attendance at the naval academy is 568. Each student must make his own bed at 7 o'clock sharp. And he must be careful not to mistake his own towel. A small thing is regarded as important here.

When I asked the system of education of the academy, one of the students took out a few sheets of paper from his pocket, on which the school rules were written. I was informed by them that the academy regards spiritual education higher than any scientific study. They say spiritual education means the making of a true officer—a real samurai on the sea. The aim is to make not simply a clever fellow, but a firm and intelligent officer.

Admiral Masaji Togo, tne present president of the academy, is the idol of the students. He regards the students as his own children. He and his fellow-professors take turns in making a weekly house party for them. It brings the professors into closer relationship with the students. They want to influence them from all sides. The students told me that an invitation to the party is one of their greatest delights.

At the party, tea and cake always appear. There is usually singing by the wives and daughters of the professors. They finish up with the glorious story of some officer who achieved lasting fame by killing himself for his country's sake. The students return to their dormitories, promising themselves that they will not be cowards in any crisis. Their whole soul is for the Japanese empire and their august Emperor, and for the sea.

I was shown the dormitories. The students' beds were in regular order, four in one room. Six blank given to each bed. Under the bed there is a box for their clothes. On the wall of each that I saw, there was a picture of the Emperor students do not sleep with their feet toward ture. They think it would be inexcusable, sacril The dining-room is large enough for 600 students tables were clean and the carpet was well swept students are not permitted to drink any wine but the boys above 20 have the liberty to smoke enjoy sufficient freedom under the circumstances

There is one small building which is a sacred to the students. It is the room for the relics China-Japan war. Occupying foremost place in the trance-room to this building are nine portraits officers who were killed on the Yellow Sea— mander, Hachiro Sakamoto, being their head. commander's picture there is a map of the On a kakemono that hangs to the left of the ture, the following words are written in

"The Commander Sakamoto stood firm manded the sailors. He was shot by the his body was scattered in the air, but the spilled remains on this map. What glorious spilled! His death is the glory of our empi our academy, where he was once a student."

On a huge table near by is the half-ruined Japanese battleship Fuso. She was one finest ships at the time of the China-Japan Fuso was one of the few Japanese vessels that serious injury during this naval battle. On table in this room are the broken pieces pedoes which struck the Chinese battleship at Wei. Broken and battered searchlights, stroyed battleships and torn, blood-stained lie in ghastly array, each in itself telling a ror, a tale of internecine warfare.

Whenever a Japanese, I was told, enters this his fighting blood rises high. Each one rega as the protector of the Island Empire. Wh call, that one is ready to dash into the sea. dent is invited to spend hours in this building his patriotic spirit. All the students believe that their graves lie under the sea.

Among the students at this naval academy are several princes. Many a prince was educated here, the late Prince Taruhito Arisugawa, Prince among Princes, being the first. Prince Komatsu, Prince Yamashina, Prince Kacho, were all educated here. The sons of royalty are not excepted from the school's rules. They must get up before 6 and must make their own bed. They, too, must be careful not to mistake their towels. The newspapers report weekly on the progress they make in their studies. Prince Arisugawa, who died last year, had been a student at the naval academy for four years. He was the second Prince of the Arisugawa house to die while a naval student at Yeda Shima. He was the Emperor's favorite among the younger princes, and all believed him to be Japan's coming samurai of the sea. His early death caused much grief throughout Japan.

Yeda Island is a typical place for a naval school. Nothing effeminate would dare approach here. The sensuous song of a geisha girl and the degenerating odor of saké are far away beyond reach; but the true air of Japanese patriotism and the voice of self-sacrifice are here. What the students see day and night is the water—nothing but the water. OZMUN WEST.

American Fire Fighters.

To an American, the fire-fighting appliances and methods of the English seem exceedingly inefficient. It is quite natural; therefore, that the American style of fighting fire should fill an Englishman with astonishment.

In his "Reminiscences" in the September Strand, Harry Furniss, the great English cartoonist, describes a visit to an American engine-house.

"Suddenly the alarm bell rang," says he, "and before I looked round again, seemingly by magic, but in reality by electricity, the halters fell from the horses heads, and to my surprise, without any one being near them, they rushed to their places at the shaft of the engine. There were manholes in the ceiling, through which brass rods were suspended vertically; down these slid half-dressed men, who seemed to turn a somersault into their clothes during the descent on to the engine. The harness suspended above the horses dropped on to their backs, and in an instant they were in the street, the engine manned, the fire ablaze, and away the horses ed. Suddenly a whistle from the captain stopped them. It was a false alarm given for my edification. Before the engine was back in the station, I was conducted by the captain into the dormitory, where I concealed myself under a bed. Without a grumble the men came up and literally walked out of their clothes, the boots, pants, and everything are all of one piece. These they opened carefully, laid them ready by the side of their beds, and very soon were all snoring, fast asleep."

Curious Old London Clubs.

The days of quaint and queer clubs are days of the past. We do not hear at present of a "No Nose Club," "Club of Beans," or a "Man Killing Club," whose names are suggestive; of the "Surly Club," whose object was the practice of contradiction and of foul language, that the members might not be wanting in impudence to those passengers on the Thames.

The "Man Hunting Club" was established by young limbs of the law. Of the "Lying Club," every member was required to wear a blue cap with a red feather in it. The "Better-Wit Society" consisted of wits. The "Hum-Drum Club" members were to say nothing till midnight. The "Two-Penny Club" members if they swore were to be kicked on the shins by the other members. The "Everlasting Club" has not lasted long. The "Kit-Cat Club" was known after its toasts of "Old Cats and Young Kits."

Of the "Beefsteak Club" the following amusing definition was written by one of its illustrious members:

Like Britain's island lies our steak,
A sea of gravy bounds it;
Shallots confusedly scattered make
The rockwork that surrounds it.

The Passing of the Picnic Grove.

In the vacation, all the real outdoor recreation, almost, that hundreds of thousands of good, honest, hard-working Americans get out of the year is had at the picnic grove. It is to that weather-worn pine table in the grove that thousands of as good women as any in the country must go for a taste of some one else's cooking, the taste that is so good after a year in the kitchen. It was at the picnic table that a great many of our proudest citizens learned how to properly use a knife and fork. The picnic grove is the summer camp, the roof garden, the seaside pavilion, the summer hotel of more and, it may be, better Americans than ever go to the real summer camps, the real roof gardens and the pavilions and summer hotels. Yet they are passing away.

It would be the part of good sense, of sound Americanism, for us to remember that, as a people, we cannot afford to turn our backs upon the old-fashioned picnic grove, but must preserve it along with our other parks. When we realize this, perhaps we will also see through the delusion, no less silly than grave, which is responsible for the shameful conditions that effectually padlock the great public parks against 90 per cent. of the people.—[Recreation.

Among Flamingoes.

VACATION OF A NATURALIST'S WIFE IN THE BAHAMAS.

From New York Sun.

"ABOUT the most exciting vacation I recall was the time I went with my husband to hunt flamingoes with a camera," said a young married woman whose husband is a professor in an eastern college. "When a girl marries a naturalist, she must be prepared to do queer things, you know. I was so thoroughly prepared that when my husband decided to go to the Bahamas on a camera hunt for flamingoes he counted me in as a matter of course. It was two years ago last spring, and though we had been married two years, I had made my record as his first assistant, especially when it came to handling a camera.

"Not only were we able to get a wonderful collection of photographs of these birds, but for four whole days we sat among their nests so near that it almost seemed possible to reach out and stroke the back of the nearest flamingo as it sat on its nest.

"Thrilling? It wasn't so thrilling as it was when we were in doubt as to whether they would return when we set up our blind in the midst of their rookery. That was exciting enough to make my heart beat loud enough for the birds to hear it had they remained seated comfortably on their nests.

"Though we left for the Bahamas early in April, it was the first week in May before we found an occupied rookery. On our arrival, the negro who had acted as our guide reported that he had already spotted an occupied rookery, and was eager to conduct us there at once. My husband was equally eager, and the fact that it was raining in torrents didn't hold us back a minute. It was the rainy season. We knew it would be the rainy season, so we had made all necessary preparations, but it did seem a bit lonesome setting out that first day with the water coming down in bucketfuls.

"When we reached the place it was only to find that the rookery had been discovered and literally cleaned out by a party of negroes the day before. Every young bird and egg had been taken off and the old birds had flown away, never to return. It was a bitter disappointment to us both.

"We remained long enough in this devastated rookery to get some idea of what a flamingo city is really like. Though it was still raining, we left the boat and walking most of the time through water fully three inches deep, my husband and I examining the great nests, which were all built so high above the ground as to be well out of the water.

"There seemed myriads of them to my untutored eyes, but my husband computed only about 1500 in the whole rookery. This he told me was by no means a large rookery for the Bahamas. The robbers had left neither eggs nor fledglings in any of the nests which we examined, and they had broken down many nests and trampled over others.

"During the following eight days—all dull and cloudy, with gusts of wind and rain every hour or so—we rowed about through endless creeks and lagoons on the lookout for an occupied rookery. The nights were passed in camp, which was moved on as fast as my husband and our guides decided that the neighborhood had been thoroughly covered.

"On the ninth day, early in the morning, one of the two guides with us sighted flamingoes. An exciting quarter of an hour followed this announcement, as neither my husband nor the other guide would agree that the faint line of color that the first guide pointed out was flamingoes. Fifteen minutes' hard rowing brought us near enough to make sure with the use of our glasses that the birds were really there and in great numbers.

"Next came the question of how the birds would behave. Would they allow us to land and sit and work among them, or would they stream off never to come back again?

"Of course both my own and my husband's eyes were fastened on the wonderful stretch of color marking the rookery. While we were quite 300 yards away, the great birds began to stand up and their loud honking call was very distinct. Another hundred yards nearer and the entire rookery rose as at a signal and streamed off, one great flaming cloud. It was here that my husband began to use his camera, but I, firm in my faith of the birds' love of home, was sure I would have better opportunities.

"As we were landing only about thirty yards from the edge of the rookery, the flaming cloud wheeled and, swinging back over the rookery settled down in a shallow lagoon not far to the windward. We set up our two blinds and covered the side next the rookery with palm leaves and green boughs. As soon as this was accomplished, our two guides went back to camp on a narrow strip of shore a few miles from the rookery.

"Now this was when the real excitement began. It was an anxious moment. After the boat had gone more than 500 yards, I heard my husband sigh.

"'Do give them a few minutes grace,' I whispered to him, though the birds were so far away that I might have shouted without their hearing even the sound of my voice.

"My husband shook his head. Five minutes more and our boat was almost out of sight. Five—almost five—minutes and we saw them rise from the lagoon, the great crimson and rose-pink cloud of birds, and sweeping over the rookery, circle, return to the lagoon and a few minutes later come walking back to their settlement of nests.

"They walked back without the slightest apparent hesitation, and finding their own nests, each bird, after considerable honking, settled down upon it. It was after they had settled themselves that I remembered that I had come as the first assistant to a naturalist and not as a mere sightseer. Besides giving my husband every assistance, I was able to use my own camera to very good effect.

"We were in the blind that day until nearly nightfall, and photographed the birds in every possible position, asleep, awake, standing, sitting, on their nests, at rest, in motion. It was a wonderful experience, so wonderful that neither my husband nor I thought of the lunch with which we had come provided.

"We were both busy every minute of the time, and I had at least lost all count of the time and had no idea that it was even near the hour we had appointed for our guides to return to take us back to camp until suddenly a loud honk. Instantly each bird lifted its long neck and held its head as if waiting for the order to move. Another and more shrill honk and they all were standing up, waving their black scarlet-lined wings and calling to each other in alarm.

"This lasted scarcely more than an instant when amid a tremendous uproar they took wing as if at the same instant, and the rookery was deserted. I stared about me at a loss to know the cause of this sudden flight, when my husband's voice recalled me to myself. He told me to get my traps together, as our guide had come to take us back to camp. Before we had gone 300 yards I was relieved to see the flock leave the lagoon and come wheeling back to their nests.

"The next morning my husband decided to move our blind into the midst of the rookery. The birds flew away at our approach just as they had done the day previously. The new position selected for the blind was so near two of the nests that we could distinguish the panting of the frightened fledgling as we busied ourselves setting up the cover which was to deceive the flock into thinking we were not there.

"It took some five or six minutes to do the work, and I shall always believe that this delay caused the ever-suspicious flamingoes to debate longer about their return. It was fully half an hour before we saw them make the first rise from the lagoon and come circling over the rookery. Not until they had made this advance the third time did they decide that it was safe for them to return.

"Then they came walking straight toward us without paying the slightest attention to our blind. My husband thought there were fully 1200 birds in the flock and perhaps as many again not in sight. The day before, though we had made excellent pictures of the birds and their nests, we had not been near enough to photograph the young to our satisfaction. Now from our new position we were able to see the smallest details.

"With such an unlimited choice of subjects spread before us, we decided to watch the birds and photograph them only when their movements or positions were different from those we had caught the day before. Even with this as a check, we might have used an almost endless number of plates to good advantage. Every instant showed us new groups.

"During the following three days we went back and forth between the blind in the rookery and our tent on the beach with about the same experience. The birds would fly away on our approach and return once they had made sure our guides were well off. Excepting the day we set up the blind, they returned while the boat was still in sight. They never took the slightest notice of our blind.

"As flamingoes always build their nests on open muddy swashes, where the only vegetation is a few stunted mangoes, the naturalist who wishes to photograph them or to make a study of their habits must take pains to provide himself with a blind that will deceive the birds. The blind, which my husband had made to order, was made of green cloth, as near the color of a palm leaf as we could get. At the top it was stretched over a large umbrella, the sort of umbrella that hucksters use when carting their fruits and vegetables about; but instead of the cloth cover stopping at the edge of the ribs it extended down slightly below the end of the handle.

"In setting up this blind, we had only to stick the end of the long handle well in the ground and allow the cloth to fall over like a valance around one of those high poster beds of our great-grandmothers. The end of the umbrella stick was sharp, so sticking it in the ground was an easy enough matter. The only thing that required either time or skill was fixing the ropes which kept it from being blown over.

"In only one particular was I disappointed in the flamingoes. During all the five days that they were under my eyes, not one in the entire rookery sat straddling its nest. I had expected to see them in this awkward position, for since my earliest childhood I had seen pictures of the birds sitting on their nests with their long legs hanging over. The flamingoes my husband and I saw sat on their nests with their legs doubled under them, just as every other bird of my acquaintance sits while brooding."

Origin of Sailors' Collars.

In the course of an after-dinner chat recorded in Sir Algernon West's "Recollections," the late Admiral Sir Harry Keppel, who served in the navy under four sovereigns, said that the blue collars worn by sailors had their origin in the dressing of the pigtails—which Sir Harry recollected being in use—when a blue cloth was put on the men's shoulders to keep the grease off their jackets. The pigtails disappeared, but the collars remain to this day.—[London Globe.

The Contadino.

HAPPY AND CONTENTED LIFE OF RURAL PEASANTS OF ITALY.

By a Special Contributor.

IN the country and all through the mountainous regions of Italy one may find many happy people who live from year to year a life of toil, but they are happy and contented and wish for nothing better. They know nothing of the great bustling world of business. In the summer they watch their fields of waving corn and carefully guard their grapes. In the fall they harvest their crops and make their wines; in the winter they sit by the fire and tell stories of days gone by, and if the family cow is peacefully chewing her cud and the family hens laying their eggs in the adjoining room, the fire is no less cheerful than the artificial heat of a dining-room in a brownstone front on Fifth avenue.

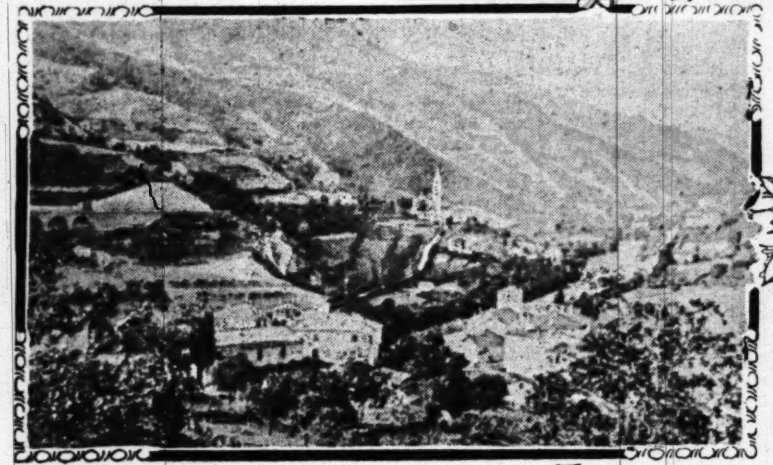
In the mountainous regions of Tuscany, one may make the acquaintance of the typical mountain peasant of Italy. His humble dwelling is sometimes situated at an altitude of 1200 meters. He is practically monarch of all he surveys. He is the employé of the owner of the land surrounding his cottage, but he pays no rent. He raises his grain, grapes, sheep and goats and makes his butter and cheese, he receiving half and his landlord half of all the proceeds therefrom. During the late spring, summer and fall months, he goes to market once a week, usually on Monday, the market-place being situated in the nearest country town. Here he sells his butter, cheese, eggs, poultry, cattle, or whatever else he may have vendible. The landlord, also, or his overseer, is present on these market days, on hand to see that business matters are arranged equably. Though market days are held once a week the year round in all the country towns, very often the contadino who lives in the mountains is snowbound for weeks at a time and is obliged to remain by his fire in the chimney for many long days. During a stormy period when the snow is high around his dwelling, some member of his family may fall ill and perhaps die. If all the mountain roads are impassable, then the corpse of the deceased is placed upon the roof, where it becomes frozen and may remain six weeks or two months until the weather permits of its being transported to the nearest cemetery.

The market-place, where the most eventful hours of the contadino's life are spent, is indeed an interesting spot. In an open space reserved for this purpose those having fruits, vegetables, poultry, butter, cheese and eggs for sale gather with their baskets in hand and sell their goods to private individuals or storekeepers. Early in the morning, they may be seen arriving, sometimes on foot and sometimes on horses or burros. Very often one of the women of the family will come, hatless, but with a yellow or green scarf thrown over her shoulders and bearing, in addition to the ordinary produce, a basket of wild strawberries or raspberries for sale. Very often, the contadino may own some poultry, a cow and a goat or two of his own, and in this case he is quite independent of his landlord in the matter of selling produce of this live stock. In the evening, after a successful day at market, the contadino returns to the fastness of his mountains, laden with all sorts of purchases. If he is a prospective bridegroom he returns with household furnishings and he gaily sings a love song to shorten his journey.

In Italy there is not a settlement, no matter how small, which boasts the name of a town that does not contain a principal piazza, or open square. On market days this piazza is filled with rough tables covered with cloth. Dry goods, shoes, hats, cooking utensils, trinkets and in fact almost every imaginable necessity or luxury of the contadino are sold at these tables. In the piazza, our mountain friend spends the most eventful hours of his life, for here he does his bargaining. To a peasant there would be no pleasure in buying an article at a fixed price. He would feel that he had been cheated out of a rightful diversion and he would not be happy if he could not boast to his friends of the sharp bargains he had made. Even in cities like Florence, many of the shopkeepers have two establishments, one with fixed prices for the foreign custom and that of Italians of the better classes, and another where the contadino may go and argue for half an hour over 3 cents.

At times, a large number of cattle are brought to be sold on market days. Then one may see real bargaining. The cows or oxen are made to show their paces like race horses and are examined minutely by the prospective purchasers. If sellers and buyers, after much talk, finally agree upon a price, they make a contract by shaking hands, all four at the same time. Sometimes three parties to a bargain may be agreed and one not; he thereupon refuses to shake hands. One may often see peasants and landlords making contracts in this manner in the Piazza Signoria in Florence on Fridays. If a man agrees to purchase certain cows or oxen, he is allowed to keep them two weeks before paying for them, and if at the expiration of that time they are found to be healthy, he then pays for them in cash. Large sums of money are frequently transferred from the pocket-book of one individual to that of another in the open piazza. Goats and pigs are also sold in the markets. The family pig is a person of some importance and may frequently be encountered on the country roads out for a stroll in company with his mistress.

A typical contadino



Marradi, mountain town in Tuscany

A Contadino home

Altogether the contadino living in his rude house of stone, roughly hewn and imperfectly cemented, thereby allowing the cutting breath of the north wind to fan the flames of his hearth fire is one of the most contented persons you will find in the world. Often he knows nothing of cities, trains, railways or steamboats. He has heard of them, but has only a vague idea of what they may be. He knows when to plant his grain and when to harvest it; how to pilot his sheep safely by perilous paths to some grassy mountain plateau; he knows how to endure the hardships of the long, cold winter. He is happy on a diet of corn meal, black bread and spaghetti; he may eat some tough meat once a week, on Sunday, when he also drinks red wine. He is far from the world and the people thereof, but his little world suffices. His pictures are the grandeur of the unobstructed landscape, his music the singing of the birds or the sighing of the winds. He is born, he lives and loves; he has his joys and sorrows, and finally he dies. Who can say that his life has been poorly spent? Who can say that he has not accomplished as much as the rich man who leaves a million to be squandered by restless pleasure seekers circling the world in order to find some new form of diversion?

Catching Fish in an Umbrella.

A novel method of catching mullet was practiced lately by John J. Jandreau of Fort Pierce.

While at the inlet last Monday, accompanied by his wife and little girl, he noticed a considerable number of large mullet feeding in a small creek. He built a dam across the mouth of this creek and then little Miss Jandreau, barefooted, splashed about in the water; the fish, becoming panic-stricken, ran for deep water.

Coming to the dam, they leaped over it and fell into open silk umbrellas held by Mr. and Mrs. Jandreau. There seems to be no limit to the number to be caught in this manner, but only enought for present consumption were taken, and now his family and their friends can always have fresh fish.—[St. Lucie Tribune.

Stylist in Epitaphs.

STRANGE AND DANGEROUS EXPERIENCE WITH A MADMAN.

By a Special Contributor.

IT was a grave. And beyond was another, and another, a dozen or more; all with one huge headstone—the cliff which towered a hundred feet above.

I inspected the first grave curiously. It had been outlined with white quartz stones, and upon the round mound had been planted several desert flowering plants, now shriveling up under the Arizona sun. Upon the granite wall was an epitaph, chipped out in rude, rough letters. I read:

"There lies beneath this cheerful epitaph
Bill Simpson, who was wont to jest and chaff.
A very witty man indeed was Bill,
Who used to make the boys laugh fit to kill.
I'd give a dollar to know what he'd say,
If Bill could see his epitaph today.
Down there amid Old Satan's flame and smoke,
I wonder if dear William sees the joke."

Three times I read this over. Puzzled and bewildered, I moved on to the next grave, where this remarkable tribute to the dead met my eyes:

"I do not know his name, what claim to fame,
He may have had.
The death of one so very young as he
Is always sad.
Yet he could not have asked a better fate
Than rest beneath
A special epitaph for him alone
By Chauncey Heath."

"Well, how do you like it?"

The question came from behind, in a little, squeaky voice. I wheeled. There stood an old man whose white beard swept almost to his waist. He was dressed in the ordinary garb of a prospector—white slouch hat, red flannel shirt, faded blue overalls and heavy hobnailed shoes. He leaned wearily upon a long rifle. His little gray eyes looked out at me from under his bushy brows with an expression that was half amusement, half simple pride.

Taken completely by surprise, I stammered something incoherently.

"Pretty good, hey?" he went on. "Somethin' diff'rent from the reg'lar run of graveyard po'try, don't you think?"

"Yes, decidedly different," I agreed.

"Wrote 'em ever' one myself. That's my name there—Chauncey Heath." He drew his bent old frame up proudly. "You've heard of men with private graveyards. I'm one of 'em, only I'm not a 'bad man.' I don't go blusterin' around the settlements braggin' about the men I've killed and lookin' for more trouble. This graveyard's really private. You're the first man to get here alive.

"You see, I started this graveyard so's I could give my fancy free rein in the way of epitaphs. I used to live down there in Tucson, but they wouldn't use none of the verses I wrote to be put on the tombstone. Said they didn't show proper respect to the dead and I was crazy. I told 'em it was time to change the style in epitaphs, but they couldn't see it that way. Take this next one, for instance. It's better'n any 'Here lieth Timothy Cobb, born so and so died so and so, may he rest in peace!' Just read it."

The epitaph he pointed out ran as follows:

"Here lies Tim Cobb of Rhyolite,
Who slept in Tucson overnight.
His rest was so disturbed, they say,
His hotel bill he wouldn't pay.
And so I've laid him here to sleep,
And ask the Lord above to keep An eye on this here burial ground
And see that Tim is sleeping sound."

I decided not to be too critical, and praised the specimen in the most flattering terms I could command.

"Magnificent, Mr. Heath," I told him. "It's a pity these epitaphs of yours are hidden away out here in the mountains."

He seemed pleased, and urged me to read the inscription above the next grave.

"Here lies Jim Clark within the lap of earth,
A man who never knew what ore was worth.
He couldn't tell a piece of copper glance
Or sulphide from the rivets in his pants.
But now he has been laid away to snore
Where mines and ore will trouble him no more."

"I think that's about as good as anything I ever did," my host informed me. "This one is shorter, but it's pretty good, too."

"George Johnson was a most unworldly man,
Who smoked upon the after-mealtime plan.
In his wife's eyes, to smoke was nigh a crime;
Now, happy man! he's smoking all the time."

I made some more complimentary remarks.

"Who were these men buried here?" I asked.

"Most of 'em was prospectors, with a few cowboys in the bunch. I didn't know 'em all. Whenever I did I put the name in the epitaph."

"But how did you happen to get hold of the corpses?"

"I made 'em corpses."

"You made them corpses? Good God! You don't mean that you killed them?"

"Of course," he replied, regarding me as a parent might regard a child asking absurd questions. "Shot 'em all when they wasn't lookin'."

"But why did you kill them?"

"So's they could have decent epitaphs. A man never knows what kind of epitaph he's goin' to be buried under. Any of these fellers here might have died alone on the desert, away from anywhere, as prospectors often do, or died in some town where they'd have just put up a board with his name and the date of his death on it. The board would rot down in a year or two, and nobody'd ever know whether any one was buried there or not. But these epitaphs will last forever, even if not many folks stray this way to see 'em."

He went mumbling on, but I did not hear him. The idea flashed across my mind that he might put me under one of his epitaphs. My brain worked swiftly. I decided to ignore the possibility that I might be added to his collection, and perhaps it would not occur to his insane brain.

"How many men have you buried here?" I asked when he ceased his mumbling.

"Seventeen; the one I got this mornin' makes eighteen. You'll make nineteen."

I was already marked as a victim! He told me of my impending doom as though it was a matter of merely passing interest to me.

"It's not often I get two in one day," he remarked with a cackle that sent chills up and down my spine. "This is a lucky day for both of us, young feller. I promise you I'll fix you up the best epitaph I know how. Say, how'd you like to have me write it and show it to you before I stand you up against the cliff and put you in shape to fill a nice little grave?"

I am not ashamed to admit that I was trembling violently. It was with the greatest difficulty that I controlled my voice, but I concluded that my one chance was to turn his mind away from myself, for I was unarmed, and did not care to risk a sudden leap and struggle to obtain his gun. He kept too far away and watched me too closely for that.

"You say that you got another man this morning?" I questioned. "Who was he?"

"I don't know his name, but I've seen him over at Globe. He's in the sack back there. Come on and take a look. Maybe you know him."

I followed Heath along to the end of the row of graves. There lay a huge canvas sack. A human hand extended from the mouth.

The old lunatic picked up one end of the sack and the body of a man rolled out upon the ground.

"My God!" I exclaimed in horror. "It's George Simons."

"Glad you know his name. I'll work it into his epitaph. Friend of yours?"

"He was my guide," I replied as I gazed upon the dead face of old George. I had left him less than two hours before, at our camp in the cañon below, while I went to search for mineral specimens.

"He never knew what hit him," commented Heath. "Got him in the back of the head." With an effort he turned the body over and showed me a neat, round hole.

"Big fellow," said the graveyard proprietor. "I'm not so young and spry as I used to be, and it certainly was a job to drag him up here. Guess I'll start work on his epitaph. No, I'll write yours first. This feller can wait."

"I am unarmed," I told him as calmly as I could.

"So much the better. You can't start any fight at the last minute. And I'll take good care that you don't get hold of this rifle, young feller."

"Don't you intend to give me a chance?" I burst out. "Are you going to shoot me down like a dog?"

"Oho! Is that the way you feel about it? Wait till I finish your epitaph and you'll want to get under it right away."

"There are other things in this world besides epitaphs. I have a wife and baby back in New York."

Though I knew him to be a madman, I was pleading with him—pleading for my life, while my heart was thumping like mad. Outwardly I was still calm.

"It isn't square," I went on. "You're not even giving me a gambler's chance."

"I'm doing you a favor," he said with a queer little laugh.

"I hate to accept such a favor from a total stranger, and I'm afraid my wife and boy won't regard my murder as a favor to them."

A different look came into his eyes. "I had a wife once, and a boy—a girl, too," he said musingly. "But they're dead now. They wouldn't even let me put decent epitaphs on their tombstones."

He sat down upon a boulder, and it was a full minute before he spoke again.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," he said. "I'll leave it to you to save yourself for your wife and little boy. I'll give you half an hour. If you can write a better epitaph for me in that time than I can write for you, I'll let you go back to them."

"But who will be judge?"

"I will."

"But you—you are an interested party."

"I promise you I'll tote fair. Besides, I'm the only man in the world makin' a specialty of epitaph writin', and the only one fit to judge in such a contest. Now get busy; time begins." He drew out a massive silver watch and laid it upon the rock at his side. From his hip pocket he produced a tattered memorandum-book and a stub of a pencil.

"What's your name?"

"Trevor Kirke."

"All right. Got pencil and paper?"

I nodded and took out my note-book. And there, for thirty minutes, I fought as strange a duel as was ever fought by man. My chance of victory was slim indeed. I was not a writer, yet I was pitted against a lunatic who thought himself the greatest epitaph writer in the world and who was, moreover, to judge my effort. I don't know how I concentrated my mind on silly doggerel at such a time as that, but I did my best and had just finished when Heath warned me that time was up.

"This is your epitaph," he told me. "Short but expressive:

"His name was Trevor Kirke, he was not afraid of work;
He strolled this way these epitaphs to see.
But it pretty much amazed him and it very nearly fazed him
When he learned that he was soon a corpse to be."

"How's that?" he asked when he had finished.

"It's—it's all right, I suppose."

"Now read my epitaph," he ordered with a boisterous laugh.

I obeyed. This is what I had written:

"Here lies a great reformer—
A man unknown to fame—
But now that he has left us,
All earth resounds his name.
He taught us of the folly—
Rank folly, yes! and worse!—
Of decorating tombstones
With gloomy words and verse.
He taught us to be cheerful
In writing epitaphs;
To change our graveyard sobbing
For jokes and quips and laughs."

He mused a moment after I had concluded. I waited in terrible suspense. His decision might mean life or death to me.

"You win," he said suddenly. "I didn't think you had it in you. Bury me right there, up against the cliff like the others, and put that above."

He stood up, squinted down the barrel of his rifle, pressed upon the trigger with a stick he held in his hand, and fell dead at my feet with a bullet through his brain.

Beautifying Army Posts.

Not to be behind Manila in its plan to beautify the city by straightening its lines, planting shade trees and other tropical foliage and converting its waste spaces into well-ordered and beautifying parks, the military authorities now propose to direct their efforts to improving and beautifying the various posts and garrisons throughout the islands, so that visitors to the Philippines will be impressed with the beauty and wealth of tropical foliage that satisfies the eye and pleases the senses, not only at Manila, but in other parts of the islands as well.

Some steps have been taken in this direction already, many shade trees and other foliage having been planted at the various posts, particularly at Fort McKinley, Jossman and Zambanga, and arrangements have been made for a study of horticulture by a non-commissioned officer of the army at the Manila nurseries, which knowledge thus gained will be disseminated in an effort to make the various garrisons throughout the islands as attractive as possible.

The city nurseries are doing their part toward the work of beautifying the islands and are constantly growing those palms, ferns and other tropical plants which form an important part in the work. Many plants have been sent to the different military posts, and many more are being grown with all the care and skill known to the science of horticulture. To this institution the military authorities, through the courtesy of the Municipal Board, will send a non-commissioned officer from the garrison of the Coast Artillery at Corregidor whose duty it shall be to study horticulture and the methods employed at the city nurseries.

The city nurseries are raising thousands of plants which are destined at some future time to adorn the city parks and military posts throughout the islands. The different hot houses are now filled with Philippine plants of all hues and degrees of beauty and age which are taken out as occasion requires and transplanted in uninviting spots all over the city, making them restful to the eye and a welcome addition to those little oases which tend to make the city attractive.—[Manila Times.

Superstitions About Animals.

"The Natives of the Island of Bali in the Dutch East Indies have peculiar superstitions about animals," says a writer in the September Wide World Magazine. "Dogs, for instance, are never destroyed, and, much to the annoyance of the European residents, the pariahs are allowed to increase to an unlimited extent. According to Balinese ideas, dogs are the reincarnation of those of their poorer brethren who were buried after death instead of being cremated, which is the more luxurious method of getting rid of the dead. To kill a dog, therefore, is as great a sin as killing a poor fellow-creature. With regard to the tiger, the natives believe that that animal is also the reincarnation of another caste of the community, and nothing will induce them to shoot it.

"They tell, with great impressiveness, the story of an old Balinese man who once came face to face with a tiger in the jungle. Gazing at the monster fixedly he addressed it as follows: 'What have I done to thee that thou lookest so ferociously at me? Have I ever done thee any harm; and art thou not my brother clad in the skin of a tiger? I pray thee go thy way in peace, and leave me alone.' Thereupon, it is said, the tiger turned tail and walked away majestically into the depths of the jungle."

Just for Fun.

A Rhode Island farmer set a bantam hen on fourteen turkey eggs, and great was the scandal thereof throughout the neighborhood. Friends from far and near dropped in for to see and for to admire the freakish feat.

"Sa-ay, Silas," asked envious Hiram Haggers, 'haow many turkeys d'yew cal-late ter git outer them aigs?"

"Oh, shucks!" Silas answered. "I ain't cal'latin' t' git many turkeys. I jest admire t' see that pesky little critter 'a-spreadin' herself!"—[Harper's Weekly.

Irwin Makes It Right.

THE SILENCE OF THE GRAHAMS, AND HOW IT WAS BROKEN.

By a Special Contributor.

"IT doesn't seem possible for two people to live in the same house for years, or even months or weeks, and not speak to each other—especially father and child. You must be queer people, though I always thought you were amiable," said Lorena Clark, as she and Margery Graham sat by the seaside.

"It's the Scotch stubbornness, I suppose," answered Margery. "I get it from him. But I was not to blame, I'm sure. I was only a child, and he was unjust and cruel. He killed all of my love for him. He knows that he was wrong, but he'll never say so. If he would, I would forgive and, perhaps, forget; but I never can till then."

"But he's your father, and he seems to me like a noble man."

"He is, in most things. I cannot but respect him, when I see how other men honor him, and sometimes I feel how I might have loved him. But he is so set when his mind is made up, and narrow-minded. Perhaps I am, too, but it was so unkind, so unjust! I have never told you all about it; I seldom mention it. But you're in our home now, and I'll tell you, then you'll understand.

"When I was born, father was very much disappointed because I was a girl. I don't know that he ever loved me much. But he was not unkind as a rule, though demanding perfect obedience. My mother was gentle and loving, and my life was very pleasant till little Irwin was born, when I was 10 years old.

"How proud father and all of us were of that boy! I didn't notice that father was partial to him, for he was our baby and I loved him dearly. But I know now that he never fondled or humored me as he did him.

"We hadn't much money then, so mother didn't have help all the time, and I had to take a good deal of care of him after he was a year old.

"Father would not let me cross him in anything, and he soon knew it and as he grew older became a real little tyrant. Mother was sorry about it, but father's word was law.

"I never outwardly rebelled but once, and that time none of us will ever forget. Irwin was 4 years old then, and I was 14. It had been warm all day, and he had been peevish and willful. I was tired out trying to amuse him, and disappointed because I had been kept from a party that afternoon because he didn't want me to leave him.

"About 8 o'clock mother told me to take him upstairs and put him to bed. He'd been romping with father and was tired and sleepy.

"'Come on, Brother,' said I, holding out my hand for him to take."

"'No, sister carry me,' he demanded.

"'I'm too tired tonight,' I answered; 'you are a big boy now, you know.'

"'No, I's papa's baby.'

"'You'd better walk upstairs,' said mother.

"'No, no, sister carry me,' insisted the little tyrant.

"'No——' I began, for I was very tired, when father said:

"'Margery, carry that sleepy baby upstairs.'

"'Father,' I answered with unusual firmness,' he can walk better than I can carry him tonight. I'm so tired.'

"'Don't dare to argue with me; do as I bid you,' he angrily replied.

"'I cannot tonight,' I answered.

Mother trembled; but I didn't seem to care for the storm I'd raised. Father didn't say another word, but, going from the room, soon returned with a strap. Then my Scotch blood was up. I hadn't been whipped for years. Mother said:

"'You must obey, my child. Do so quickly.'

"I didn't answer her. Coming to me, father said:

"'Just once more—carry that child upstairs.'

"'I will not,' I answered; 'I'm not his slave.'

"Then it was Tartar against Tartar. He had the same blood that he had aroused in me. He struck me once, twice, three times. I gritted my teeth in pain, but didn't make a sound.

"'Will you mind?' he asked. Mother urged me to do so, but—'I will not,' I said again.

"'Hugh, don't strike her so,' mother pleaded. He took me into another room and locked the door.

"Mother took the frightened child away from the sound of it all, and he was soon asleep. When she came back, I was crying with pain, but not submitting. She stood at the door and begged him to stop. He told her to go away. As I look back, I believe that is the hardest of all to forgive. Just think—a big man refusing the heartbreaking request of a mother because he was stronger, and could! I did not realize her suffering, then. I was a child. I only felt that he was cruel and unjust, and I wouldn't give in. I never did. He whipped me till mother threatened to go for an officer, and—he was tired out.

"Oh, I carried marks on my back and legs, but the marks on my mind and heart were worse. I vowed that night I'd never speak to him again till he'd asked my forgiveness.

"Mother tenderly put me to bed and cried over my bruises. For her sake, then, I was sorry for my stubbornness.

"I was sick the next day. On the following day when we met at dinner father looked at me coldly and said nothing. Baby kept up a chatter, and perhaps my silence wasn't noticed.

"The next day father asked me for something. I got it, but did not speak. They expected some constraint, but they didn't realize my determination. Not long after, he asked me a question. I didn't answer. He asked me again, I said:

"'Mother, will you please tell him that I will not speak to him.'

"'Oh, Margery, don't!' she cried.

"He turned white with anger, but believe that he realized then that I was 'a chip from the old block.'

"He commenced: 'I'll——'

"'No,' interrupted mother, 'you'll never strike her again, Hugh.'

"He knew that her mother love would protect me at any cost. He left the house without saying anything more.

"He has spoken to me a few times since, but as I never replied, he quit it, excepting to tell me to do things. I obeyed always, silently.

"It was all so painful to mother that she finally sent me to my aunt, with whom I've lived most of the time since. She died recently, you know.

"Of course, I wouldn't let father support me after I was grown. I wanted to get work in a store, but auntie insisted on giving me a good education, and then kept me as her companion and nurse, and finally left me all her money.

"Father seemed to realize his foolish idolatry of Irwin after our trouble, and became firm with him. He is a real good boy now. He is 12 years old, and so manly for his age!"

"Well, it's very sad," said Lorena; "but your father is an old man, Margery, and he is your father. I'm sure that I have seen him look fondly toward you, and so proudly when you sing and play so beautifully. I think that he wants his daughter's companionship and affection. And it makes your mother so sad to have it this way."

"Please don't plead, Lorena. Mother, auntie and others gave it up long ago. I don't think that he cares, anyhow."

Just then, Irwin came running toward the girls. He was a healthy, happy, freckled-faced boy—the light of the home. His only grief was the family trouble. He had tried, more than once, to make things different since Margery had come home this last time. But he had been decidedly forbidden by both never to mention it again.

To his mother he went, in tears.

"Oh, mother," he cried, "it was all my fault, and I want to make it all right again!"

"Pray God you may do so," she answered.

When he wasn't thinking of that, he was an active fun-loving boy.

As the girls were sitting on the sand, he came up to them, his face beaming with anticipated pleasure.

"Oh, sister," he cried, putting an arm around her, "Mr. Babbit says that he'll take me with him fishing tomorrow. Won't you ask fa—I mean, get mother to ask father to let me go?"

"I'll see about it," she answered, smiling at his eager face; "but you mustn't hope too much."

It had long been his desire to go fishing in a boat. He was sure that it would be more fun than fishing from a pier.

Margery spoke about it to her mother that evening. Mrs. Graham and her husband talked it over later. They felt sure that Mr. Babbit was trustworthy, "and he's old enough te be careful. He's been wanting to go so long."

So he started, very happy, the next morning, Margery and Lorena going to the beach with him, where the fisherman was waiting with his boat. Irwin ran and jumped into it, but sat very still while it was being launched through the breakers.

"Don't get seasick," called Margery. He couldn't hear her, but he waved his hat in a gay good-by.

The girls sat down on the sand to watch the fishermen and the bathers. Suddenly some one cried: "Oh, look!" and, looking, Margery shrieked: "Irwin's overboard!" and started excitedly into the ocean.

"Don't!" Lorena cried, holding her back. "See, the fisherman is swimming for him, and another boat will go. They will get him."

"Oh, he'll drown, our boy, our little boy!" Margery moaned, trembling in agony as they watched with terrible suspense. The undertow was strong and seemed bound to carry him out to sea. At last the swimmer got him, but he struggled so that it seemed for awhile that they both would drown. Then the rescuing boat reached them, and they were saved.

"He's dead! he's dead!' cried Margery when they lifted Irwin's limp form from the boat.

"No, dear, they know how to save him, comforted Lorena.

"I must get father," said Margery, running home as she'd never ran before.

Their cottage was not far from the beach. Dr. Graham was sitting on the porch, enjoying his holiday, when Margery came running to him, pale and trembling.

"Father, father—Irwin!' she gasped.

He arose quickly and took her gently by the arm.

"Margery, what is it? Where is Irwin?" he asked.

"Oh, father, he's drowned! You must come. You can bring him to."

Then hand in hand they ran to the beach and to their boy.

"Make way!" Dr. Graham cried; "he's my boy."

Irwin still seemed lifeless. But his father knew that it might not be so. He moved all others away and he and the sister worked with him, moving his arms and legs, rolling and pounding him, and pulling his tongue in and out.

"It's no use," some one said after a while, and another physician said gently:

"He's dead, friend."

The father spoke only to tell Margery what to do. Minute after minute went by, then an hour—two hours—and at last they were rewarded by a faint sigh from the white lips. How their hearts beat with hope, and how joyfully they renewed their efforts! Finally carried his son home, pale and weak, but happy sister followed with her friend.

The mother had known nothing of it all brought her boy home, and he was all right.

As he lay on the lounge, the others around ing her about it, he suddenly raised himself claimed joyously:

"Mother, look! They're talking together! got his arm around sister. I did do it, Mother, make it all right!"

We and Our Neighbors.

AN AFTERNOON CALL FROM MRS. UPTODATE.

By a Special Contributor.

It was a warm day. By that strange fatality which seems to attend me of late, I had been without a maid for a month. Usually that is a small matter to Billy and me, for my work is light, and laundries and delicatessen stores abound; and, not being a model, the accumulation of a little dust does not upset me as it otherwise might. So we had enjoyed the last few weeks greatly.

This day, however, had been an unusually busy one. I had found so much to see to that I had been kept on the go during the entire morning, and was about to keep at it in the afternoon, when I was rescued from such unusual activity by the appearance of a messenger boy.

It was a special delivery from Billy asking me to dine downtown with him and to see Carter in "Adrea" afterward. I abandoned at once all my well-laid plans for a general cleaning, and began to hum lightly, planning my dress for the evening; actually writing my name idly in the dust upon the library table, as I did so, my mind busy with the more important questions of whether I should like the play and whether Billy would remember to see about the seats in time.

Having settled these matters to my satisfaction, I determined to rest during the afternoon, so as to be fresh as a lark for the evening. After taking a plunge I slipped on one of my house gowns and prepared to take an old-fashioned nap.

Just as I was drifting into dreamland, I heard the bell. Instead of remaining quiet, as I should have done, I jumped up and peeped out at the window that opened upon the porch, and there, in all her glory, I beheld Mrs. Uptodate.

That I saw her did not matter. What made it a serious situation for me was that she saw me. I was, of course, obliged to let her in, which I did with all the very grace of which a half-asleep, disarranged person is capable, heartily wishing meanwhile that either she or I was in Jericho.

To understand my feelings, one must fully understand Mrs. Uptodate. She is very wealthy, most exclusive, and exceedingly fashionable. If you add that she is rather inoffensive and usually pleasant, you have given as good a description of her as you well can, her only fault lying in the fact that she is hopelessly modern and up-to-date.

There are some people with whom you are at your best and in whose society all the little things of life are of no account, while there are others with whom you are utterly bored and unhappy and your trials appear multiplied and magnified.

Those people have usually a small soul and a narrow mind. You would never think of asking their advice or of following their example on any vital question whatever; they excite neither your love nor your admiration; and yet, like the wasp, their sting is sharp, and although not deadly in its results, still it can make you, for the time being, utterly miserable; and the worst of it is that you don't know why.

Mrs. Uptodate was like that. If you had a new hat, it was quite pretty and satisfying until she cast her eyes upon it, when it became common and unbecoming. If you had a gown, of whose beauty and worth you were almost certain, it suddenly looked tawdry and cheap as she examined it critically.

She had a manner and way of depreciating everything and every one that was especially irritating, and, after a careful study of her personality, I became convinced that it had its birth, not in false pride of birth or wealth nor in ill-nature, but in the fact that her soul and body was given up to the pursuit of fashion and up-to-dateness.

Her gowns, not always becoming, are always in the very latest style. Her hats, her boots, her lingerie are of the most advanced pattern. Her hair, never worn the same way long enough for you to associate the mode of wearing it with her personality, is absolutely in accord with the latest Parisian vogue. Her cards, her note paper, her toilet accessories, her very existence, indeed, are regulated by the most exclusive authority. Her household is like her—no repose, no settled domesticity, no evidence of individual tastes or inherited tendencies.

When that most powerful potentate, Queen Fashion, lays down the laws, they were implicitly obeyed, and as she is a most whimsical and arbitrary creature, it happened that what was considered good form on yesterday was decidedly passé today, thus necessitating constant change.

Whenever Billy and I find ourselves getting rusty socially, we accept a dinner invitation from the Uptodates, which they are good enough to send us regularly, for some unknown reason, although we are far from being fashionable.

With seeming alacrity we accept the same, although in our inner souls we regard it in much the same way as an evening spent with Mr. and Mrs. Spicandspan.

We can never feel at home there, for as the furnishings are ever changing, their home constantly presents a new aspect, and Billy and I stand looking about us in consternation, as we follow the Japanese butler (the latest in butlers) into the drawing-room, wondering fearfully whether we have not gotten into the wrong house.

Now, in our house each piece of furniture has its own use and place, and is usually bought with an eye to lasting an ordinary lifetime, Billy generally grabbing the receipted bill of its sale, with the remark: "Thank goodness, that won't have to be bought again."

As to change, he has stated on various occasions that he likes to have the furniture remain in the same place, "so that a fellow may find his way about in the dark without barking his shins," a rather vulgar and suspicious statement, as I have frequently repeated.

Still, thinking of Sam Weller and the quiet life, and incidentally pleasing myself as well, I have always gracefully acquiesced.

When we do reach the drawing-room, after gazing around us on the way, as though we were at a World's Fair, a new difficulty presents itself. Our salutation of the Uptodates, whom we find at last (and they are the only things that look familiar,) is apt to be an awkward affair as we are never sure of the latest way of managing it.

Sometimes it is a very hearty, effusive exhibition, which so surprises Billy that he becomes quite boisterous and I am obliged to give him a secret pinch. Again it is very cold and stately, accompanied by a very elevated handshake, which has a tendency to reduce us to a terrific state of depression, as we think of that awful ten-course dinner, in addition, awaiting us in the dining-room.

I am aware, as I sit opposite Billy, that his evening clothes are terribly shabby, and that my one dinner gown, which has cost me a pretty penny, is decidedly passé and horrid. I am about to indulge in a rare moment of discontent and envy, when I look again at my dear boy, who doesn't give a rap for his clothes and who is looking positively quite radiant over the prospect of an exceptionally good dinner, for they do certainly have the finest "spreads," to use a Billyism, that one can imagine. As I look at Billy, I forget all my troubles and smile in ready sympathy.

Everything is perfectly elegant and entirely new. There is a bewildering array of strange-looking forks and spoons, which we stare at in dismay and count every once in a while, to see if they tally with the number of courses disposed of and to come.

I never feel at ease until the coffee spoon appears in the near distance, it being a kind of protection against any further surprises; while my worthy husband says that "once he has passed the fish knife, the rest is easy sailing."

There is one necessary article that never seems to appear in the same way twice, its variableness being something that Billy and I usually toss up a dime over before we leave our home. "Very conducive to gambling—that bread is," to quote my partner in this evil habit.

So many things are served from the sideboard that formerly graced the table, and there are so many ways of serving the things that do rest there, that we are in a state of perpetual unrest and surprise, and are extremely glad when the tiresome affair is well over.

As we leave the Uptodates stand about four feet from the door of the drawing-room and wave us an airy adieu, leaving Billy to get into his coat with the butler's assistance, although we have known one another for years and do not demand any such formality.

I am seized with a fear that Billy, being absent-minded, will think he is on the Pullman and wait to be brushed; but at last we both get out safely and laugh all the way home.

So it was this modern friend that sat opposite me on Friday of last week. She was a perfect picture of exquisite up-to-dateness, from the crown of her much-be-coiffured head, with her hat at just the right angle, to the tip of her patent-leather boots, which peeped out at the exact and proper place of the folds of her lustrous gown.

I leaned back in my chair. I liked to look at her, but I did not then, nor do I now, wish to be like her. I wonder if she ever relaxes.

"I have been reading 'Galicia,'" she said, in her pretty, half-affected society drawl. "I suppose you have read it."

"No," I answered indifferently. "I do not pretend to keep up with the popular novels."

I knew at once that "Galicia" must be the latest "best seller."

"I should think," she says quickly, "that a person of your literary inclinations would find it necessary to keep up with the times."

"But hardly with the sensations? There are several reasons why I seldom read any work at the time of its publication," I reply, feeling that here, at least, I am on my own ground. "One is that I have not the time, my spare moments being devoted to literature of established merit, a great deal of which I am unfamiliar with. Another is the certainty that I am likely to find time to do so, should the new work be found worthy of survival."

She lifted her eyebrows. Literary arguments are not in her line. She glanced toward the piano.

"Have you that new waltz by Strauss?" she asked.

That it was the very latest musical sensation I hadn't a doubt, but I was forced to acknowledge that as yet I had never even heard of it.

She looked slightly bored.

"Have you seen Carter in 'Adrea?'" was her next venture.

"We are going tonight," I said rapturously. "Billy has just phoned me to dine downtown and run over to the theater afterward."

"Oh, tonight," a trifle indifferently. "We went on Monday. You know we are always first-nighters."

Now, although I have always looked upon the first night of a play as "trying it on the dog," this last remark irritated me for some occult reason.

"Come over and play cards with us some evening," she said, as she rose to leave.

"Thank you. What are you playing this season?" I asked unguardedly.

She looked amazed. "Why, bridge, of course."

Of course. If I were only well posted as to "the latest" of everything she would not need to answer at all.

So it went on, and I sent up a fervent ejaculation of thankfulness when at last I saw her seated in her perfectly-appointed carriage, behind a perfectly up-to-date coachman.

I was angry clear through as I went down to meet Billy, and only felt better when I caught sight of his beaming face in the La Salle-street depot.

At the "States," where we dined, I forgot all my irritation as I heard Billy order all the things I like best, so very material am I and so susceptible to a good dinner.

Our appetites and tastes are just the opposite of what one would suppose them to be. For instance, I am what Billy calls "a hearty feeder." I like steaks and chops and relishes, while he prefers salads and light entrées, and has a terrible tooth for sweets; so that the waiters invariably place my order before him, and vice versa.

When Billy ordered a rare porterhouse steak, French fried potatoes, corn fritters and a perminto salad for me, and chicken croquettes and a cheese omelette for himself, the man looked slightly surprised.

"He thinks you are in training," I whispered.

"He must think that you are a piano mover," answered my lesser half, as he surveyed my dinner with a superior smile.

"Who do you think called today?" I asked, as we were alone. "You'll never guess."

"Teddy Roosevelt," said Billy glibly.

"A much greater personage," I said loftily.

"Billy Bryan," replied my irrepressible.

"Tut, tut," I said meaningly. "No one so human or unconventional."

"Humph! Did Cora Uptodate inflict herself upon you this lovely day?"

"She did," I sigh.

"The noblest Roman of them all," murmured Billy. "What's the latest?"

As usual, I repeated for his benefit all that had transpired that afternoon, over which we laugh a great deal; while later I forget all about her under the witching spell of Carter's wonderful art, as she lent her genius to the old-fashioned things of life—the loves and hates, the ambitions and sorrows of humanity, that seem never to grow old-fashioned or out of date.

IF GOD FORGOT.

If God forgot to wake the earth
  At time of coming dawn,
And we all waited, though in vain,
  A new day to be born,

While darkness still dwelt king of all,
  No sun's rays vanished night,
How men would rave and be afraid
  And pray for day and light.

If God forgot to send the air
  To fill our lungs anew,
With stifling cries we all would die,
  For none ought else could do.

And if the grass refused to grow,
  While flowers all withered dry,
From earth would rise petitions high
  With longing, yearning cry.

If God forgot to send the rain
  And every stream should fail,
With rivers and the ocean wide,
  Then how mankind would wail!

If crops all died and cattle fell,
  While sickness spread death's pall,
Then prayers and wails and promises
  Would rise from the hearts of all.

But just because we know God's laws
  Have never failed us yet,
We go our ways, while most of us,
  His loving care forget.

ELEANOR L. OWENS.

Leopard Protected by Bees.

"If the lair of a leopard is known," says a writer in the September Wide World Magazine, "stones will generally dislodge the lurker. I recall one occasion when a leopard was supposed to be located in a cave near camp. The guns were placed around in positions commanding the exit, and a few stones were then thrown in. There was no result at first, but as more and larger stones crashed in, there came a faint humming, and then a roar like the sea under the cliffs. In a moment the air above the cave's entrance grew dark with—bees! As one man, sportsmen and gun bearers fled for the camp. A few were slightly stung before they could reach their tents and pull the flaps over the entrances, which the bees for some time besieged. Incredible though it may sound, it is the truth that, although the camp was full of native servants, horses, etc., none of those who had remained behind, and were not concerned in the attack on the bees' cave, were stung! It was a considerable time before the bees beat a retreat, but during all the time that they stayed in the camp it was the tents of their aggressors exclusively round which they angrily buzzed."

Expert Opinion.

"Why do you propose to call yourself king?"

A royal flush overspread the brow of the Prince of Montenegro. "I have here," he replied, "the cards of the heads of reigning families."

He shuffled the cards nervously. "Observe for yourself that there are too many knaves in the pack," he added.—[Philadelphia Ledger

Gen. Baden Powell in the uniform of England's new juvenile army.

LONDON, Aug. 19.—Ever since the Boer War, England's greatest living general, Lord Roberts, has been crying in the wilderness in season and out of season—until he has come to be looked on as something of a crank—for the awakening of England to the danger of invasion. Others joined in the cry after a while, but nothing much came of it, the average British business man's view being that he was quite safe behind the navy, and that it was rather annoying to be bothered and taxed just to gratify the whims of folk who didn't happen to have anything else to do except excite themselves over their own fads.

Probably nothing much would have happened yet if an even greater man than Lord Roberts had not thrust himself into the British consciousness. That was the Kaiser. It was not until about a year ago that the German scare became noticeable on what is always the safest, surest sign of the national pulse—the casual talk of the hum-drum men in the second and third-class compartments of suburban trains on their way to their offices and shops in the morning. If there is anything on that is big enough to withdraw their attention from the doings of local cricket and football heroes, it's serious. I suspect that it would pay every government to establish phonographs in the suburban trains of rival nations and thus get records of genuine popular opinion worth far more than the reports from the embassies of the views of the top layers of society.

Well, as I was saying, this talk suddenly focused on Germany, and the results show what a difference it makes in the intensity of feeling whether you discuss foreign rivals in general, or some one rival in particular. Rightly or wrongly, three ideas became widespread. They were only vaguely shadowed in the newspapers, but the M.S.T. (i. e., the Man on the Suburban Train,) voiced them bluntly. First, the Germans as a nation would like to humiliate the English; second, that they are plotting against English trade, the English army and the English navy, night and day, scientifically, and with diabolical persistence, inventing monstrous and ingenious engines of war of which the British government will have no warning till it's too late; third, that although nobody wants war, yet if it could be managed so that it wouldn't inconvenience the M.S.T., it would be a good thing to give Germany a licking quick before she gets much stronger, and before England degenerates much faster—for the M.S.T. now holds that England is not quite what she once was.

The results of all this may make a lot of difference in unwritten pages of English history.

Perhaps the most interesting development has been the sudden craze let loose by Gen. Baden Powell when he invented the Boy Scouts. Today there are 200,000 of them in England, and the movement has spread to the colonies and to the continent. It is estimated that "B. P." now has about 300,000 juvenile followers scattered over the world.

No game ever caught on here so rapidly or so completely. Within a month or two after Gen. "B. P." launched his scheme, parties of small boys in uniform could be seen in every park and open space in the suburbs of London and every other large town in the country drilling and scouting. The chance to be real frontiersmen appealed to the boys, and they flocked into the new organization. "B. P." has confessed since that he had no idea he was starting so big a thing.

But he has risen to the occasion, and he is now at the head of an organization that will have a far-reaching effect on the military future of England. The boy scouts have familiarized not only the boys, but their parents, with the military uniform, and there is not the shadow of a doubt that many a parent who would have opposed his boy joining the army or the territorial force a year ago, is converted today to the idea of military service for everybody.

The boy scout is trained to take care of himself in the open, to read maps and to observe the country, and all the little signs which are so useful to a frontiersman or to a scout in war. The boys wear a uniform consisting of a khaki shirt, loose blue running breeches, and a slouch hat. They carry a long pole which may be used as the backbone of a tent, as part of a stretcher for a wounded comrade, or with a flag tied at one end for signaling. The scouts are organized in patrols of half a dozen to a dozen members, with an older boy who is known as a scout master in charge, and they are expected to render military obedience to him. Every fine afternoon they are taken out in the fields and woods and trained in the art of scouting and the open air life.

But the crowning glory of the scout's life comes once a year, when a few hundred of the best, chosen for their proficiency in the arts of the frontier, are taken into camp somewhere far away from the cities, and live for a fortnight under the command of 'B. P." himself. The defender of Mafeking against the Boers knows the British boy as few other men do, and to his young followers he is something more than human when he sits with them round the camp fire and tells them stories of his campaigns in Africa.

It is no use saying that the tendency of the boy is not military. A recent canvas of several hundr scouts showed that 75 per cent. of them intende join either the territorial or the regular army they are old enough, 10 per cent. intended to go in navy and most of the rest were looking forward life in the colonies, where they will be able to good use the lessons of self-help and woodcraft they have learned from "B. P." and his helpers.

The fever for scouting has even spread to the and J. A. Kyle, the secretary of the national org tion, told me a few days ago that he had been whelmed with applications to form patrols of girl

"We are now working on a scheme," he said, "to in the girls, too, and put their enthusiasm to some Broadly speaking, we will teach them ambulance first aid to the injured, nursing, camp cooking things like these at which a woman can be of real either in war or peace.

"We are trying also to work out a scheme to an eye on the boys and help them on in life. We pect to pass a good many of them into the army navy, and we are now arranging to get in touch the colonial agencies so that we may be able to our boys advantageously in the colonies. So far, have been able to make use of all the boys over 18 have passed through our hands as scout masters, obviously we cannot continue to do that long."

The boys of the upper classes, too, have caught military fever. All the big public schools, like Harrow, Winchester and St. Paul's, have had the corps for years, but membership was optional, and boys as a rule preferred cricket and football to sol ing. Now, however, the boy who doesn't do his and shooting practice is boycotted, and the crack has ousted the fast bowler and the goal-keeper their position as the school heroes. Mr. Haldane, War Minister, has been clever enough to turn the spirit to advantage, and has recognized the school companies as officers' training corps and prescri course of instruction for them.

But it is not only the boys that have been in with the military spirit. Mr. Haldane's scheme territorial army which every one predicted would ghastly failure is a brilliant success. The busines Minister abolished the old volunteers to whom s ing was more or less of a picnic to be undertaken in fair weather and when everything was comfor and substituted for them a branch of the regular under regular military discipline, and liable to be on for active service when needed. Every one pre that the young Briton would not volunteer under conditions, but every one was wrong. In less t year the establishment of 300,000 men was pract complete, and there are a number of regiment with long waiting lists.

But this is not all. Another movement inau by Lord Roberts has taken hold of the peopl wildfire, and it is safe to say that if England w vaded tomorrow by the Kaiser, William would b much surprised at the resistance he would meet This is the civilian rifle-club movement which organized nationally, and has about 200,000 m These men practice daily or weekly with light and most of them are now accomplished mar Miniature ranges have been equipped in cellars the roofs of business buildings, and now ins spending the lunch hour chaffing the barmaid nearest beer house, the clerks and salesmen in the London wholesale houses spend the time shoot qualifying themselves to take their place in the of their country's defenders.

The military authorities, I am informed, are c ing a plan by which these riflemen may be rec as part of the country's defensive forces and uniform, or at least a badge. If something of th is not done and the riflemen turn out to meet the mans, if they ever do come, they will meet the the French franc tireurs. The War Office is alre ranging for a grant of ammunition to recognized and from this to formal recognition is a short ily-taken step.

To crown it all, Lord Roberts introduced in the of Lords a bill providing for universal militar ing for the youth of the country. Under it, eve duke's son and cook's son, between the ages of 30, would have to serve in the territorial ar months under canvas or in barracks the first y fifteen days each year for the three succeeding in addition to a certain number of drills every at regimental headquarters. The Rush Bearing.

An American traveling this summer in England chanced a few weeks ago on a quaint ceremony known as the rush bearing. The custom dates back to remote times, when the floors of dwellings and churches consisted of hard earth, which was covered with rushes.

Once a year the inhabitants of the towns and villages enjoyed the great ceremony of going in procession to the church to strew the floor with newly-cut rushes, and the little village of Grasmere, in the lake country, boasts of being the only place where the custom has an unbroken record of observance. There the festival is held once a year on the Saturday after St. Oswald's Day, the saint for whom the little church is named.

The American found the tiny village crowded with visitors and no lodgings to be had except at the bootmaker's, whose house and shop were separated from the small and ancient church only by a lawn and the winding stream Rothay.

The villagers combine the rushes—now no longer needed for a carpet—with wild flowers and make them into various forms suggesting Christian truths. In the late afternoon the children assemble with these designs and arrange them along the churchyard wall, where the villagers and hundreds from the surrounding country come to admire, or at least to study, the wonderful devices.

Moses in the bulrushes is still a leading favorite, and the visitor was privileged to view a little china Moses lying on a soft white bed in a nest of rushes. He says in the Outlook that the flaxen-haired baby carrying this marvelous exhibit had the honor later of leading the children in the May-pole procession, followed closely by a small girl led by the hand and bearing the serpent from the Garden. This device must have measured five feet, and as it was in spiral form its actual length could not have been less than twelve feet.

Saturday evening at 6:30, when the clergy and choir and band and children are arranged for the procession, the hymn of St. Oswald is sung, the band plays the century old "Rush Bearing March," and they parade the village with bells ringing and crowds following. On returning to the church, the garlands are hung about and a full choral evensong follows, with the rush bearers' hymn. On the following Monday all the decorations are removed to a neighboring field, where the May-pole is set up and a regular gala day enjoyed by the children.—[New York Sun.

A Trial by Rice.

They have peculiar methods of trying suspects in Bengal. One of these is called "Trial by Rice," says a writer in the September Wide World Magazine. After a priest had been consulted as to an auspicious day, every person suspected and those who were usually near the place at night, were ordered to be present at 10 o'clock that morning. On that date all turned up. First the people were made to sit in a semicircle, and a "plate" (a square of plantain leaf) was set before each. Then a priest walked up and down chanting and scattering flowers. These said flowers, by the way, must be picked by a Brahmin, and they must be those which are facing the sun. This ceremony over, one of the clerks went to each man and gave him about two ounces of dry raw rice and told him to chew it to a pulp. Then commenced what looked like a chewing match. After about ten minutes had elapsed, they were told to stop and eject it into the plantain leaf. All did so easily with the exception of three men. In the case of these three the chewed rice had in two cases become slightly moistened, but not sufficiently so to allow of its being easily ejected, and they had much ado to get rid of it. The third man had chewed his into flour and it came out as such, perfectly dry. One of these three men promptly commenced to cry and begged for mercy, confessing everything, and stating that man number three, who had acted as a kind of flour mill, was the chief instigator. It is a curious fact that fear, arising from an evil conscience, prevents saliva coming to the mouth, with the result described.

The Department of Agriculture is maintained by the United States, at an expense of $11,000,000 annually, to discover and teach improved methods of farming. Sometimes these institutes are sent on wheels; a railroad train is chartered and an entire equipment for demonstration purposes placed aboard, accompanied by horticulturists, entomologists and botanists. At each little station a halt is made while the lecturers from the rear platform address the crowd that gathers around. The Fool and His Money.

HILLARD'S MASTERPIECE FINDS THE BEST MARKET.

By a Special Contributor.

HILLARD was in great spirits. Asprawl in his easy chair, an evil-smelling pipe between his teeth, a disreputable carpet slipper dangling from one toe, he leaned back in a perfect abandon of well-being.

In one hand he held a check, the figures upon which would have caused most of his writer brethren to gulp with envy, and in the other, a letter from the Cycle Publishing Company. The Cycle Publishing Company offered the check—for so many thousand dollars—for the serial rights to Hillard's novel, "The Fool and His Money;" also, they would pay the usual royalties—so much per copy—for the privilege of publishing the story in book form after it had appeared in the magazine.

There was no doubt of it; "The Fool and His Money" was a masterpiece. Hillard had felt it from the first chapter, and now the Cycle people had confirmed his judgment by making an unprecedented offer. Success, Hillard thought, was the greatest thing in the world. It wasn't that he needed the money—already he enjoyed a comfortable income from his previous work, quite enough for one of his improvident, easy-going kind it was the compliment of his work that was beyond price, the acknowledgment of his fitness. Yes, success, which consisted of being fit, was the greatest thing in the world. It changed the complexion of everything. Staring out of his window at the passers-by, he noted, through his own pleased eyes, what a bright, pleasant-looking lot of people New York was filled with. He felt drawn toward all of them. Perhaps some of the very people now passing his window would one day read "The Fool and His Money," and feel grateful to Hillard for having entertained them—for having analyzed and made clear to them the emotions and impulses which the dullest of them vaguely felt, yet lacked the vital touch of imagination to digest and appreciate. That was a successful novelist's excuse for living—to make men's own lives clearer to them.

Thus, idly watching the passers-by with an impersonal, indulgent eye, the sight of a quaint, bent little figure in a silk hat and frock coat, caused Hillard to sit up suddenly. "Simeon Gray, by Jove!" he exclaimed. How odd it was that he should pass just at this moment. Hillard's conscience smote him as he remembered how many months had elapsed since he had dropped in to see the old man. But, by Jove! he would go to see him the very next afternoon. He would take Mr. Gray out to dinner somewhere and brighten him up.

Simeon Gray was publisher and editor of an obscure monthly, and it was in Mr. Gray's magazine that Hillard's first wordy little story had seen the light of day. It would have to be shortened a bit, Mr. Gray had written, but otherwise, with a few slight changes, it was good enough to publish. How odd it was that in the moment of his greatest triumph, Hillard should unexpectedly see the man who had given him his first word of encouragement.

The novelist's thoughts ran back to the lean years when he had first struggled for a foothold on the terrible steep ladder of success. He had been discouraged, beaten, ready to give up. Mr. Gray's acceptance had been the turning point. It had revived hope in him after hope was dead; it had goaded him into renewing the fight; and now—Hillard drew in a long breath and slowly exhaled—he had stormed the strongest stronghold of modern literature and had received formal notice of its capitulation. That—to have "The Fool and His Money" brought out by the Cycle people—was the one height hitherto unscaled, the one vantage point needed to make his position impregnable; and Hillard, with his quick intuition, read between the lines that, in its ponderous way, the great publishing company had fairly jumped at the opportunity.

Idly, Hillard, the expert at analysis, fell to turning over in his mind the abstract phenomena of success. How narrow, after all, was the margin between success and failure. Practically every man who had risen above his fellows could remember—as Hillard could remember—the critical moment when, as success and failure hung in the balance, some seemingly casual trifle had slowly tipped the scales in the right direction. Suppose, at the very moment when the scales which Hillard's destiny had begun to descend on the side of failure, Mr. Gray had not placed the slight but deciding weight of a first acceptance upon the opposite side?

Hillard pictured to himself how easily he might, even now, be living out a humdrum existence, a second-rate workman in some uncongenial occupation where there was more room at the bottom and even less at the top, than in his own chosen one. He concluded that no man should take success too seriously, and that in his own particular case he owed a great deal to Simeon Gray. Not only had Mr. Gray given Hillard his first lift, but subsequently he had given him much golden advice. Indeed, it was but a following out of Mr. Gray's teachings that had made "The Fool and His Money" the excellent thing it was. Hillard shivered slightly at the possibilities his brain had shown him, and he hugged himself in sudden appreciation of the knowledge that to his lot had fallen success instead of failure.

Then, quite as suddenly, the glow faded from Hillard's face. His body stiffened, and his eyes dilated like those of a man seeing a specter. Some imp of his imagination suddenly opening a hidden door, had released a terrifying thought: What would "The Fool and His Money" mean, just at this time, to Mr. Gray's poor little magazine!

Hillard gulped. The most casual glance showed him only too clearly what it would mean. It would place Mr. Gray's declining business firmly on its feet. It would, in a day, treble his subscription and advertising lists. It would be the vital touch which would place a long-deferred success within Mr. Gray's feeble hands. It would repay, with interest, the man who had given Hillard his first gentle impetus toward success. "The Fool and His Money" would save Mr. Gray from dying a failure.

Hillard was deathly pale now, and the cold sweat stood upon his forehead. The tables had been suddenly turned against him. He had blundered within the deadly range of his own preaching. The still, small voice had bade him do the things that he, himself, bade imaginary men to do. It was so easy to point the way for the generous deeds and the sacrifices of an imaginary character; it was so easy, even in real life, to be generous with what one could spare easily—Hillard, for instance, was generous with money—but to repay a debt of sentiment by giving up one's heart's desire, by giving up part of one's success—Hillard winced and turned suddenly sick.

. . . .

Mr. Gray trudged down Broadway as he had done on every working day for the past score of years. The silk hat had lost its luster and the frock coat would never be a fine coat again; yet from the man himself, bent, enfeebled, spent though he was, there still radiated a certain brisk cheeriness. How Defeat must hate the few people whom it has not the power to rob of the simple joy of living on what a canny world grudgingly gives in return for lightly-valued effort.

The time was when Simeon Gray had dreamed of building up a great publishing business, but it was fate's decree that he should finish as he began—in the well-nigh hopeless effort to cull something printable from the literary efforts of beginners.

Turning into a narrow, dingy side street, the little old gentleman pursued his way past the cheap, unprosperous shops to his own forlorn little office. Pausing, he fumbled with his keys, unlocked the door, and having methodically laid the silk hat and gold-headed cane upon the top of his desk, he attacked the day's contributions.

The first manuscript was rolled and prettily fastened together with a blue ribbon. Instead of at once tossing it into the pile of "rejected," as a younger copy reader might have done, Mr. Gray wrote upon a sheet of paper:

"My Dear Miss Smythe: To insure a reading, MSS. should be sent flat or folded—never rolled. Very respectfully yours, SIMEON GRAY."

Perhaps it was because a great deal of Mr. Gray's time and strength went in this way, that he had missed success—by doing little, thoughtful, unasked favors for others. He had helped to start a number of now brilliant young men on their careers—of this fact Mr. Gray was secretly very proud; yet, in his quaint, kindly philosophy of life, it never occurred to him that these ungrateful ones might well have remembered him, now and then, with a bright story, or an hour's chat.

Particularly, Mr. Gray was proud of young Hillard. He would smile as he remembered how Hillard had called, almost within the hour, to clinch the bargain on that first story. It delighted him to remember how Hillard used to hang about his office, snatching like a starved dog at the bits of counsel and advice which Mr. Gray frequently dropped. Always, the old man would chuckle over the recollection of the time he had caught Hillard in the Public Library, watching with greedy eyes a man who happened to be reading that momentous first story.

After an hour's work, Mr. Gray leaned back from his desk rather abruptly, and pushing the heavy, thick-lensed glasses to his forehead he pressed his finger tips over his eyes—a thing he had come to do very frequently in the last year.

While in this posture, a strong step sounded in the passage, and the ground-glass door vibrated with the brisk knock which followed.

"Why, Hillard! A sight for sore eyes, I declare," exclaimed Mr. Gray, cordially shaking hands with the ruddy, well-groomed young fellow before him.

"But what are you doing, now?" inquired Mr. Gray after they had seated themselves and exchanged preliminary greetings.

"I just brought it in to see what you think of it," replied Hillard, laying the somewhat heavy bundle he carried, upon the desk.

"Well, well—now, that's good of you—to give me the first peep at it. 'The Fool and His Money!'—you've hit upon a striking title, surely. Where do you think of disposing of this one?" asked Mr. Gray, looking up from a running glance over the opening paragraphs of several chapters.

"I thought perhaps you might use it," answered Hillard steadily.

"What! Really? Well, well, well; this is good news, I assure you. But——" Mr. Gray's face fell suddenly. "I really couldn't, you know; the bigger companies would offer you three times as much as I could pay."

"But you see, sir"—by some happy chance the years were bridged, and Hillard blushed and stammered just as he had, when, as a boy he had come to Mr. Gray's office to ask for advice—"you see, sir, you've given me a great many valuable lessons for the asking—now I'm bringing you a sample of the product. I want you to have 'The Fool and His Money' as part payment for old scores."

THE COUP OF INSPECTOR KENT OF THE IMMIGRATION BUREAU.

By a Special Contributor.

INSPECTOR KENT of the Immigration Bureau tossed a roll of papers into a pigeon hole of his desk, and closed the top with a sigh of relief. The inspector hated writing with the cordiality of a man whose life had been spent in the open. As chief of his department, it was an unavoidable feature of his work, but, nevertheless, one to be finished and put aside as rapidly as possible.

The inspector occupied a little office by himself in a downtown building. It was plainly furnished; a roll-top desk, two chairs, and a large wall map of Southern California were the visible adornments. On the map a waggish visitor had drawn a heavy line in red chalk along the Mexican border, and labelled it "The Great Chinese Wall. No Tickee, No Shirtee." For here, at the southwest corner of the United States, where its boundary runs through an almost uninhabited desert, a wild country of barren peaks and pathless mesas, the eyes of thousands of eager Mongolians turn as to a gateway to Paradise. With the assistance of a dozen well-mounted deputies, it was the inspector's duty to guard the gate, and to see that no one came in without his papers.

He was a man in the prime of life; short and stocky, with a face bronzed by long exposure to a hot sun, and close-cut, iron-gray hair. He moved slowly, and spoke with southern languor; but his steady gray eyes belied his easy manner. They were the eyes of a man who could think and act quickly when occasion demanded.

There was a knock on the door, followed by the entrance of a young man with a note-book bulging his side pocket. The inspector swung round in his chair.

"Hello, Mac," he said. "Come right in."

"Thanks." McFadden, reporter on the Tribune, was an old friend. "I am already in; but thanks, anyway. Did you get 'em all yesterday?"

The inspector looked serious.

"Mac," he answered, "I want you to wait for this. Tell your enormous list of subscribers that we got four Chinks, if you want to, but forget the details. I am on to something here that you can't have for a few days, but I'll tell you all about it first. You go report pink teas for a day or two and come again."

McFadden adjusted his slim body to the hard chair provided by the government for visitors, and smiled gently.

"Not so," he insisted. "You are going out tonight, and I am going, too. My dear inspector of squint-eyed heathen, if I had not known that you had something for me to develop, I'd have gone to the ball game. When do we start?"

"I start this afternoon at 2. You can come if you want." McFadden had been with him on many a ride through the brush, and at heart the inspector was glad of his company. The reporter liked the zest of the long night trips, and the excitement of hunting and running down the wily prey. His coolness in danger and ability to endure fatigue made him a valuable assistant, as he had proved more than once. The highly-colored stories he turned in to his paper afterward were an excellent excuse for the vacation, though they made the inspector blush for his friend's veracity.

At 2 o'clock they were on the road, riding easily. McFadden learned that they were to cover forty miles before resting, their destination being a mountain ranch within a mile of the line, whose owner was one of Kent's deputies. When the edge of the city had been passed, the inspector explained the object of the journey.

"The four we got yesterday," he said, "were not more than half of a bunch that came in the day before. I've been sending notices to the police up the coast to watch for the rest. I don't know how they were brought in, but Callahan sends word from Campo to come up on the run—not to wait for the stage. I suppose he has stumbled on to something. I have known for a week that there was a big camp just over the line from him."

"But if they are on the Mexican side," McFadden asked, "what can you do? Even if you are sure that they are waiting for a chance to cross you can't round 'em up."

"No," Kent agreed, "I can't. But the border is not marked by a board fence. Sometimes, Mac, as you ought to know by now, we stretch it pretty far down and put it back afterward. It saves lots of work. However, we will wait and see; we are not going to take chances of a mix with the rurales unless we have to. Callahan would not have sent for me unless the game was ready to bag."

They reached Campo at 2 in the morning, and passed through the little border town to Callahan's ranch, a mile beyond. There was a light in one of the windows, and as they rode up, Callahan came out to meet them. He was a big, loose-jointed, powerful man; McFadden knew him of old, and when they shook hands, calmly doubled up his fist into a hard knot.

"No broken bones for me," he laughed.

"Glad to see you, Mac," returned the rancher. "You've got a night's work cut out for you this time." He turned to the inspector. "I suppose you ain't too plumb tuckered out to keep on a mile or so?"

The inspector grunted. "Who's running them, Jim?" he asked. "Who brought in the lot day before yesterday?"

"Morales has the camp on the other side." Callahan went into the house and brought out two steaming cups of coffee.

"I put this on when I heard your horses," he explained. "Drink it while I change your saddles. If you don't mind my rushing things, Inspector, I can tell you as we go."

The inspector smiled, drank his coffee, and mounted the fresh horse brought up by his deputy. In less than five minutes from their arrival, they were again in the saddle, riding over an old wood trail that led further up the mountain. The ground was rough and overgrown with brush; the animals stumbled continually on concealed rocks. It was a hard piece of riding, and McFadden was heartily glad when a short cut from the trail through a thicket of mesquite brought them to a stretch of level land. He had been behind on the way up, and had barely heard the low explanation that Callahan gave his chief. The inspector now held in his horse for McFadden to catch up.

"The camp is over behind those two hills," he said, pointing to the left. "The line runs just this side, at the foot. Jim thinks the Chinks were brought over to a ranch here in the valley, and carried on to town in a wagon."

"It's a man named Nicholson," Callahan added; "a newcomer I've been watching ever since he came. His Mexican told me he was hauling grain to San Diego, and that sets me thinking. Why? Because he ain't got no grain. And then I remembered seeing him come back from a trip with a full wagon. Queer, ain't it? Haul grain forty-odd miles and haul it back, for exercise! I got it from his man that he's going in tomorrow, or rather today, and I thought the inspector might want to watch him load up."

As Callahan stopped talking, Kent suddenly held up his hand and pulled in his horse. The others halted at once. Not far away, a heavy wagon was coming toward them; the rumble of the wheels grew more distinct every second. Kent quietly dismounted.

"Get off and lead the horses," he ordered. They followed as he worked rapidly through the thick brush, each one leading his mount by the bridle. The noise of the wagon would drown any sound they might make for a minute or two. When they were stopped by a whispered command, it was within a hundred yards. They could hear the curses of the driver as he urged forward his struggling team, and in a moment the silhouette of the outfit appeared against the sky; doubled in size by the starlight, it looked like a huge circus van.

"It's Nicholson, all right," Callahan whispered. "He's driving four mules. Do we stop him?"

"No." Kent reached for his horse's nozzle, and turned to call McFadden's attention to the act, but he was too late. Fascinated by the odd size and shape of the approaching apparition, the reporter had crept forward to watch it, holding his horse by the end of the bridle. Just as the wagon came opposite them, the animal raised his head and welcomed the mules with a loud whinny.

In a breath the inspector leaped for the road, followed by Callahan. McFadden, badly startled by the sudden noise, found himself holding three bridles and wondering where he got them.

The mules had been pulled to their haunches, and were stamping and twisting nervously. The driver stood up on the footboard, peering in the direction from which the noise had come. McFadden could see that he held a rifle in his left hand. Gripping the weapon like a revolver, and raising the barrel, he called:

"Who's there?"

The answer came from the other side of the road. In the confusion, Kent had circled the wagon, and Callahan had reached the leaders' heads. The inspector called back:

"You are covered by three guns, my man. Put down your rifle—no, don't turn around. All right, Jim?"

"All right. Let him get down—I'll hold his mules for him."

When McFadden came up, leading the horses, the driver was on the ground, cursing volubly.

"What the —— is this?" he demanded. "Who's running this hold-up, anyway? How long have you been owning this road?"

"I forget, now, just how long it is." Kent's drawl was polite and pleasant. "But we are not going to bother you, Nicholson. We wondered if you'd mind telling us why you were hauling barley around the hills at night. It looks so cussed queer, to a city man. If you have a lantern on board, we'll take a look at this prairie schooner of yours."

"Look ahead," the driver fumed. "You think you've got me, Inspector, but it's the first time I've heard that a man can't drive around at night with a load of grain, if he wants to. If I'd been on the way back, now——" he laughed triumphantly. "You want to muzzle your pony, next time."

Kent made no reply, but stood up on the wheel and secured the rifle, which Nicholson had left on the seat. He then went to the rear of the wagon, leaving his captive unguarded, untied and lit the lantern hanging there, and proceeded to examine his find.

At first sight, it was merely a large, high-wheeled platform wagon, loaded with sacks of grain. But a very brief examination showed the justice of Callahan's suspicions.

The sacks were only an outer shell. On the bed of the wagon an iron cover had been placed, in the shape of a half-cylinder. It rose perhaps three feet from the boards, with a narrow margin on each side, leaving an empty space beneath. When sacks were piled along the edge and at each end, and built up over this cover, six or eight Chinamen could be crammed underneath and no one be the wiser.

Having pointed out the beautiful simplicity of the scheme to McFadden, the inspector returned to Nicholson, who was still standing where he had been left, angry, but apparently not in the least disconcerted by his capture.

"Cute idea, ain't it?" he asked.

"Get up on the seat." The inspector's tone had changed; he was not bantering now. "Come, get up."

Nicholson hesitated a moment, then climbed to his position and picked up the reins. Kent followed and sat down beside him.

"Now, then," he said, "you are going on to the camp as if nothing had happened. All the way there and back there's going to be an awful instantaneous gun shoved up against your ribs, and if anything goes wrong, you'll never know what it was."

Callahan was listening open-mouthed.

"You ain't going along, are you, Inspector?" he asked. "If you should get caught——"

"I sure ain't going to get caught. Nicholson is going to be too careful. We can't let the Chinks stay there until Morales gets them across, Jim. As long as I know that they are aiming to come, I don't mind helping them over. You and Mac can follow us for half a mile, and then wait until we come back and arrest the bunch."

Nicholson laughed outright.

"You're nervy, all right, Inspector. And what do I get?"

"I'll tell you, Nicholson." The inspector spoke rapidly; it was getting late. "You put this through and I'll be as easy on you as I can. If you cause me any trouble, I'll shoot, so you don't stand to win any way you look at it. I could take you to town and send you up for two years right now, and I'll promise that this trip will leave you better off."

The driver pondered a moment.

"That goes," he said, and swung his long lash for the leaders. The big wagon creaked and jolted over the rough road. McFadden and the deputy followed to within a short distance of the line, and dismounted to await their chief's return. In half a minute the reporter was stretched out on the ground, sound asleep.

As the two drove on, Nicholson grew communicative. The inspector learned that this was the last of three trips, the first having been completely successful. Nine Chinamen were to be brought in, at a price, Nicholson confessed, of $15 a head. They paid $50, and Morales kept the rest. "And a dirty deal it is," the smuggler complained, "me taking all the risk and getting all the work. I wish we could fetch the greaser along. Serve him right to pack him in with the yellow boys."

The wagon jolted over rocks and ruts, sometimes on the road, often in the brush, where the untraveled ground offered a smoother course. In spite of the apparent friendliness of the driver, Kent kept his revolver where the other could feel it, and prayed fervently that no wandering squad of rurales, the Mexican border patrol, would so far depart from the custom of their kind as to interrupt the caravan. He felt reasonably certain that any that might be stationed in the vicinity would be hand in glove with the smugglers; the danger would be that such an interruption might give Nicholson a chance to betray him, and it would be awkward, to say the least, to explain his presence across the line on such an expedition.

At the camp he would have to watch closely for any mishap that would give the driver an opportunity to leave his side. Morales knew him by sight, and he would have to trust to the darkness and to the Mexican's lack of suspicion to carry him through.

A sudden turn around the foot of the hill, and the dismal light of a lantern showed the camp. There was a single tent, and a covered wagon, to the wheels of which were picketed a half-dozen saddled ponies. Much to the inspector's relief, however, only one man was visible—evidently awaiting their arrival. He went at once to the tent, carrying the light, and with a short command set things in motion.

Nine frightened Chinamen, herded by their swarthy leader, clambered sleepily into the hole at the end of the wagon. Morales helped push them in and pack them—the last two had to lie on top of the others, their bodies touching the metal roof. The inspector felt a twinge of pity for the poor brutes, and wondered if they would object very seriously when he hauled them out. It seemed impossible that enough air to supply so many cramped lungs could get to their den.

Nicholson had remained on the seat with him, and his presence seemed to arouse no curiosity in the Mexican's mind. Suddenly, however, a difficulty arose. Having stowed away his charges, Morales was unable to replace the heavy sacks that he had pulled to the ground to uncover the entrance. He called to the driver for assistance. A sudden pressure of the inspector's revolver made the latter think quickly.

"Put 'em up yourself," he answered, "or leave 'em where they are. I ain't paid to work."

With a string of Spanish oaths, the Mexican ras to argue the point. He was in a hurry, and said so, and added that any American pig that delayed him would meet with trouble in several disagreeable forms.

"For why ees the other man?" he demanded.

"He's out for his health," Nicholson answered. "I'll make you a present of the grain, Juan. I'll get it at the ranch. I got to travel now. Adios!"

Morales seized a spoke of the wheel, as if to hold the wagon back by main strength. Suddenly suspicious, he jumped up on the hub and struck a match. Before the flame reached the wood, and while his eyes were dazzled by the light, Kent leaned over and struck him in the face with the butt of his gun, knocking him in a heap on the ground. It was done so quickly that Nicholson had no time to drop the reins and take a hand.

"Now," the inspector ordered, "move 'em out lively. When he finds his teeth and begins to want to know what hit him, I've got to be in the U.S.A. Keep at it."

Nicholson kept them at it so strenuously that the shrieks of the terrified passengers aroused McFadden long before the wagon reached the line. He and Callahan, thinking that the Yellow Peril was about to break upon them in force, met the inspector with leveled revolvers, and were persuaded with difficulty that the fighting was all over.

They proceeded in a more leisurely manner to Nic

As Nicholson proceeded to follow this advice, the inspector added, in answer to McFadden's amazed inquiry:

"Too generous? Not so it hurts me any! I like my job, Mac, and when a man has seen me go down into Mexico and smuggle in a gang of Chinese, I'd rather not have him talking about it around here. He can't travel any too fast to suit me."

Oklahoma Fertility.

If you should be in the grain belt you realize what farming means out here. The man from the older land, who tills his hundred acres or so and has his corn lot of ten or twenty acres, is very properly amazed when he sees the grain waving on a field of a thousand acres. And when the harvest days are at hand and the huge mowers and reapers sweep majestically over the field, cutting and gathering up the stalks, and the busy threshers are separating the kernels with their agile mechanical fingers, the farmer does not stop to bind or bale the straw, but leaves it on the field in little mountains. Often he does not take the stalk from the ground, but cuts off the top with his "header," which "slices" thirty and forty acres a day as its string of a dozen or a score of sturdy horses pulls it through this sea of yellow. On some of the larger ranches, as the Oklahomans prefer to call their farms, they have put the great traction engine at work to draw the cultivators and the harvesters. This giant with muscles of steam and bone of steel will do as much as fifty or a hundred horses.

Like Georgia, Oklahoma is a "Land of Cotton." You can tell the dividing line between the "plantation" of the Southerner who has drifted up here in the uttermost corner of Dixie, and the "ranch" of his neighbor from Iowa or Kansas. The man who turns his r's into h's as he drawls out his words with the soft southern accent, has the same kind of soil seeded to cotton which the westerner has planted in corn. At first he did it out of sentiment. The sight of the open bolls with their snowy fleece brought to memory a picture of his home land. When he found that here the cotton plant grew luxuriantly, he raised it from motives of business as well. But our panorama is not only of the grain shoots and the corn stalks and the cotton shrub. There are the peach trees bending with their fruit, the big red apple, and watermelons that would tempt the most virtuous colored deacon to break the eighth commandment.—[Day Allen Willey, in September Lippincott's.

Our Unsingable National Anthem.

Of all national anthems, doubtless the most difficult to sing is "The Star Spangled Banner." Probably not one American in ten thousand can repeat the words of the song, and almost as few have the range of voice that is necessary to carry one successfully from the lowest note to the highest of this inspiring song. Commander William F. Fullam, who is in command of the naval training station at Newport, must find it no easy task to enforce his rule that every naval apprentice who leaves that school shall be able to sing both "The Star Spangled Banner" and "The Red, White and Blue." The third stanza of the former is omitted—an excellent innovation, as it reflects only the passions of a war long since ended, and adds nothing to the beauty of the song. Every Sunday morning the boys march to services on the parade grounds to the martial notes of "Onward, Christian Soldiers;" and twice a week they are specially trained in singing, etc. Commander Fullam's effort to familiarize his charges with patriotic American airs is especially praiseworthy, if the naval apprentices are as polyglot a body as the pupils in the public schools of New York.—[The Lounger, in Putnam's.

If the clatter of American harvesters is heard today from one end of Asia Minor to the other; if the Eskimos of Greenland and Alaska and Labrador vary their monotonous diet of fish and blubber with tinned meats from Chicago and Kansas City; if the natives of Equatoria insist on buying cotton sheeting that is stamped "America," and will take no other, our merchants and manufacturers, instead of praising the consul or the commercial traveler, may thank the American missionaries.

Mr. Gnagg at the Seaside.

HE GIVES HIS TIMID WIFE A LESSON IN SWIMMING.

From New York Sun.

MR. GNAGG, having taken Mrs. Gnagg for a dip in the sea, instructs her in the art of swimming in the following persuasive and encouraging terms:

Well, you're coming into the water, aren't you? How's that? Do you call that water that you're standing in? Do I? No, I don't. From where I stand it looks as if you're about up to your ankles in a mixture of foam, seaweed and cantaloupe rind.

Y' don't expect to learn how to swim standing on the beach and looking the game over, do you? If that was your idea, what did you drag me down here for on this hot day? Why didn't you hit up terms with one of these correspondence schools and learn how to swim by mail?

Come on out here. You don't have to be afraid to get your feet a little damp. They're not going to melt. And you're not worrying about moistening that funny valentine bathing suit, are you?

Say, where did you cop out that set of Mardi Gras bathing togs, anyhow? If that wouldn't take prize number one at a Larry Mulligan ball, then the judges 'ud need operations on their eyes for complete eclipse, that's all I've got to say.

Oh, no, I haven't said you were a sight. I haven't said a word except to invite you to stroll out here into about four and a quarter inches of water so's to get at least that much of that joke bathing suit out of the public view. That's all I've said.

Well, come on. Don't stand there trying to look coy and all that stuff. Just walk out here to where I'm standing. Water's almost up to my knees here, as you can see, and that doesn't mean that you're going to be swept to a watery grave before you get a chance to find if your puffs are on straight, does it?

Nothing's going to bite you. There are no crocodiles or hippopotamuses mooching around at this exact spot, and if any thirty-foot-over-all woman-eating sharks show up where I'm standing before you get here—and that'll be next Tuesday week—I'll hand them a kick in the teeth and chase them back to their deep-water lair.

Well, I'm waiting out here for you, you know. I didn't come down to this beach, you understand, to be made a spectacle of. Everybody on the beach is kidding us already; can't you see that? There's a gang of snapshottists back of you getting ready to blaze away, and I don't blame 'em at that. That bathing suit you've got on would be a knockout on one of those seaside picture postals.

Now, look a-here, d'ye want me to trudge in there and get you? Is that your idea? How's that? You're afraid? Afraid of what? Huh? Oh, you want time to think it over, eh?

That's it, is it? What d'ye expect me to do—squat down here and write a few letters and crochet a couple more tabs to a tidy while you're making up your mind whether you want to get the toes of your stockings wet or not?

Huh? O-o-oh, the water's co-o-o-old, is it? It's nothing of the sort cold. On the contrary, it's positively tepid. It's too warm for comfort. Maybe you'd like me to order 'em to have it heated for you? A little salt water a couple of degrees below blood heat Fahrenheit isn't going to kill you, anyhow.

That's it, come on out here and I'll try and see what I can do toward giving you a little tip or two about the swimming thing. Huh? Want me to come in and take a hold of you so's you won't be swept off your feet, eh? Ha, ha! Behave that fooling, won't you? You don't call these little wimpling wavelets sure-enough surf, do you? You've got as much chance of being swept off your feet as you have of being cast away on a chicken coop in the Indian Ocean from the gun deck of a Canarsie Bay catamaran.

Here, what are you digging your finger nails into me that way for? Stop that. What ails you, anyhow? Have you discovered that you're standing on top of a Galapagos turtle, or what?

Oh, you're afraid again, eh? Well, you needn't let that afraid stuff cause you to peel all of my pelt off with your finger nails. I've got a-hold of you and you're not going to drop into Davy Jones' locker while I'm on the job; and the locker is situated more than six inches beneath the surface of brackish water, anyhow.

You want to learn how to swim, don't you? That's what you've been dishing out all this long time, isn't it?—that you just loved to see a woman swim, and that it must be perfectly grand for a woman to know how to conduct herself in the water, and all that fluff? Eh?

Well, then, just keep still for half a second, and take that half nelson away from my neck and stop clutching at my ribs with your finger nails, and quit glaring around that way as if somebody was trying to tomahawk you, and just keep your feet on the ground instead of trying to climb up me—I'm not a flagpole, you know—and I'll try to start you along, anyhow, on this swimming thing.

The first idea you've got to drill into your head, you know, if you ever expect to learn to keep still in the water, much less to swim, is confidence. C-o-n-f-i-d-e-n-c-e, confidence.

You're not lacking in that when you're at home. That goes as a matter of course. But this isn't at home. This is in all of eight inches of brackish water, and what you need when you're in any kind of water is confidence. Get that? Well, if you get it, what are you clawing at my neck for like a monkey in a cage?

Now, take the idea of floating. That's what I'm going to teach you first—how to float. You lie on your back in the water—say, let go of me for a second, will you, till I show you? How'm I going to illustrate the floating idea to you if you hang on to me that way?

Just turn me loose for an eighth of a second, won't you—take your hands completely away from me, that's what I mean—and I'll show you how absolutely impossible it is for a human being to go down in the water if he only keeps perfectly still and——

Now, see here, how many times have I got to ask you to stop clawing me around the neck that way? Huh? You're afraid to let go of me out here in this deep water? Why, you poor simpleton, the water hasn't swashed up as high as your belt line yet, and——

How's that? You'll let go of me so's I can show you how to float if we get in closer to the shore? Oh, that's it, hey? Maybe you'd like me to teach you how to float on the hotel porch? Or perhaps you've got the idea that I ought to take you up to the top of the Singer Building and teach you how to float up there?

You've got to have a little water to float in, you know. You never saw anybody floating in a dish pan, did you? Well, then. All you've got to do is to release me from that death grip for just a half a minute and I'll show you——

Oh, you want to be shown some other time, hey? Great. Fine. This isn't the time to teach you how to float at all.

This is the fitting time to teach you how to keep books and to take an annual inventory. Maybe you'd like to have me pounce upon the present moment to instruct you in the art of reading the globes and of making paper flowers?

Well, if you're not going to let go of me so's I can show you how the floating thing is done, why, I'll just float you and show you how it's managed. How's that? Now, stop that squealing, for heaven's sake, and I'll have you floating on top of the water before you can say Jack Robinson.

No, I'm not going to let go of you. That's what I ought to do, but I know perfectly well that the minute I'd take my hand away from supporting your back you'd let out a squawk that 'ud cause the both of us to be pinched for disturbing the peace. So I'll keep my hand under you all the time, see?

Now, here, just lie back in the water, and——What's that? You don't want to get your hair wet? Ha, ha! Great again. Fine once more.

Say, what d'ye expect is going to happen to your hair when you get into the ocean? D'ye suppose it's going to be burnt off? Or do you think Neptune is going to marcel wave it, or something like that? And how the dickens are you going to get your hair wet, anyhow, with that red cap pulled down over your ears that way? And if your hair does get a drop or two of water on it, what's the——

Huh? Salt water makes the hair sticky? Oh, that's it, is it? Well, say, if salt water is going to make your hair stick the way your hands are sticking around my neck, I'm——

Say, wait a minute. Can you imagine how anybody can float in the water or in the air or anywhere else if she's going to insist upon keeping her feet nailed to the sand? Hey? Or are you trying to hand me one in an indirect way? That is to say, are you trying to intimate that I'm not capable of taking care of you in the water, or anywhere else, when it comes to that? Are you trying to put it over that I'm such a booby and mutt in the water that I wouldn't know how to take care of you in case anything terrific happened to you in six and a quarter inches of water?

Because, you know, if that's your idea, if you dragged me down here on this sizzling day when I didn't want to come at all, just for the purpose of staking me to a slap like that, why I'm going to have something to say in rebuttal, you know. I'm not going to stand around like a Stoughten bottle in ankle-deep water and permit you to get away with a——

Well, then, if you had no such idea, and really want to learn how to swim, what in the dickens is your idea in persistently refusing to let me——

How's that? Strong current here? Tush! Stuff and balderdash! There's no current here at all. It's like some little creek. Now all you've got to do is to relax. Just relax every muscle and trust to me and lie flat on your back on top of the water and I'll have hold of you every minute of the time, see? I just want to show you that——

Huh? Getting out further all the time? Nothing of the sort? I can't support you in a floating position if there's not water enough to——

At this point a comber slapped Mr. Gnagg in the back and turned him over a couple of times. Mrs. Gnagg having seen the water coming was able to disentangle herself from Mr. Gnagg and to hold her feet and then to wade out to the sand. Picking himself up and joining Mrs. Gnagg on the beach, Mr. Gnagg, regarding her with a baleful glare, concluded his swimming lesson as follows:

All right. That settles it.

Get your clothes on. It's back to the city for you, and when we get there we'll go over this little affair, you and I. I can see now that you brought me down here for the deliberate purpose of showing me up, and you deliberately tripped me when you saw that breaker coming, too, didn't you?

Deliberately tripped me so's to get me the laugh from all of these fatheads and rummies around here. All right. I know when I've got enough. You can't get your clothes on any too quick to suit me.

I'll think out a course of action on our way to the city, and when I've thought it out, you want to stand by to watch my smoke, that's all I've got to say!

"Well, old Michael O'Hoolahan was walking in the Vale of Avoca one hot afternoon, and he came to a spring. It was crystal pure. The sand it bubbled out of was as white as snow. Rainbow mists hung over it in the sunshine.

"Old Michael knelt down and took a drink, and then, feeling remarkably refreshed, he turned homeward. Though he didn't know it, the spring in the Vale of Avoca was the real Fountain of Youth, and it had lifted thirty years from his bent shoulders and he was an outstepping handsome lad again. So of course when he got in the house his wife didn't know him. He looked in the glass at himself, cut a caper, and then he said:

"'Shure, Kathleen, 'twas the blessed spring I dhrunk from in the Vale of Avoca. Glory be, it's made me young again. Run, darlint, run for yer life. Ye can't miss it for the rainbow mists that float above it. It'll take yer fat away, and yer lameness, and when ye come back you'll be the Kathleen I knowed back in the siventies.'

"So Kathleen ran, and Michael lit his pipe and waited for her. But she didn't come back. He waited and waited. Then, on toward dusk, he hurried to the vale.

"No Kathleen did he see anywhere, but the wail of a babe's voice weeping brought him through the dark to the spring, and sitting there on the grass was a little girl baby crying as if her heart would break.

"'What's happened ye, acushla?' says Michael.

"'Don't ye know me?' says the child, wringing her hands.

"'Faith an' I do not,' says Michael. 'Who are ye?'

Not a Bad Guess.

JUDGE MARY H. COOPER of Beloit, Kan., is the only woman probate judge in the United States. She performs more marriages than any Kansas minister. This is because she always omits the word "obey" from the ceremony—an omission that pleases the Kansas girls.

Judge Cooper believes in the capable and strong woman—she thinks that the day of the clinging, helpless woman is past. She said in a recent interview:

"In the strong and independent woman's hands, in the fighting woman's hands, our sex's future rests. There is more than a little truth in an episode that a Chinese missionary once related to me.

"This missionary was taking tea with a mandarin's eight wives—she was, of course, a female missionary. The Chinese ladies examined her clothing, her hair, her teeth and so on, but her feet especially amazed them.

"'Why,' one cried, 'you can walk and run as well as a man!'

"'Yes, to be sure,' said the missionary.

"'Can you ride a horse and swim, too?'

"'Yes.'

"'Then, you must be as strong as a man?'

"'I am.'

"'And you wouldn't let a man beat you—not even if he was your husband—would you?'

"'Indeed I wouldn't,' said the missionary.

"The mandarin's eight ladies looked at one another, nodding their heads. Then the oldest said softly:

"'Now I understand why the foreign devil never has more than one wife. He is afraid.'"

Quite Harmless.

SENATOR JAMES B. FRAZIER, at a banquet in Chattanooga, said a certain lawsuit:

"The discussion was misunderstood. Harmless, it gave an impression of harm. It reminds me of Mountain View Beach.

"A young matron, her unmarried sister and her little daughter sat at one side of the long table at a Mountain View Beach hotel, and opposite them sat a meek young minister that the child, for some unknown reason. greatly feared.

"One evening the young mother wanted to go to the beach to see some fireworks with her sister, but the little girl refused to be left alone. She screamed and wept. So it was decided to frighten her into submission by means of a trick.

"For this purpose the young sister slipped out, then came and knocked at the bedroom door, and said in a ferocious bass voice:

"'What's the matter in there?'

"The child stopped crying and looked frightened. Her mother said:

"'Hush. That's the parson. Now will you go to sleep?'

"This trick succeeded. Mother and sister got off to the fireworks. Everything seemed well.

"But at dinner the next day, during a silence that had fallen on the long table, the little girl looked over at the young minister and said tauntingly in her shrill, loud voice:

"'Aha, you knocked at mother's door last night, and she wouldn't let you in!'"

Hot Shirts and Cold Beans.

MR. FUSSY DRESSER made it a point of pride that he never had less than a hundred shirts in his wardrobe, and every one of them with his monogram embroidered on the sleeve. Mrs. Dresser would no more have dared to disarrange those drawers full of shirts than Bluebeard's hundredth wife would have dared to unlock the secret door.

Mrs. Dresser was being driven up from the station in the dog cart one afternoon when upon rounding a turn in the hedge she saw that her home was afire. From a window in the second story came a rain of shirts, and the figure of her husband violently propelling them over the sill was almost heroic.

Mrs. Dresser lost her patience almost as quickly as she found her senses.

"Fussy," she screamed, "stop throwing those foolish shirts out of the window and come down and help the man get out the piano and the silverware!"

When it was all over, and the fire quickly quenched had left only a bad smell and some charred kitchen furnishings, a neighbor's maid came over to Mrs. Dresser carrying a dish of cold lima beans.

"Why, what in the world——" began Mrs. Dresser.

"Please mum, you carried this dish over and left it on top of the Missis' new piano during the fire," said the maid, humbly.—[New York Sun.

His Not to Reason Why.

A STORY is told of the Rothschilds to illustrate the strict obedience which they at all times exacted from their employés, high and low.

They once had an agent in New Orleans, a young and alert fellow who kept his eyes and ears open. According to System, they telegraphed him to sell their cotton holdings on a specified day.

Believing that he had better information on the local market than his employers, he held the sale over four days and netted an extra profit of $40,000. He promptly notified the Rothschilds of his achievement and forwarded the bonus. The Rothschilds returned the amount intact with a cold note that ran:

"The $40,000 you made by disobeying our instructions is not ours but yours. Take it. Your successor sails for New Orleans today."

A Woman's Way.

BELIEVING, it may be, that it is necessary, now and then, to prove that women are not inferior to men in the management of practical affairs, a contributor to the New York Globe tells of a young woman who recently bought and retired to a small suburban farm, and was busy all the spring personally directing the modernization of the house.

The other day she ordered a telephone installed, and the company's workmen started in. Presently the "boss" called her out to the lawn.

"We can't run the wire in without damaging that tree," he said, pointing to a fine old elm near the piazza. "It can't be done."

"Very well," replied the young woman, smilingly. "Then you needn't put in the 'phone;" and she reentered the house.

"Did the electricians go away?" asked the correspondent, who assuredly believes that a man should think twice before insisting upon his boasted mental superiority to the other sex.

"No, sir. They put in the 'phone—and without harming the tree.

"A man, now," he concludes, "would have argued a half-hour over the matter."

Mr. Shaw's Italian.

MR. BERNARD SHAW has told a good story to an interviewer from the Giornale d'Italie, who went to him with the impression of his being a consummate master of the Italian tongue. Mr. Shaw explains how the legend arose.

"Once I was in Milan with a party of English folk. We were dining at the railway restaurant, and our waiter knew no language than his own. When the moment came to pay and rush for the train, we were unable to make him understand that we wanted not one bill but twenty-four separate ones. My friends insisted that I must know Italian, so to act as interpreter I racked my memory for chips from the language of Dante, but in vain. All of a sudden a line from the opera 'The Huguenots' flashed to the brain—'Ognuno per se; per tutti il ciel.' (Every man for himself and heaven for all.) I declaimed it with triumphant success. The army of waiters were doubled up with laughter; my friends applauded wildly, and my fame as an Italian scholar has been on the increase ever since."

Bernard Shaw further expressed his personal admiration for Italian actors.—[London Chronicle.

Enter, the Husband.

LAWRENCE J. ANHALT, business manager for David Warfield, brings in from the road the story of the manager of a thrilling melodrama, in one scene of which a husband enters one door an instant after an admirer of his wife has made his exit from another. During a run of a week in one city the manager noticed that one man, obviously from the country, went in every night. Finally he remarked to the man that he must enjoy the performance.

"Tolerably so," replied the playgoer, "but some night that husband is going to catch that other fellow, and I want to be on hand to see what happens."—[Lippincott's.

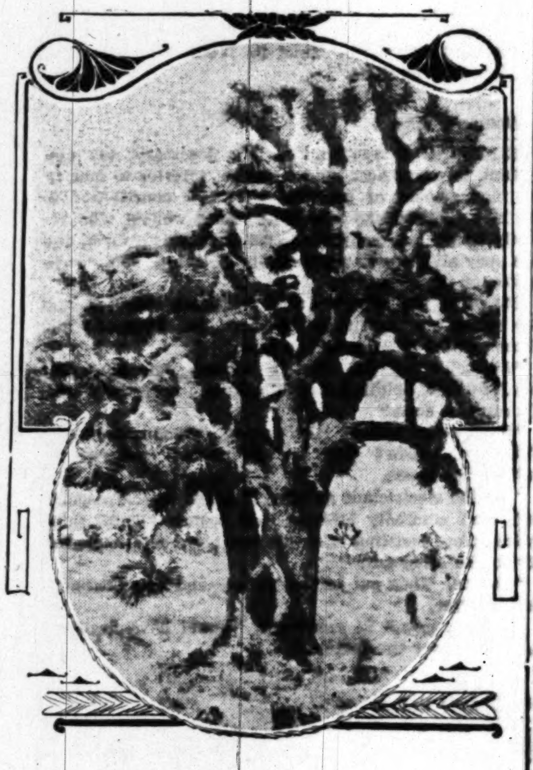
The House Beautiful—Its Flower Garden and Grounds.

WONDROUS VEGETATION.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA SURPASSES ANY OTHER COUNTRY.

By Ernest Braunton.

VISITORS to Southern California—it matters not from what State or country—are both amazed and delighted with our wide range of plant life and its wondrous development. Nowhere outside of the real tropics is to be seen such luxuriance of foliage and blossom, and in no place throughout the world has nature provided such a variety as man has here gathered together. During the past week, the writer was visited by the best-posted nurseryman it has ever been his good fortune to meet, and though he has been sojourning here for the past six months, the plant life in and around Los Angeles was the most remarkable of any he has seen since leaving home 10,000 miles away. Mr. Paul Pfitzer is the eldest son of Wilhelm Pfitzer, millionaire nurseryman and seedsman of Stuttgart, Germany, and was thoroughly familiar with the semi-tropic vegetation of Southern Europe before leaving home. Having worked and studied in many countries and having generations of plantsmen back of him, he is peculiarly fitted to judge of the comparative value, beauty and effectiveness of the plant life here to be seen. Besides the great variety we have in park and garden, he told the writer he was next impressed with our wonderful plant development. He saw, during his first day in Los Angeles, a plant of that wonderful lilac-flowered Solanum Wendlandii, climbing over the sides and roof of a two-story house. Elsewhere it is a hot-house climber of ordinary size, but the size of flowers and flower heads caused our visitor to utter an exclamation of surprise. At first he did not recognize it, and then thought it a named variety of exceptional development, named for "the greatest man that ever lived." It is even so with all who journey through our wonderful southland—all are impressed with the great possibilities of our climate in plant breeding. This visitor wished that he might bring his mammoth establishment here from Stuttgart so that the making of new plants might go on uniterrupted throughout the year. Surely, there is but one land of perpetual sunshine and summer, and we who enjoy it have unusual cause to "rejoice and be exceeding glad."



TREE YUCCA.

Our Tree Yucca.

Yucca arborescens, the tree yucca of the Mojave Desert, is the only arborescent species of yucca in North America, and is the most spectacular plant of our arid regions. It grows to such an enormous size that, though but a plant (as are palms, etc.,) it attains the stature and dignity of a tree. This plant is exceedingly hard to transplant, and to obtain it for the garden it is necessary to grow it from seed.

Biggest Bulbs Not Best.

A writer in the August Suburban Life has an illustrated article which shows conclusively that bulbs, corms and rhizomes are not necessarily best when largest. He shows three hyacinth bulbs grown in different degrees of moisture and the largest (grown in very damp soil and climate) when cut open proved to contain smaller flower bulbs than the smallest of the three. This is so with all bulbs, though of those grown under similar conditions the largest are always best. This demonstration simply shows that the purchaser does not always get the best by buying the biggest to be found at our dealers. One firm may have small but firm bulbs that are of much greater value than those from another, but which are large and loose, or soft. The writer ends his article by prescribing the treatment for potted bulbs so often printed in this department—putting them away in the dark for several weeks after potting. When building Singleton Court the writer discovered a huge cistern abandoned many years ago, and in the cool and dark of this cavern bulbs in pots were kept for six weeks, after they were gradually inured to the light. The results were of the very best.

The Eremuri.

A very showy and satisfactory herbaceous perennial is Eremurus robustus which in early spring throws up a columnar shaft of flowers six or eight feet in height. Very few have grown this flower locally—one man in South Pasadena has several—all we know of. There are several species in cultivation, all natives of India, and all having pink or white flowers. It is not an easy matter to get roots of blooming size, and they cost two or three dollars each, yet they are worthy of far more extensive cultivation in California.

Double Shasta Daisies.

It is said that Luther Burbank has a double Shasta daisy and that a local firm also has one. This acquisition is merely a matter of selection which any one may obtain by pursuing the proper method. In the writer's garden, one of these daisies has "sported," becoming semi-double, having twice the number of petals possessed by the common type of Shasta daisy. The prospects are good for obtaining a still more double form by sowing seeds from this plant, all the flowers of which are alike. Seeds repeatedly sown from the most double flowers will finally bring the desirable. Nearly all the double flowers we grow were obtained merely by selected.

Pretty Succulents.

Rochea falcata and Crassula coccinea are two fine succulent plants just now going out of bloom. Both have fiery scarlet flowers and both thrive with ordinary garden care or even with much drier treatment. Both are easily increased from cuttings and make fine subjects to plant in the cactus garden. All this class of South African plants are peculiarly adapted to our dry summers and more of them should be grown in very exposed, hot and sunny situations.

Sea Beans.

Sea beans (so called) are the seeds of a plant growing on the land in the West Indies and tropical America quite generally. It is a climbing vine, and its scientific name is Mucuna urens. They are practically everlasting, and often reach the shores of the United States by the ocean route. They are very beautiful when polished and are often mounted in gold or silver, but when first gathered are not particularly ornate. The polishing process requires some time and labor.

Removal of Petals.

Experiments are reported in which the petals were removed from the flowers of apples, nasturtiums, etc., to determine the effects of their removal on the production of fruit and consequently on seed. The general effect was to decidedly lessen the number of fruits setting where the corollas or other showy parts were removed, and the author believes that this was due to the removal of the protection offered by the petals rather than to a lack of insect visitation.

Perennial Sunflowers.

Those who have not grown the perennial species and horticultural varieties of sunflowers do not know anything of the family so far as garden value is concerned. While all of them are Helianthus (the wild species is H. annuus,) the common large garden annuals are called sunflowers and the perennial sorts are known by the botanical name. The writer has three sorts, varying in height from three to eight inches. No two of them are in the least similar, and all are fine.

How a Missionary Got Wealth.

The recent death, in his eighty-fifth year, of Rev. Dr. William Ashmore, a distinguished foreign missionary of the Baptist Church of America, recalls the interesting fact that when in 1863 he was appointed to Swatow, China, he bargained for the purchase of a lot for mission buildings, agreeing to pay $800. The board in Boston refusing to sanction the purchase, Dr. Ashmore paid for the lot himself, and the purchase made him a rich man. The shoreward frontage of the lot was afterward filled in for a considerable distance out into the harbor, and this "made land" was so valuable for warehouse sites that the sale of it brought the missionary a fortune. Out of these profits he gave $10,000 to found a theological seminary at Swatow. In 1886 Dr. Ashmore was elected a missionary secretary in Baptist headquarters at Boston. He returned home and tried the office for a year, but official responsibilities did not suit him, and he resigned and went back to China for fifteen years more of active service.—[Missionary Review.

Pope Pius and the Vatican Guards.

It would seem to be the ambition of Pope Pius X to pass down to posterity as the Reformer. He has already instituted several notable reforms, in the total reorganization of the financial departments of the Vatican, in the ecclesiastical congregations, in taxes, and in the ceremonial music. At present the Pope is contemplating a number of important changes within the walls of the Vatican with a view to reducing needless expenditures. He has expressed the opinion that there are far too many idle people about the premises—officials who are costly, but whose offices are pure sinecures.

The guards, for instance, are practically valueless. The Guards of Nobles, the Swiss Guards, the Palatine Guards, the Gendarmerie—all alike necessitate a vast expenditure for which little is obtained in return. If His Holiness acted in accordance with his real wishes, he would abolish all these, but consideration of historic interest will probably induce him to confine himself to a mere reduction in numbers.—[Rome correspondence London Globe.

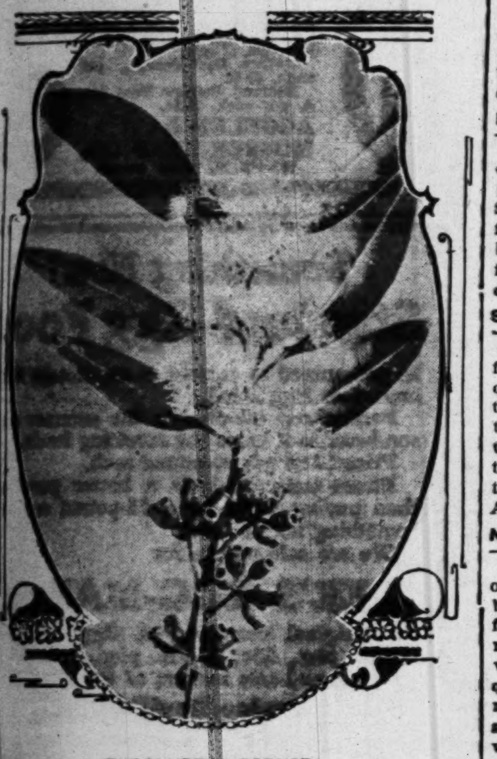
HOUSING COMMISSION.

ITS REPORT SHOULD BE READ BY EVERY PROPERTY OWNER.

THE Housing Commission of the city of Los Angeles has just rendered its report for the year ending June 30, a report which should be carefully read by every property owner in Los Angeles. With a meager annual allowance this commission has accomplished wonders in bettering the conditions of our more lowly and unfortunate residents. It is extremely fortunate, too, that they were enabled to obtain a very experienced and efficient expert who speaks six languages, is a trained nurse and tuberculosis specialist. That part of the report giving historical data, the aims and work accomplished by the commission is reproduced:

"For the first two years of its existence the Housing Commission was not a regularly-established department of the city government, but its members were appointed by the Mayor and worked in conjunction with the Board of Health and the Board of Public Works. In October, 1908, the City Council, realizing the growth of slum conditions and the wisdom of prevention, passed an ordinance, making this commission a department of the city government, placing it on a basis similar to other city commissions, and gave it an appropriation of $4000. From an economic standpoint this commission has paid its own way many fold; with this comparatively small sum of money, by close inspection of house courts, serving notices on landlords, agents and property owners; requiring property to be improved according to the conditions prescribed in the House Court Ordinance it has brought about the expenditure of tens of thousands of dollars by private parties in repairs and improvements, saving a scourge of dirt and disease to the city."



EUCALYPTUS ROBUSTA.

"The home is the fundamental factor in determining how a man shall live. In our city are at least 10,000 people who cannot protect themselves from the ignorance or the avarice of the strong. The civic conscience of Los Angeles has determined that no home shall sink below a certain physical standard. The Housing Commission investigates housing conditions in which moral and civc development are impossible because air, light, cleanliness and privacy are denied. It has compelled compliance with the law when that has been necessary. Some habitations which were too bad to be rebuilt have been condemned, but the large part of the work of its paid inspectors and the voluntary service of the commissioners has been in persuading the careless or ignorant landlords to make reasonable provision for tenants, and in training the people to make the most of their surroundings. We have had unique housing conditions in what we call our house courts. To the investigation and correction of this phase of the city's home life the Housing Commission gave its first energies; a very encouraging beginning has been made, but a number of other fields have not yet been touched. Step by step we are determined to go until the housing conditions of our lowliest citizens are improved to the point where a real home is possible."

Broader Parkways.

A subject that will not down with Angeleños is the issue of parkways of reasonable width. It is passing strange that a majority of our citizens do not realize the incontrovertible statement that we cannot have beautiful streets except we have broad parkways. The city should fix the minimum width at not less than six or eight feet for the narrower streets and provide by ordinance that some boulevard parkways should be not less than twenty-four feet wide. Not until such provision is made will we have streets that will be famous for their beauty. The possibilities of our climate are so great in the way of keeping a fine growth of plant life in the parkways throughout the year that we should live up to our opportunities.

Eucalyptus Robusta.

For many years, Eucalyptus robusta, on account of its showy foliage and blossom, was much in vogue for street planting, but the wood proved brittle, and was often broken by the winds, and it flowered so abundantly that flowers and seed pods broke down the bearing branches. If late, it has been superseded by more suitable trees, so that at present it is being little planted, and will soon pass out of the list of eligibles.

In Kalamazoo.

In Kalamazoo, Mich., a city of 30,000 people, it has been demonstrated that streets swept by hand were cleaner, the cost was lower, and the attendant dust less than when the sweeping was done by the old-fashioned revolving brush machines so well known to Angeleños but a few years ago. These machines raise such a dust as to be a menace to the health of any community where they are used, and it is a wonder that they are in use in any place. A prominent woman of Kalamazoo made up her mind that the best was the cheapest, and by permission of the City Council she was allowed to demonstrate that the work previously costing $8.40 per day could be done for $5. If a municipality cannot afford the gigantic steam machine, it is far better and cheaper of the water front.

Broad Boulevards Needed.

Several broad highways are needed in Los Angeles to connect principal parks and points of interest and to provide direct lines of traffic in the business center. Some of these will be for pleasure largely and others for heavy teaming. A great artery 200 feet wide should be built from here to our harbor, the water end to be forked so as to reach at least three important points of the waterfront.

Scenic Route to Pasadena.

While the question of which is the most scenic route from Los Angeles to Pasadena, those who are well acquainted with the various routes of travel well know that none compare in landscape beauty with the route through the San Rafael hills. This highway reaches the highest elevation by the easiest grades and opens to view along the way a more extensive and more beautiful landscape than any other road leading out of Los Angeles.

Natural Soil Streets.

That the city has decided not to construct any more oiled streets on natural soil will be hailed with delight by all who are fully acquainted with what these old-fashioned streets are. It matters little whether mud be made from soil and water or soil and oil. Soil and water is by far the least objectionable, and dries quickly, but in the end yields a maximum of dust. Oiled natural soil streets are too often dusty in the middle and oily mud at the edges. Elgin street, upon which the writer lives, is in such condition and has been so during all of the three years since the work was done. An ordinary farm wagon heavily loaded will still cut into this oily mud to the depth of three or four inches, and in time, as the sun softens the surface, all will be smooth again, but three years have not dried out the oil sufficiently to make a hard surface in summer, yet the middle became dusty during the first summer. Surely a more satisfactory combination than common garden loam and oil may be found.

More Water Needed.

Our parks are much in need of more water, and until the Owens River reaches us we shall not have a sufficient supply. If our parks look shabby and our park lakes stink, it is safe to assume that the first needs more water and men to apply it, and the latter needs an ever-changing supply of fresh water. Our park force was never better organized or more efficient than at present, and neither park commission nor park superintendent must be blamed if the city will furnish neither water nor workmen. A complaint has been lodged with this department that Eastlake Park looks shabbier than ever before, and the writer is asked to call attention to this evident neglect, but understanding perfectly the handicap under which our park department labors, there is no warrant for invidious criticism. The city gets as good returns for money expended in parks as from any other department of the city government, and a park superintendent is powerless to carry out needed work when lacking both labor and equipment. The park commission of our city is but a figurehead at best, and is powerless to aid the superintendent. We sadly need an independent park commission of a strictly non-political complexion.

European and American Boulevards.

The absence of fortified cities in England and America during the period of most active city growth and the consequent absence of the peculiar opportunities for forming successive ring boulevards as popular object lessons in what a really liberal thoroughfare can be, have probably had as much to do with the deficiency of such thoroughfares in our street extension plans as the individualistic and decentralized character of Anglo-Saxon democracy.

Although many such boulevards have come into existence, it is only within the past twenty years that the other unremedied objections to the standardized plan have been fully realized. Prof. Olmsted quotes a speech delivered by the Prussian Minister of Finance in 1892 which "marks a recognition of the fact that the ultimate purpose of city planning is not to provide facilities for certain kinds of transportation or to obtain certain architectural effects, but is to direct the physical development of the city, by every means of control within the power of the municipality, in such a manner that the ordinary citizen will be able to live and labor under conditions as favorable to health, happiness and productive efficiency as his means will permit."

Foiled.

A man met a doctor he knew one morning, and, being one type of grafter, he thought to work him for a free prescription. After some small talk he asked, quite incidentally:

"Doctor, what would you give for a sore throat?"

"Nothing," replied the doctor promptly, for he knew his man; "I don't want a sore throat."—[Philadelphia Record.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

MOISTURE IN INCUBATORS.

SOME PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS IN REGARD TO ITS USE.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE.—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experiences with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

H. R. GARNIER of Searchlight, Nev., sends the following letter of inquiry to this department:

"I have a 200-egg hot-air incubator. This is the tenth day of the hatch and everything has gone beautifully so far, but I would like to have a few pointers about the moisture question. Have you had any experience with this make of incubators, and if so, what do you think of their method of supplying moisture. These machines are provided with pans that, according to the directions, are to be filled with water about the fourteenth day, and this is all that is said about the matter. Would you advise sprinkling the eggs during the last few days of the hatch or floating them in water, or do you think the above-mentioned method will give satisfactory results. It is very dry here. While cooling the eggs is it advisable to shut the incubator doors and keep the heat inside as nearly normal as possible, or is it better to cool the eggs in the machine with the doors open? Can you give me the name of some reliable breeder of White Rocks of a good laying strain who has breeders for sale at this time?

Moisture is indeed an item of importance in artificial incubation, which is more or less subject to prevailing local conditions. In the humid regions but little is required artificially; in the arid sections, like Southern California and Nevada, some judgment must be exercised to pull off a hatch successfully. It is almost impossible to give specific direction that shall prove successful in all cases. In the first place, much depends on the situation of the machine—if placed in a basement or cellar, less would be essential than if placed in an ordinary living-room. In the region of dry atmosphere, such as one experiences in the desert areas of Southern California and Nevada, it would be safe to apply moisture on the third or fourth day after setting the incubator and then keep the moisture pans well filled during the period of incubation. On the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth days sprinkle the eggs with water at a temperature of 103. These directions have given excellent results in dry countries, but it would mean death to the baby chicks or germs in humid regions. In cooling the eggs, remove the trays from the incubator, close the door and keep in all the heat. Cool fifteen minutes after the fourteenth day, increasing the time up to the seventeenth. On the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth days, I would cool thirty minutes each day in a room at a temperature of 70 degrees. The greatest cause of non-success in hatching is the want of air and moisture, so do not use less than the amount mentioned. It would be well on the seventeenth and eighteenth days to open up the doors of the incubator and thoroughly air, even if it does reduce the temperature of the machine, as this throws off foul gases that are sure to come from eggs that are under hatch three weeks. This will also produce stronger and healthier chicks. After the twentieth day, let the incubator remain closed until the hatch is complete.

Always consult the liner advertisements in the Sunday Times for wants in the poultry business. They invariably contain the announcements of the leading breeders having anything to sell.

Vigor of the Breeding Stock.

There is probably no one factor of more importance in the successful prosecution of the poultry business than strength and vigor of breeding stock. When we come to analyze the ailments of chickens, it invariably reveals the fact that the weaker specimens are the ones to first succumb to the attacks of vermin and disease, while the stronger withstand the depredations of insects much better, and in the case of diseases are often immune. There is every reason for vigor and strength, because inbreeding and infusion of different bloods has resulted in deterioration of strong constitutional qualities—due often to the attainment of fancy points in color of plumage, symmetry, etc., factors which have their place, but are not of so much importance as strength and vigor in a flock maintained primarily for commercial purposes.

So far so good. Experience has shown that abnormal laying capacity is often attained at the expense of vigor and strength, and hence hen fruit is the first object of successful poultry culture, it only affords another reason for debilitated breeding stock. Up to a certain average of egg production—quite generally estimated at 150 eggs per hen by breeders of long experience—vigor and strength may be maintained, but when it goes beyond that there is a noticeable falling off in the number of eggs produced by the offspring of the abnormal layer. The law of averages should be the consideration in breeding—securing both breeding and laying qualities to the largest extent possible. Poor stock begets weak offspring, produces infertile eggs, and lays but few for market purposes.

These facts are self-evident; but the argument goes further. Weak stock is also more expensive to maintain, because usually subject to ailments; to be sure, it may consume less feed, but when returns are considered, it is about as expensive a luxury as the breeder can possess. All things considered, strength and vigor are the corner stones of successful poultry culture, not only in the birds, but in their caretaker.

A Handy Contrivance.

C. K. Graham of the Storrs Station, in Connecticut, has devised a convenient hook for holding fowls for plucking. The hook is illustrated herewith. The bar A-B is of quarter-inch iron 1 inch wide and 18 inches long, with a split 3 inches long and about ¾ of an inch wide at each end. A 5-inch arm E-F is riveted to A-B 1½ inches from D, making the distance from B to E about 15 inches and providing for fowls too small to spread from A to B. The staff C-D is of half-inch round iron 18 inches long with a shoulder at D and riveted on the under side of A-B, so that the latter will swing freely.

Limberneck.

A disease so-called because of the peculiar contortions of the muscles in the neck that its presence causes, and which is invariably the result of eating tainted meat and maggots that have bred therein. It is on this account essentially a disease of hot weather, which superinduces decay and the breeding of vermin. When attacked, the bird stands or squats with its neck either limp or arched. When first discovered, administer a small dose of oil of turpentine mixed with sweet oil; for small chicks from two to ten drops mixed with equal parts sweet oil will be found efficient; for adult fowls from one to two teaspoonfuls equal parts turpentine oil and sweet oil will be about right, something depending on the size and breed. Keep ailing birds warm and quiet.

Prevention is a better cure than remedial measures. If birds are properly cared for and the conditions are right, limberneck need never be known. By the foregoing, it is obvious that it is not a chicken disease at all. It is (1) ptomaine poisoning by eating tainted animal food, and (2) by eating the maggots in decaying flesh, which produce the intestinal and nerve irritation described.

THE ROADS OF MOROCCO.

TRIBES PLOW THEM UP NOW AND THEN AND SOW GRAIN ON THEM.

[National Review:] There are two roads from Tangier to Fez, the one passing through Alcazar and the other following the seashore via Larache. The former is the more direct and, except during the rainy season, is usually chosen by the traveler, but the beach road to Larache possesses many attractions and you are able to spend a night at the old Portuguese settlement of Arzila, which is a model of the fortresses of two centuries ago.

No one has ever yet measured accurately the exact distance which separates Tangier from Fez, and I hope the next person to make the journey will take a bicycle wheel with a cyclometer attached to settle the vexed question once and for all. Roughly I put the distance at 185 to 190 miles, and it is usual to take from six to eight days on the road, thus limiting the daily march to twenty-five miles, which is quite sufficient if you want to shoot on arriving in camp.

The journey can be done comfortably in six days if your animals are not too heavily loaded, and I have ridden from Fez to Larache in three days during the heat of August, but it is an experiment not to be recommended.

Except during the months of July, August and September the climate of Morocco is temperate and pleasant. The early spring is, however, the best season for a journey, as the tropical rains which are likely to overwhelm you in the late autumn and early winter have ceased. The rivers are serious obstacles during the rainy season, as there are no bridges and no ferries except close to the coast, and consequently if the fords are impracticable you are likely to be hung up on the banks of a river for a very considerable time. The rivers are wide and shallow, but are liable to rise and fall six to eight feet in twenty-four hours. Your baggage must be carried on mules or horses.

There are no regular roads in Morocco, and the tracks are often very difficult to trace and vary constantly because the tribes have the curious custom of plowing right over them and sowing their grain thereon. Thus in the summer when the corn is ripe, the old road has sometimes entirely disappeared and it is necessary to strike a new trail. As there are no roads, carts are unknown in the interior. The only wheeled vehicles which ever found their way to Fez were brought there by the late Sultan Abdul Aziz, who succeeded in adding considerably to his unpopularity by the innovation.

Furniss's Impressions of New York.

"What impressed me most when I visited New York," says Harry Furniss, the well-known English cartoonist, in his "Reminiscences" in the September Strand, "was the number of chiropodists' advertisements. They confronted me everywhere. Huge gilded models of feet outside the chiropodists' establishments, some painted realistically and many adorned with bunions, seemed everywhere before me as I passed through the streets. If I looked up, I saw them suspended from the first-floor window, or painted on canvas on the front of a b

Over Sea as a Steward.

HARD LIFE THE WHITE-COATED SERVITORS LEAD.

From New York Sun.

THERE are many other and more comfortable ways of crossing the ocean than as a steward.

On my way to Europe I had gone one afternoon to the poop to watch the wake of the ship and the flocks of gulls which had joined us off the Fastnet Light as we approached the Irish coast. A score or more of stewards were squatting on the deck smoking and swapping shop talk. The listener soon learned that ships admired by passengers are often looked on as slave galleys by the stewards, who just as often find "homes" on boats taboo to the discriminating traveler. Listening to the many yarns of these fellows, my inquisitive spirit felt a longing to sample life in the "glory hole," as the stewards' quarters are sometimes called, and with the assistance of the chief steward I made arrangements to come home in that way.

If there is one memory of that trip across the Atlantic more disagreeable than another, it is the echo of the arly morning call by the ship inspector. The liner teward goes to bed with the owl and gets up with the ark, not by any choice of his own, but to get his work one. The inspector goes the rounds some time about he break of day rousing the boys individually by a vigrous shake on the shoulder with "Come on, my lad, it's o'clock." And in bed since only 11:30 the night bere, after a hard day, with the outlook of another strenous eighteen hours to start on, and the few hours rest und, with thirty-five others, in a narrow cramped lory hole" lighted by a tiny port at one end, on the her by a doorway opening on an inner corridor, with e throb-throb of the engines coming through a single lkhead. When the inspector had made his visit you ver had time to compose yourself into a philosophic ame of mind—there is much work on a liner to be ne before breakfast, labyrinths of corridors and alleyys to be washed down, brasses to be brightened up d several hundred passengers to be fed. To help the ys do it coffee and rolls are served in the cook's galy until 5:30; at 5:31 the morning stimulant is not ailable, and the remonstrating late-comer is told ly by the cook that he and his assistants are there marily to accommodate the passengers. You can't y well blame him for his impetuosity; the breakfast of fare is a long one. So the inspector's call is anred promptly.

knew nothing of these and several other disagreeable dents of steward's life when I stood in line in Livool waiting my turn to make application at the suintendent steward's office for a steward's berth on one his transatlantic boats. There was hesitation at conering my application when he learned that I had no erience. He decided to accept me, and I was ordered report to the second steward of a ship the morning r her arrival in port, which left me two days to ber up for work.

he second steward is known as the "second boss;" is really the boss! he accepts or rejects the men sent g by the shore stewards as he thinks fit; he ass them to the different classes of work in steerage, d ana saloon, and upon him their prospects depend. may put a beginner to work in the saloon as readas he can put a saloon bedroom man in the steer-. Of course, he is subject to the command of the steward, but his arrangements are seldom checked. With all the new hands I signed with the secboss on the morning after the boat's arrival from States, after which we had to register at the Liverl office of the British Board of Trade. The boss inucted us to report for duty in the morning, and meanto provide ourselves with uniforms and the necesy duck clothing, of which he supplied a list. Those have served on the liner before want little more a new set of buttons and the cap badge of the line are joining. The full wardrobe costs from $30 to I found it an easy matter, on the advice of my d the chief steward, to purchase from fellows who leaving the boat as much uniform as would take through the skipper's inspection, which took place re we left the Mersey. In this matter it is a strange that you can pick up a steward's outfit at the end of st every voyage of a transatlantic liner during the er months. From all over the British Isles young ws are lured by the novelty of the steward's life the stories of his rich tips, but the majority of "swallow the anchor" on their maiden trip and e of their steward's outfit.

r ship arrived in Liverpool Monday and being uled to sail Saturday all hands were ordered on Friday, or at least to be on board with baggage swer the "boss's" roll call on Saturday morning at had my first experience of a liner steward's work ednesday and it made havoc of a pretty picture of fe. At the end of the day I laid back my weary on a stiff "easy chair" in a Liverpool hotel and ered how I had permitted myself to be deceived. en we reported Wednesday morning, the "boss" ed the men to the different departments calling elp. Some were sent to help the saloon and bedstewards to prepare their sections, others were o work on the corridor paint work and the dirty, ports; the majority of us, especially the green were sent "on the dock." The fellows on the dock kept moving. The first job was the removal of tons of unused provisions, mountains of "empties" les, cans, boxes, baskets and milk jars. The was in direct charge, and certainly he does some traveling from dock to ship to keep the boys g and prevent loafing in alleyways and dark cor- f the ship. His provisions start to pile up on the as soon as his boat is scheduled to dock and the time is limited when he must have them stowed away snug in their correct locations on board.

There is no haphazard method of storing these provisions; there is a place for each class of goods and there it must go, with a full entry on the ship's account of its quantity and quality. The butcher, baker, cook, barman, linen man, vegetable man, fruit man, groceryman—all are on the dock receiving the goods from the teams and loading them on the "boys," who have to skip up steep gangways, along low passages and through narrow bulkhead doorways with quarters of beef, flitches of bacon, carcasses of mutton, rolls of cheese, cases of liquor, hampers of fruit or ponderous cans of milk to be stored away in refrigerators and storerooms in remote corners of the boat.

During the few days a liner is in port the scene at her dock is an animated one, with coal barges supplying the bunkers, painters on hanging stages at work on the ship's sides, freight handlers discharging the grain and cotton of the United States and the numerous gangways swung up to the ship's side from the dock swarming with duck-clad stewards rushing the provisions along. It is a sight pleasing and exhilarating to look at, but gruelling for the boys.

On the eve of sailing, we had completed the transfer of provisions and all the dock men were immediately assigned to the different sections on board where paint work was being washed down, carpets laid, bunks set up and everything put in shape for the embarkation of passengers in the morning. Every corner of the big boat was prepared for inspection by the captain; purser, doctor and chief steward, who visit every department of the ship before she leaves the Mersey, and the steward of each section stood by his post during their rounds to receive instructions or reprimands. In a few hours the dirt, confusion and chaos of coal-stained decks, lumberladen passageways and uninviting saloons, cabins and corridors had given place to white decks, shining brasswork, comfortable steerage quarters, sumptuous saloon and cosy cabins connected by electrically-lighted, beautifully-carpeted corridors.

At 4 o'clock work was completed, and the boys were soon in their street clothes and on the overhead railway that skirts the docks on their way uptown.

All night long express wagons were delivering their trunks to the glory holes, but alas! the boys were slow in following and it must be said they arrived during the wee sma' hours in varying degrees of inebriation. I went on board early, and found the second boss had reserved a bunk for me in the midship's aft glory hole. For fellows were thirty-five stewards of various classes, from bellhop to captain's steward, or captain's tiger, as they call him. Our quarters consisted of a three-foot passageway running between two tiers of a double row of bunks, five on one side and four on the other. Suit cases and trunks were stowed beneath the lower bunks; overcoats, shirts, hats, etc., were hung from nails, pegs or hooks wherever one could be placed on the end of a bunk, back of a door or the edge of a stanchion. The boys are fond of hanging chintz curtains before their bunks, placing strips of carpet on the floor and distributing prints of pretty girls in any corner that will hold one. The place looks cosy when the boys are stowed away in their beds, but what a riot and confusion of cuss words and wrangling when they turn out to dress!

Sailing day is a very special day for the "boys" in many ways—they have signed on the ship's books as "stewards," but they don't know whether they will have to work in the steerage for the following three weeks, look after a table in the second cabin where they may be tipped to the extent of four or five "bob" ($1 or $1.25) a seat, or be exceedingly lucky and be sent to the saloon where ordinarily each seat is worth ten bob ($2.50.) The second boss decides the matter on sailing morning, standing on the stairway leading to the promenade deck from the saloon square. With book in hand, he calls out "Brown." "Yes, sir." "Steerage pantry." "Jones." "Here, sir." "Second cabin." "Smith." "Sir." "Saloon." And so Brown, Jones and Smith and the rest of them learn where they are to serve during the voyage. While we are finding our new stations, the liner is being taken out of the dock and is on her way down the Mersey, coming to anchor off the Princes landing stage, while lying out there in the river the steerage passengers are put on board from tugs. Several of the boys are told off to assist in their reception on board—passing them before the doctor and purser and conveying them to their berths.

All are on board before noon and are sitting down to their first meal when the boat is swung in to the landing stage to embark the saloon and second cabin passengers. A score of the boys were deputed to baggage duty; porters brought it up the gangway and we carried it along to the passenger's cabin. Here I saw the tipping crusade being opened, laying down the baggage in the cabin. The steward had a habit of lingering over it, turning it around, pushing it into one corner, slipping it over to another, all the time demonstrating their earnest wish to arrange everything for the comfort and convenience of the traveler, who if he was not too much traveled generally responded with sixpence or a shilling.

With all the passengers soon on board, the liner was quickly swung into the channel and was threading her way down the Mersey to the ocean on our way home, to be broken by a short delay at Queenstown. As soon as the lines were cast off from the Princes Landing stage we were ordered to make a speedy change to our quarters and change into suitable clothes. The steerage stewards wear duck all the time during the voyage; the second cabin and saloon have to don blue serge with brass buttons at all times when serving passengers, and duck suits when engaged cleaning up. This matter of dress is the bugbear of the cabin stewards' life. They seem to be changing all day from white duck to blue serge. First, it's duck for the early morning clean-up, then serge for breakfast service; back again into duck for more polishing and washing up, another change for luncheon—and so on all round the clock. The fruit steward of our boat, who had charge of a saloon table, had to change into white duck four times a day.

On my trip I had the experience of working with all classes of stewards. The steerage department is unquestionably a hard grind, requiring strenuous toil to keep the plain decks and concrete passageways clean. The meals are elaborate for steerage passengers, and the big crowds of them to be served making oceans of dirty crockery and much littered decks.

The second cabin is very much better. In fact, many of the boys prefer it to the saloon, being treated with more seeming deference probably by the passengers, but the tips are not so attractive. The saloon is the goal of all ambitious stewards.. There they look to make easy money, and they know the chief stewards of other departments are selected from the saloon staff. Consequently the best of the "boys" are found in the saloon, but they are eaten up with jealousy of each other's chances of tips. Where you have table, deck, bedroom, etc., stewards looking to the same individual for a tip there will naturally be some straining to "get in right" with the passenger, and nothing short of extra physical exertion to earn a tip will be spared. The deck steward seems to earn the undivided contempt of his fellows by his practical methods of tip collecting, which is to solicit the help of a popular passenger in making a general collection among the promenaders for their servitor. This is taken up the day before arrival in port, and invariably earns for the deck steward much hostile criticism.

The prospect of tipping was eagerly discussed in our "glory hole;" with our representative crowd we had reports from all departments where a tip was likely to be raised. We had steerage, second cabin, saloon, table, deck, bedroom, library, smoking-room, bath and lavatory stewards, as well as boots and a bellhop. Toward the close of the voyage there was a general forecast made by these individuals. The bellhop and steerage steward lumped their stipend, each placing it at $5. Boots thought No. 5 would be worth $2, while the bedroom and table stewards each put him down as good for $2.50, and the deck steward thought him worth $2, and so passenger No. 5 was generally appraised by all. The steerage stewards collect their tips somewhat after the fashion of the deck steward. They work the steerage passengers for all the good nature that may be there to respond; they pick out one or two passengers, generally "returned Yanks," who have been visiting their old home, treat them with extra attention and at the close of the trip have in them energetic solicitors for tips "for the stewards."

During the emigrant and tourist seasons the "boys" undoubtedly make some easy money, but the takings of the best of them would be a poor recompense for the life

Stealing is the predominating failing in the glory hole. Everything that is not nailed or tied down vanishes as if by magic. When a man leaves for the deck, he locks his trunk as tight as if he were expressing it to Timbuctu. The green man realizes the presence of this simple failing with such alarming swiftness that he unconsciously jams his cap down tight on his head to make sure it won't be "lifted" while he is walking around under it.

Despite the regulations to provide a full kit, few are possessed of ample wardrobe, but they have a genius for covering the deficiency. Linen shirts are expensive even in the British Isles, but liner table stewards are supposed to be possessed of enough to carry them through a voyage. Not many of the "boys," particularly at the opening of the season, can throw away money on such luxuries, so they cover their manly breasts with a large, clean sheet of Irish linen note paper.

Every other afternoon the denizens of the glory hole are allowed a couple hours off. Some of them find rest on the poop, but the majority go to sleep, read or enjoy a little music. The music of banjo or guitar does not seem to bother the somnolent ones, and they sleep on serenely, unconscious of the noise of the talkers, promenaders overhead and the pantings from the engine-room.

The steerage stewards are on the whole the ne'er-do-wells of the ocean liner; few of them aspire to rise any higher, preferring to take life easy, do as little work as possible. These "boys" are treated with more or less condescension by their wiser and more fortunate shipmates; from their migratory habits they seldom remain long enough on a boat to secure the more comfortable berths, and their rather menial work is emphasized by a second-cabin or saloon steward's sarcastic salutation of "Hello, Steward!" when he finds one of them engaged on one of the many unpleasant tasks incidental to a steerageful of green immigrants.

As for choice of working in the three classes, I would like to eat in the steerage stewards' department, work in the second cabin and collect the tips in the saloon.

The steerage boys have the privilege of sitting down to their meals and having them properly served and in ample quantity. The second-cabin and saloon fellows eat in the pantries of their respective saloons, where there is barely standing room for the number that desire to eat, and as far as I could see, there was never any food cooked specially for them. They ate what remained after helping the passengers; true there always was enough, and often some to dump, but the pantryman selected the choicest morsels for men who tipped him for the trouble and put it away in his oven for them. As for the others, it was a scrimmage to secure what you wanted; frequently some of the boys found it difficult to secure a knife, fork and plate. But a tip of a dollar or two to the pantryman would insure that everything that appealed to your palate on the daily bill of fare would be waiting you hot at your pleasure.

Farming in California—The Land and Its Products.

CONDUCTED BY J. W. JEFFREY, STATE COMMISSIONER OF HORTICULTURE.

FIELD NOTES.

Farmers and Fumes.

WHAT promises to reach the climax in a general catastrophe lies in the damage that is now being inflicted upon the orchards and forestry of a large section of Shasta county. Two or three large smelters are in operation, that of Kennett and Coram being especially destructive to vegetation. The State Horticultural Commission has just finished an examination of the afflicted districts, and finds the damage widespread and increasing. The smelter companies are engaged in extracting gold, copper and silver from the same ore. It is a low-grade ore, but very plentiful and easy worked. The process gives off a large quantity of sulphurous compounds in the form of fine flakes easily soluble and which drift in the wind to seemingly impossible distances, killing most forms of orchard and forest vegetation in their path.

Already the farmers and fruit growers are organizing to resist the continuation of these destructive blasts. The smelter at Kennett is signing up indemnifying bonds, and contracts to pay a stipulated sum annually to each orchardist included, preferring this plan to a suit for damages with each injured grower. And what are some of the damages of these fumes? Rakes, mowers, shovels, wagon tires, wire fences are corroded and in many cases entirely eaten away. Live oaks are badly affected, white oak next in extent while poison oak and sage brush seem immune. Pines in gulches are less injured than those on the hillsides and higher levels.

In Happy Valley, the apple leaves are badly spotted. Pear leaves burn first on the edges, and as usual Bartletts seem to suffer first. Hundreds of peach trees are entirely defoliated by the fumes, but fig-tree foliage is not troubled in the least. Citrus, olive and grapes are so far unaffected. Corn leaves spot and burn; alfalfa leaves are badly scorched. At Middle Creek, practically all vegetation is destroyed excepting poison oak, and from this point to Keswick and Coram not a living tree is found; at Kennett everything is dead except with few exceptions along the creek, and in many other sections the forests are entirely destroyed, the landscape looking like a fire had scorched every living thing without consuming it.

What will be the outcome of this progressive devastation? Some means of controlling these poisonous outgivings will have to be devised or the smelters closed. The farmers and the owners of the reduction works are working together to solve this problem, but its solution is not yet in sight.

High-Toned Plants.

IN Country Life I read that a certain variety of daffodil is listed at $75 a bulb, and another variety has sold at $250 for each bulb. This is "small change" in comparison with the price of tulip bulbs during the rage of "tulipomania" in Holland 300 years ago, one bulb selling then for the equivalent of $20,000. Some of my readers paid $50 or $150 for a single Belgian hare a few short years ago, and one citizen of a town I shall not name (but which has lately come into possession of a fine harbor) told me that he could pick up a market-basketful of hares at random from his pen, that would be worth $500. For obvious reasons, we cannot ask the old Hollanders of 1634 what they think of themselves now, and it would not be in good taste anyhow with our late record on hares, daffodils, orchids and other fads in view. One advantage the Dutch had over us. Their government stopped the tulip craze in one day by forbidding the sale of the bulbs. Our government does not care so much for the welfare of its people, even permitting Tom Lawson to frenzy the carnation market by paying $25,000 for one variety.

The right of a man to spend his money as freely upon fads as upon the necessities and substantial comforts of life cannot be taken from him in a republic, and length of pocket-book will reach the so-called novelties like the long tongue of the night-flying moth reaches the nectar of the lily—only the moth shows more surety and better taste in its selections. But the possession of daffodils and hares is not altogether a fad. The commercial element often predominates. Who knows but the purchaser of the $250 bulb will make a small fortune out of it by convincing his fellow-citizens that he offers the finest daffodil ever, at the nominal price of, say, $10 a bulb for its progeny? It is a question of the efficacy of rosy lithograph and more roseate literature in affecting the gullibility of his fellow-men. They usually prevail. When some one rises to the necessity of a stable system of calculating plant values, some means of separating their merely speculative value from the ability of plants to return their cost in abiding qualities of fruit or flower; when some sensible standard of intrinsic worth is established and some plan of compelling nothing to be offered on mere faith in the promoter, then we will have less commercial exploitation and loss in the line of new productions. If the manufacturers of food products are not allowed to put deleterious compounds into their goods, why should the merchants of plant-production be allowed to adulterate their literature with impossible and often fraudulent claims of superiority and oftener to sell untested stock at fabulous prices with impunity, when they know nothing about its future behavior?

New Pathological Station.

ON the 26th of last April, the Governor approved a bill appropriating $15,000 for the purpose of maintaining a scientific station or laboratory for the benefit of those portions of the State not benefited by the work of the Southern California Pathological Laboratory at Whittier. I have some correspondence regarding the failure of the university regents to begin this work. It required two years to get the Whittier institution into operation, and the fruit growers of the north should not be too impatient. No doubt the university people will soon begin the investigations called for by the late act.

I have not so much faith in the efficacy of the proposed station, because I did not see evidence of the maturity and preparation that characterized the inception of the Whittier laboratory. The State has not secured good results heretofore from these special appropriations. Compared with the splendid services being rendered by the established institutions of the university, such as the various experiment stations, the Davis farm and the Whittier laboratory, the outcome of these special enterprises is not notable. A large sum was appropriated in 1905 for cereal investigation, for tobacco experiments and for viticultural and dairy specialties. We have heard very little from these investments in a practical way. But the university is gradually shaping up its policies toward the more successful application of the appropriations lately devoted to farming and fruit growing. With this fact in view we may look for better results from the appropriation noted at the beginning of this article. By the next meeting of the Legislature the university should have its bearings and necessities so clearly understood that no difficulty should be found in getting support for every good purpose such as the late appropriation for pathological work in the north calls for.

Board of Examiners.

THE personnel of the Board of Horticultural Examiners seems to be completed at last, the acceptance of E. B. Collier, of Corona, completing the membership. I learn that the first meeting will soon be held in Los Angeles for organization and for the adoption of a working plan. Those who supported the new County Horticultural Law are pleased that the plan it provides is soon to be given a test. The condition of the average horticultural commission is far from satisfactory to the growers, and in a score of counties the old law has grown into a farce in its application. With a few noted exceptions, the Supervisors in the various counties have altogether or in part failed to render the fruit interests of the State the protection contemplated by the old law. Notorious has been this failure in many cases, the Supervisors maintaining a legal board of commissioners yet not allowing the commissioners to draw one cent in payment of services, or not paying bills for such services that have been authorized.

One county in the Sacramento Valley that has never permitted the organization of a board of commissioners is losing all its pear trees from the blight. This county has some of the finest and most prolific Bartletts in the West. Their fruit is far better than any I have seen, and yet through gross indiscretion the Supervisors and the growers are taking no steps to prevent the destruction of these fine trees. Within a few years there will remain alive only a straggling specimen here and there to remind the people of the loss their carelessness has entailed upon the county. I was over in this county a few weeks ago, and stirred a few of the leading men to action. They appointed a committee at a meeting we held, for the purpose of securing the names of twenty-five orchardists to a petition praying for the appointment of a county board of horticultural commissioners. This committee seems about to fail to get twenty-five names for this purpose in the whole county. Several pear growers refused to sign on the grounds that they did not want any one to come into their places and tell them what to do with their own trees. These foolish men do not realize that nature is going into their orchards every day and doing things to those trees from which the latter will not recover. Some of us are mere bundles of prejudice or indifference to many of our own interests. When the new law is put into effect by the board of examiners these honest but misguided officials and growers will see a new light.

Undesirable Promotion.

"THE committee has suggested to the commercial organizations of the State that they use their influence in giving publicity to the idea of urging recent arrivals in California to write newsy letters to the home papers so that their friends may know of the new surroundings in which they have settled and also in order that California may be given desirable publicity. Such a course will result in bringing many new families to the State."

This quotation is from one of the most influential of this State's booming committees, but I take issue with all it contains. No one is so unreliable in his conclusions as the new-comer, be he the most intel and honest of men. He sees everything in a roseat flection, or else in the darkness of homesickn discouragement. Nothing appears to him in its proportions. His peach tree bears a full crop in years, his fig fruits in one, and the orange bud he from the nurseryman one year ago has three fine full sized and delicious. He knows nothing about blight, fig sour, or gum disease. Or else he got " inked" from cherries to Bartlett pears through fault of California's. In either case, he is unfit to home to the folks a correct opinion upon the condi of his adopted State.

I am sure the statements of these new-comers reliable as are some of those put forth by our pro tion committees. I notice a vast improvement, h ever, in the quality of the latter's propaganda. Th is yet room for betterment. For example, notice meaning of this weather report put forth by a pe nent promotion committee under the title of "Cali nia climate:" "August 19—Maximum and minim temperatures: Eureka, 56-52; San Francisco, 58-50; Diego, 76-66."

It was hot enough to "eat the paint" from a st car in a score of widely-separated localities that da California. Notice that all the points above named seacoast towns. In one part of the State the th mometer was looking down upon the 100 mark for s eral days about that time, and lately the 110-deg was reached in the shade. Why not publish the tr in full? Withal, we have the best summer clima the world—and I speak of the State at large. But w must be the disappointment to the visitor carrying heavy overcoat for the temperatures of 56 and 58 w he reaches the Sacramento or the Santa Ana valle He would be like the old German pioneer of the h springs country in Arkansas. He left his boy and t and climbed the hillside to get a drink from a sp near the roadside. After tasting the water, he ra frantically down, crying: "Drive on, Johannes, hel not vun mile from dis blace." Let the people kno is always warm here commercially and "horti rally," and sometimes climatically, and they will then be scared out of the country by comparing reality with what they had expected from reading overdrawn literature.

Gardening in California—Flower and Vegetable.

The Folly of Importing Potatoes.

THE price of potatoes is unusually high, and the arrival at New York of a cargo of the tubers from Europe recently attracted the attention of farmers, more than would the arrival of a cargo of white blackbirds. As a matter of fact, we have been importing potatoes from Canada for many years past without causing any great surprise. We rather look upon the Dominion as Uncle Sam's younger brother, and the Canadians as our friendly neighbors on the north. These neighbors after having expended as much labor as we do, to raise potatoes, and after having paid 25 cents per bushel for the privilege of selling in our markets, still have left a little profit. That they do have a profit left is proven by the fact that they continue to raise them and bring them over every year,whether the price is high or low. It has been said that the soil and climate of Canada is more favorable for raising potatoes than is the case in the United States. I do not believe it. If the Canadians obtain better yields per acre, it is because they take more pains in preparing the ground and cultivating the crop.

From 1896 to 1907, inclusive, potatoes have been imported into the United States to the value (according to official figures) of $5,738,287. It seems strange that the farmers contiguous to those markets did not make an effort to keep them fully supplied and obtain the five and three-quarter millions of dollars that went to Canada. The average farm price for the last ten years was 52.8 cents per bushel, and the average farm value per acre for the same period was $46.27. Garden Nut Culture.

I BELIEVE that nut trees are largely to take the place of the useless trees which are at present planted for decorative purposes in public and private grounds.

The reason for this belief is, because there are no more beautiful trees or more attractive than those to be found in the nut-bearing group.

Is there, for instance, a more inspiring tree in the world than the pecan, which will grow from New Orleans to Boston, and which rears its head 150 feet into the heavens with a corresponding spread, and with the grace of an elm? Is there a more luxuriantly-growing tree, almost tropical in appearance, than the heart nut, which will grow as far north as Ontario, Canada? We have in America at least twenty-five kinds of nut-bearing trees that are notable for their beauty as well as for their value.—[Oregon Agriculturist.

Garden Notes.

IN California, September is considered the best month to start a lawn. Naturally, August is a good month to make preparation for the lawn. Weeds are the most discouraging thing in lawnmaking; to weed the lawn is a tedious job to do, an expensive one to hire done. It assuredly pays to reduce the weeds to the minimum at the start. This may be done by coaxing out the weeds and destroying them before planting the lawn, and by using great care in the seed, manure and soil. It is best to get the recleaned seed direct from well-known and reliable seed growers. Poultry manure, if kept in good condition, free of feathers and trash, is better for the lawn than barnyard manure. By removing the poultry droppings daily and keeping them in a covered box or barrel with a layer of dry dust over them, they make the very best fertilizer for lawns, flower beds and kitchen gardens. It is not alone richer than barnyard manure, its elements are more easily utilized, being almost as quick in their action as nitrate of soda, and it is free of the nits and larvae of grubs and flies, while barnyard manure is the habitat of all such. A comparison of these two manures made from the analysis of a ton of well-rotted barnyard manure and a ton of poultry manure gave the following result: Of phosphoric acid there are 48.60 pounds in hen manure to six pounds in barnyard manure; of potash there are forty pounds in the former to ten pounds in the latter, and of nitrogen, sixty-seven pounds to eleven in barnyard manure.

If the plot to be seeded to lawn is overgrown with dry weeds, it is a good plan to burn it over, as this kills many weed seeds and insects, and the residue is excellent fertilizer. In any case, rake up and burn all trash, then wet down and spade the ground, and thus tempt the dormant roots and seeds to show up. When these have covered the ground, turn them under and allow them to rot. Now spade deeply and mix well with manure, then sprinkle and leave for another showing of weeds, which cut out as fast as they appear. When there is no further growth of weeds, spade and grade or level the plot. A gentle slope away from the house is always desirable. Work the soil till it is like meal, then make it firm and compact with a heavy roller. Now it is ready for the seed, which sow with a sieve. The latter can be readily made by taking the bottom out of a small shallow box and tacking a piece of window screen in its place, and will always come handy about the garden. After the ground is thickly sown with the grass seed, cover with sandy loam put on with the sieve, then wet down with the sprinkler. Some mellow soil from the chicken yard is good for the covering, as the fowls will have scratched out all seeds and insects. The planted seeds must not be allowed to dry out, and the lawn will need to be sprinkled every evening in dry weather.—[Rural Press.

Gathering Pine Seed.

WHILE making an eighty-mile tour of two forest-bearing counties recently, I saw more evidence of forest devastation than I imagined possible even under the loose administration of our national reserves characterizing their early care. But these blasted areas show that many years have passed since the conflagrations spread timber ruin in their paths. With a few small exceptions I saw no evidence of late damage, and a feeling of security rests with the lumber owners bordering the reserve as well as with the disinterested friends of forestry whom I met.

The district forester is a firm believer in reforestation. This season will witness the liveliest campaign of cone gathering in the history of the service. This is in part due to the heavy crop of cones maturing this fall, last season proving rather a poor year for pine seed. I saw thousands of trees whose main branches were literally bending with cones and scarcely a tree that did not contain a few. The sugar pines and two or three firs were especially heavy with cones. The yellow pine does not bear well more than once in three years, I was told, and when a good crop is in evidence of all conifers, seed gathering is in consequence more active and profitable.

The cones are usually collected in sacks and spread out on canvass to await the action of the sun in opening the scales. After the seed has fallen out, the wings are removed by a fanning mill, or winnowing by hand. One man said the seed gatherers sometimes found great collections of cones in hollow logs, placed there by the "varmints"—squirrels and chipmunks. These collections furnish a low grade of seed, because the squirrels do not await full maturity of the "pines" before beginning their storage operations. Fortunately for the success of replanting our forests, nature is busy every season in the real lumbering altitudes. This leaves but a small portion that must depend altogether upon artificial planting—an area of immense size, however, when taken by itself. I saw on this trip at an altitude of 3000 to 4000 feet thousands of acres of the old burned-over territory now literally bristling with fine young trees.

They are the lower-lying water sheds in which reforestation is imperative and also most difficult. In these areas are located some of the most important irrigation interests in the State, and those needing the most protection. The Sacramento River annually pours a great surplussage into the bay and always supplies abundant water for the districts dependent. The forest nursing is most necessary in the districts with a less abundant water supply.

New Paving Material.

A recent French invention in paving consists of embedding in concrete fine iron shavings, or iron excelsior. The metallic shavings ordinarily come in sheets or masses, which can be broken apart with difficulty owing to the inter-twining of the filaments and which are somewhat elastic.

In constructing paving blocks, a mould is filled with these iron shavings and the interstices filled with cement grout sufficiently fluid to penetrate the entire mass. The blocks thus formed are said to possess great strength and resistance to abrasion and also (what seems less credible) elasticity under blows or jarring.

According to Cement Age tests made of such blocks are said to have shown a resistance to compression of about 150,000 pounds a square inch and a tensile strength four times that of neat cement. One advantage claimed for this paving is that joints may be almost eliminated, thus doing away with the points where greatest destruction generally occurs. Nothing is said of the opinion which would probably be entertained of this pavement by a contractor who might be required to cut a trench through it.

The cost of construction is said to be the same as that of ordinary macadam, but this would depend largely upon the cost of iron shavings.—[New York Sun.

Light Wine Versus Whisky.

THE following letter was addressed to the editor of The Times by G. R. Washburne, secretary of the National Model License League, Commercial Building, Louisville, Ky. The article referred to was not an editorial. It appeared in the Care of the Body:

"We have read with interest your recent editorial on 'Medicinal Whisky,' in which you express the view that to take pure, light California wine, mixed with about one-third water, or a little good beer, not less than six months of age, is better than to get in the habit of using whisky, 'medicinal' or otherwise.

"We think that the way in which you have framed up your proposition has in it a degree of unfairness. As we understand it, your position is that the use of a beverage containing a small percentage of alcohol is preferable to the use of a beverage containing a larger per cent. of alcohol.

"Most of those who take this view seem to be under the impression that the same amount of each beverage is to be consumed. Of course, any one who knows anything of the effects of alcoholic beverages would admit that it is more temperate to drink a pint of beer at a sitting than to drink a pint of whisky at a sitting. However, it is too generally known to demand proof that whisky glasses are much smaller than the glasses used for the lighter wines and beer, and also that any intoxicating beverage will intoxicate if taken to excess; and further, it is the abuse, and not the use, of any of these beverages that is to be condemned.

"We have noted, from time to time, the tendency on the part of some of those interested in the various branches of the liquor business, to decry the products of those engaged in other branches. We think that such a policy is shortsighted, in view of the fact that in the minds of those who advocate temperance, there is no distinction made between whisky and beer, or brandy and wine.

"In one Southern State, an attempt is being made to prevent the sale of any alcoholic beverage containing more than one-half of 1 per cent. of alcohol. Such a ruling, if applied to California, would destroy the legalized sale of even the lightest wines. Every weakening in the ranks of the opponents of prohibition adds that much strength to the cause of prohibition, and there is nothing more weakening than internal strife.

"The liquor men, no matter what the percentage of alcohol in their products may be, are all in the same class when confronted by threatening confiscation through prohibition. The best way to disarm those who are fighting against the use of whisky, beer and wine, and other drinkables, is to provide against the abuses that will continue, if unchecked, to create public sentiment against the liquor business as a whole.

"The prohibitionist has no idea of compromising. He is bent on the destruction of every phase of the liquor business, and, therefore, it behooves the liquor men to adopt a platform on which they can stand and win recruits from those who are now demanding actual betterment of conditions.

"The solution of the liquor problem must be along the lines of proper regulation in so far as the law is concerned, and the upbuilding of temperance sentiment for the control of the individual appetite."

The article referred to dealt with the liquor question from a hygienic point of view, not from that of prohibition, high license, or a "wide open" system of vending alcoholic beverages. The letter of the correspondent naturally refers to the subject from the point of view of the manufacturer of distilled spirits.

That the use of pure light wines tends toward temperance, while the regular consumption of distilled spirits tends to intemperance, vice, crime and insanity, is so potent a fact as to be incontrovertible. Wine is as old as history. Distillation is a comparatively modern process.

All unprejudiced travelers, all intelligent and observant consular agents, and even some ardent advocates of prohibition are forced to admit that in countries where pure light wines are freely consumed, drunkenness is rare, while in countries where ardent distilled spirits are consumed, it is exceedingly common. In France, of late years, where the adulteration of wine has greatly increased, brandy has come into more common use, and drunkenness has become vastly more prevalent. In Germany, when a man gets down to drinking brandy "straight," he is referred to as a "schnaps bruder," a term of contempt, and he is considered to be on the last rung of the ladder that leads to degradation. There is no country in the world where raw spirits, undiluted, are commonly drunk as they are in the United States. When the editor of the Care of the Body first arrived in the United States, thirty-six years ago, and saw a lot of people at a counter pouring down a mixture, and taking a drink of water on top of it, he supposed they were taking medicine. In England, the only way in which spirits are generally consumed—except among the debased gin drinkers of the slums—is the shape of a "B and S"—brandy and soda—or a "hot Scotch" on a cold night.

That distilled spirits lead much more freely than light wines to disease as well as drunkenness may also be easily proved. A French writer has recently shown that the consumption of distilled liquors creates a state of receptivity, particularly favorable to the development of tuberculosis. This writer has prepared a set of maps, showing the sections where spirits are consumed, and where light wine is still the general beverage. The writer—Jacques Bertillon, in the Revue Scientifique (translated by the Literary Digest)—said:

"On the map of France it may be seen that the northern departments drink, per inhabitant, more brandy than the central and southern departments. The line of separation is represented exactly by the limit of culture of the vine. In the wine-drinking countries, the consumption of brandy is comparatively small; it is considerable in the cider and beer regions. The dwellers in the east of France drink some brandy and much absinthe. The second map represented by Mr. Bertillon shows that the frequency of tuberculosis is much greater, with some exceptions, in the regions where most alcohol is consumed. The phthisis map may be superposed on the alcoholism map. On the other hand, phthisis is more frequent among saloon-keepers than with other merchants (579 deaths annually, in 100,000 persons, as compared with 245.) It is probably alcohol also that makes phthisis twice as frequent in Paris, among men than among women."

Light wine is a beverage—a much more wholesome beverage than coffee, the consumption of which is so enormous in this country. On the continent of Europe they only know coffee as "white coffee," when taken in the morning with a roll—about one-fifth coffee and the rest hot milk—or as a demi-tasse of black coffee after dinner. Here it is consumed by the barrel, and is the prolific cause of many ailments. Wine as stated, is a beverage. Distilled spirits—whisky, brandy or rum—are purely stimulants. It is true, as the correspondent says, that more wine will usually be drunk than whisky. The effects of the alcohol are, however, not so harmful as when taken in a concentrated form in spirits. The fiery liquor chokes a person who is not accustomed to it. When you can swallow it without wincing, it shows that you have seriously hardened the lining of your throat. Average whisky contains about ten times as much alcohol as the average "dry" wine.

In Europe, they sit down and drink their wine in a sensible manner, eating usually therewith a little light food. They may take an hour or so to consume a "shoppen"—less than a pint—of light wine, meantime indulging in conversation. They do not toss it down as if it was medicine. The taking away of chairs and tables from places where alcoholic beverages are dispensed is a long step backward, not forward. It forces people to swallow their liquor in a hurry, which is very bad for the digestive organs, especially when ice-cold beer is consumed—something that is absolutely unknown, and would not for a moment be tolerated in Germany, where they know what beer is.

Another evil of whisky, as compared with light wines, is that a great majority of the whisky made in this country is an adulteration—an imitation. In other words, it is not real whisky at all, but a manufactured or "blended" "dope" composed of neutral spirits, mixed with various compounds, and colored with prune juice. Government statistics show that 85 per cent. of the whisky manufactured in this country a couple of years ago was of this bogus description. Just now the manufacturers of this stuff are making a strenuous effort to convince the authorities at Washington that imitation whisky is real whisky. It is to be hoped that they will fail. As it is, when you buy a drink of whisky, the chances are now seven to one against your getting pure stuff.

On the other hand, it does not pay to adulterate grape juice. While only 15 per cent. of the whisky sold in this country is pure, it is probable that not as much as 15 per cent. of the native wine sold in America is adulterated, and then the adulteration consists almost entirely of sugar and water, except when a little salicylic acid may be added, when wine is shipped to a distance, as is done in the case of shipping beer. This year the California Wine Association is offering the grape growers $5 a ton for their product—$2.50 to be paid in December, and the balance in March. At this rate, grape juice is about as cheap as water.

To encourage the use of pure light wines in place of strong distilled spirits would be, as frequently stated here, a long step in the direction of true, practical temperance reform. It would also aid one of the most important California industries, that is just now in the dumps. As previously suggested here, it would be a good thing if our municipalities would draw a wide line of distinction between establishments where distilled spirits are sold and those in which only pure light native wines are dispensed.

A German-American Hygienist.

THE editor of the Care of the Body had the pleasure of a call from Mr. Candrian, for twenty-five years editor of several widely-circulated German publications at La Crosse, Wis., including a daily and weekly, the "Volks Post," also the "Gesundheit's Rath," a hygienic weekly. Mr. Candrian has evolved some valuable ideas in regard to the hygienic treatment of the body, especially of the Suppression Not Cure.

LOS ANGELES Chinatown is becoming rapidly depopulated, owing, firstly, to the suppression of gambling, and secondly to the abolition of the traffic in opium. It is stated that old Chinamen, who have been addicted all their lives to the use of opium, are quietly dying off, when the drug is taken from them. This shows how difficult—and how dangerous—it is to suddenly suppress any drug habit to which a person has become addicted. By the way, a smoke of opium once or twice a day is not so harmful as cigarettes smoked all day long.

A short time ago much was published in the papers about a wonderful herb that had been discovered in China which was said to be a sure cure for the opium habit. At the time the editor of the Care of the Body expressed the opinion that this, like other asserted cures for drug habits, would prove a failure. It is now announced that this cure, which has been distributed far and wide, has been found to be worthless.

There is only one cure for the drug, or nicotine, or alcohol habit. That is to put the patient on an entirely hygienic diet, composed of non-stimulating vegetable foods, containing plenty of organic salts that feed the nerves, and meantime to increase his eliminative powers by sun, air and sweat baths.

THE story is an old one of the party of tired travelers who entered a house decorated by a peculiar sign and demanded oysters. Just Decision.

THE Federal District Court of Appeals in St. Louis recently sustained a decision of the United States Circuit Court of the southern district of Iowa, giving a judgment for $20,000 to a patient who had suffered from medical malpractice. The petition stated that Johnson was operated on at Keokuk, Iowa, for appendicitis March 1907. The wound failed to heal and caused Johnson much pain. A second operation revealed that a piece of gauze twenty-four inches long and nine inches wide had been left in the wound.

This is only common justice. A physician who is guilty of such carelessness should be as amenable to financial punishment as a contractor who does a rotten job. The ordinary risks of surgical operations are great enough, without adding thereto those due to carelessness.

Smelter Smoke.

AN Associated Press dispatch from Redding, Cal., published in The Times stated that farmers throughout the southern part of Shasta county are organizing associations in an effort to secure regulation of the smoke question, and to compel the smelters of Coram and Kennett to adopt smoke-consuming devices. Land owners assert that not only the forests near the smelting plants, but the orchards and truck gardens as far south as Tehama county line are being blighted by the fumes from the reduction works. Associations have been formed at Olinda, Cloverdale and Clear Creek. Others are organizing, and a mass meeting has been called to meet at Anderson, Friday night. Conservative farmers assert that unless steps are taken at once, the smoke will blot out all vegetation.

As previously suggested here, would it not be a good thing to go slow before we encourage the location of smelters—or at least of copper smelters—in the vicinity of Los Angeles? It is a good thing to encourage all kinds of legitimate enterprises, but it would certainly be a poor kind of "improvement" that would blast a large area of orchards and gardens for the sake of maintaining a single industrial undertaking. After all is said, horticulture, in its various forms of utility and beauty, is the leading industry of Southern California.

The smelter people claim that smelters can be made innocuous. It should be up to them to prove this, before they are encouraged to go ahead in this section of the country.

Sterilized Milk an Undesirable Food.

MANY times it has been explained here that sterilized, boiled, or condensed milk is an undesirable, starvation food, because the high degree of heat has changed or destroyed the essential organic salts which the milk contains, as well as coagulating the albumen. Where a person takes a little of such milk with other food it does not, of course, make much difference, but where infants are fed exclusively on this milk it is a question of life and death.

Until recently these statements have been condemned or ridiculed by many. Of late, however, members of the medical fraternity are beginning to come around to a recognition of this truth, as stated in the Care of the Body. For instance, Dr. Louis Fischer, of New York, a recognized medical authority, was recently quoted as follows in the New York Herald:

"This medical craze for sterilization and pasteurization is a fad, and it is one concerning which there is much misunderstanding and no little misrepresentation.

"The fact is, men who have made a careful study of the subject are coming to recognize more fully the fact that sterilization and pasteurization of milk, instead of being a cure-all, as many physicians and others would have us think, is really an additional evil. In my hospital practice I uniformly use the raw milk, merely modifying or diluting it to such a degree as to adapt it to the assimilative capacity of the child under treatment.

"On the question of sterilized milk the weight of the evidence seems to show that the process, while preventing undue fermentation, so changes certain of the natural ferments and some of the fats that the milk is less easily digested and less nutritious. The sterilization of milk is advocated chiefly to destroy pathogenic bacteria. The profession has been educated to the belief that we must kill all living micro-organisms in food.

"When the method was first advocated, the profession adopted it in all parts of the world, so that thousands of babies have been brought up on sterilized milk. Within the last few years sentiment has changed. Sterilization accomplishes the destruction of pathogenic bacteria, but it also possesses certain disadvantages and it must be constantly borne in mind that the spores of pathogenic bacteria cannot be destroyed by the ordinary process of sterilization.

"As I have said before, sterilization or pasteurization does not remove the toxic dangers resulting from the spores of pathogenic bacteria. On the contrary, these processes add to the already existing evil by destroying the nutritive qualities of the milk and producing scurvy where it did not exist before. It is a great mistake to attempt to obtain clean milk by sterilization or pasteurizing it after it has been mixed with dirt. One of our most eminent bacteriologists, Prof. Vaughn, of Ann Arbor, Mich., maintains that, no matter how high the temperature may be to which the milk is subjected, even though it be carried beyond 300 degrees Fahrenheit, it is impossible to destroy the toxine generated in milk by the micro-organisms."

When you see any statement in regard to food in the Care of the Body, you may safely bet your next to the last dollar that the statement is at least approximately correct. When a man has made a close and conscientious study of these questions for forty-five years, as the editor of the Care of the Body has done, he should either understand them pretty well, or else stop writing about them.

Dietetic Heresies.

THE editor of the Care of the Body sent a copy of one of Dr. Woods Hutchinson's misleading and harmful articles to Dr. Alexander Haig of London, who has a world-wide reputation as the chief proponent of the uric-acid theory of disease. The following comments thereon have been received from Dr. Haig:

"The cutting from the Saturday Evening Post caused some laughter, and I quite agree with you that it is unworthy of other notice.

"My feeling is that the primary fault is in the people themselves who wish to be told what is pleasant rather

Your Eyesight Is Important

And This Is Important Because It Concerns Your Eyes.

Not one person in ten who wears eyeglasses wears the right kind. Thousands and thousands who need them are not wearing them, and their eyesight is steadily growing weaker. They could enjoy perfect eye-health by wearing the right kind.

The whole problem lies in those three words—THE RIGHT KIND—the kind that helps you, the kind that not only corrects the sight of each eye, but also removes the strain from the tired muscles and strengthens them.

You can't get the right kind of lenses by going to an optician who confines his examination to letting you read a string of letters and having you look at a few black and white lines.

There are six muscles controlling the movement of your eyeball which are of primary importance in giving or depriving you of perfect eyesight, for unless all six of these muscles work in perfect accord you will not only have the usual headaches, nervousness, etc., but you will have distorted vision. One of these muscles improperly controlled can do you irreparable damage, not only by wearing itself out, but by actually changing the shape of your eyeball and making it necessary for you to go through life with impaired sight.

If you have a headache, if you are dizzy, if you are nervous, your stomach may be out of order, but the chances are about ten to one that there is something the matter with your eyes.

I know that I can help you if you will talk with me. I can show you how to be rid of all this headache and eyeache and can bring your eyes to a normal, healthy condition.

Miss Jennie Williams, a former Los Angeles school teacher: "Previous to coming to you I had taken a year's vacation because of continuous headaches and nervousness, but with no relief when school work was resumed. Your treatment effectually cured me of these disturbances."

than what is true, and so long as this is so, so long as it pays, they will always find some one ready to supply what is wanted, just as there is always some one ready to deal out alcohol, opium, and other poisons regardless of the harm done by them.

"It is useless to go for the people who pander to the popular tastes, you must educate the people to understand that life holds some things which are better. Till they have found this out, they must go on suffering one way or another, it is impossible to prevent it.

"The object of life is not that man may live in a stagnant calm—that would be death in life—but that through the sorrows and sufferings and trials of life he may learn to see the truth and hold on to it. Carlyle said: 'We can see the stars when it grows dark enough.' These people need rheumatism and need other sorrow and suffering to let them see that their whole life is wrong, not merely in eating meat, but in everything. Life is not an end in itself, but a means to an end, and this makes all the difference in the way one regards it. The really unfortunate people are those who do not suffer, for they may never see the stars at all.

"You cannot make people virtuous by any act of Legislature. They must learn these lessons, and truth will set them free, when they follow it in place of their own imagination. Meanwhile, I suppose we must do what we can to speak the truth so far as we know it, but truth goes by its own weight and power, and needs no backing from you and me.

"It is always a crime to tell lies, but neither Woods Hutchinson nor any one else could do harm if the people did not wish to be deceived. Their suffering is part of their education. Eventually they will learn to follow truth and all will be well.

"So long as they follow selfishness and greed and do not refuse fraud, so long as they turn their backs on truth, justice and love, so long must they continue to suffer. If not deceived by Woods Hutchinson, they will be by some one else. They must alter their outlook on life or there is no help for them. The people really responsible for all the evil of the day are those who have told lies about the meaning of life.

"Of course those of us who see the truth have it as our duty to speak out in spite of any quantity of sneers and abuse, but I for one do not expect to save many people, because, so long as they live for wrong objects, they have truth and justice against them, and this is more than sufficient to seal their fate.

"I tell people in this country to refuse all credence to human authority and to follow truth alone. If they ask how to tell what is truth, I say, test it by deeds, by the power it gives. If there is no power there is no truth. If they believe Woods Hutchinson, their rheumatism will be neither cured nor prevented. If they believe you, it will. Nothing more is required."

A Hand-Me-Down.

A WELL-KNOWN advertising expert, responding to the toast "Sartorial Progress" at the banquet of the recent convention of the Tailors' National Association, spoke somewhat as follows:

"I am glad that you clothiers who advertise nowadays print pictures of men's and boys' fashions. Thus you smarten up the country and tend to abolish the dreadful custom of cutting down dad's suit to boy's size. I remember how in the distant past my little brother rushed whimpering into the sitting-room one night.

"What's the matter?" I asked, sympathetically.

"Oh," he murmured, "pa's had his beard shaved off, and now I guess I've got to wear those old red whiskers!"—[Lippincott's.

Not a Question of Diet.

HIRAM MAXIM, the inventor of the splendid "silencer," said in the course of a recent interview in New York:

"That infringement case, too, was won. The opposition had a lot of witnesses, but they were all badly coached. As badly coached, indeed, as—but listen.

"A phrenologist visited a village. He offered to examine any one's bumps for a dime. A burly blacksmith's helper said he would have his bumps examined, and as he took his place another man whispered in the phrenologist's ear:

"'He's very fond of veal.'

"At this hint the phrenologist nodded gratefully. He then read out the blacksmith's bumps, credited him with all sorts of virtues, and finally he said in a loud, positive tone:

"'Now I come to your diet. Gents, if there is one thing in the world our subject dotes on it is veal. Why——'

"But the sentence was never finished. The blacksmith rose suddenly and knocked the phrenologist down.

"'Blast ye!' he roared. 'What's it got to do with you if I did steal a calf?'"

Cancer Cure.

SEVERAL varieties of poultice and plasters are successfully used for the extraction of external cancers. This method is vastly better than the knife, for it is manifestly absurd to suppose that by means of the knife every tiny rootlet of the cancer can be removed, and if only a faint trace of one is left, it will come again. Even after a poultice, if the wrong method of life which has caused the cancer is continued, it will return, or disease will appear in some other form.

Here is a recipe for a cancer poultice. It is about the same as one that has previously been published in The Times, having been obtained by the editor of the Care of the Body through a friend from a veteran of the Soldiers' Home, in Los Angeles county. The sender of the following recipe is Mrs. Margaret R. Breen of 1951 Lincoln avenue, San Diego, Cal.:

"A piece of sticking plaster is put over the cancer, with a circular piece cut out of the center, a little larger than the cancer, so that the cancer and a small circular rim of healthy skin next to it is exposed. Then a plaster, made of chloride of zinc, blood root and wheat flour, is spread on a piece of muslin, the size of this circular opening, and applied to the cancer for twenty-four hours. On removing it, the cancer will be found burned into, and appear of the color and hardness of an old shoe sole, and the circular rim outside of it will appear white and parboiled, as if scalded by hot steam. The wound is now dressed, the outside rim soon separates, the cancer comes out in a hard lump, and the place heals up. The plaster kills the cancer, so that it sloughs like dead flesh, and never grows again.

"The remedy was discovered by Dr. King of London, has been used by him for years with unfailing success, and not a case has been known of the reappearance of the cancer when this remedy has been applied."

To the above, it should be added that it is of great importance in such cases to adopt a light, unstimulating diet, that will aid in throwing out impurities from the blood. Such a diet should be composed mainly of fresh fruit and raw green stuff.

English as She Is Spoke.

THE teacher of "conversational French" in a certain eastern college was a lively mademoiselle, "just over."

One bright afternoon she stopped two girls very excitedly. She wanted to buy an "eponge pour la bain," but did not know what to ask for.

"Bath sponge. Tell the salesman you want a big bath sponge to take home with you," said the girls in chorus, and they accompanied her to the village drug store.

A young clerk stepped forward. Mademoiselle advanced bravely.

"Please," she said, smilingly, "will you kindly take me home and give me a big sponge bath?"—[Success Magazine.

QUAINT SCHOOL CUSTOMS.

MANY OF THEM SO OLD THAT THEIR ORIGIN IS FORGOTTEN.

[London Daily Mail:] J. L. Paton, headmaster of Manchester Grammar School, in a speech at Rochdale, referred to a custom at Rugby School which forbids a boy of less than three years' standing to turn up his trousers and insists on his doing so after that period.

The custom is only a minor instance of the quaint practices that exist at all of the great public schools, and are maintained with religious care, though in many cases their origin is obscure or unknown. The Shrove Tuesday tossing of the pancake at Westminster School, with its ensuing scramble for the largest fragment, which gains for its possessor a guinea from the dean, is perhaps the best known among them.

A curious custom at Marlborough requires every boy to bring to school with him a cushion, technically termed a "kish"—with the "i" long. This article is his inseparable companion in school time, and in addition to the ordinary functions of a cushion is employed to carry books from one form room to another.

At Shrewsbury School at the beginning of each term "hall elections" are held for the posts of hall crier, hall constable, hall postman and hall scavengers. The genial brutality of youth often selects for the position of hall crier either the most nervous boy in the school or one who is afflicted with a stammer.

The new boy in the schoolhouse at Rugby is early called upon to take his part in "house singing." At this function, which is held in one of the dormitories, he has to render a song to the satisfaction of his audience, the penalty being the swallowing of a mouthful of soapy water.

Another ancient school custom is the parade of the Christ's Hospital bluecoat boys before the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House on St. Matthew's Day, when the "Grecians," who correspond to "sixth formers," elsewhere, receive a guinea each and the rank and file of the school are presented with new shillings.

The Green Folk.

Oh, when you see the soft leaves shaking
  Tho' scarce a wind-breath stirs this way,
You'll know that from sweet slumber waking
  The green folk are afoot today.
Oh, when you see the guelder roses
  Move softly, slowly, to and fro,
You'll guess that gath'ring silv'ry posies
  The green folk linger as they go.

Oh, when you see pale shadows falling
  Amid the sunlight on the grass,
You'll know amid the leaves they're calling
  One to another as they pass.
And, if you list 'mid bees' soft humming,
  'Mid faint, sweet sounds of growing things,
You'll hear like whisp'ring water coming
  The flutter of the fairy wings.

Oh, well for you to feel them near you,
  The shimm'ring birchen-leaves between,
To breathe your wishes where they'll hear you,
  The wee folk gay in Lincoln green.
Oh, sure for you all spells are broken,
  Good fortune's speeding down your way,
If but you read aright the token
  That green folk are afoot today.

The Peril of the Iceberg.

The fear of icebergs has been partly removed in recent years by wireless telegraphy, but their presence on the seas is still menacing enough to cause anxiety to many a captain.

There is the unparalleled case of the steamer Portia in Notre Dame Bay. In clear daylight an iceberg was sighted, and passengers and crew begged the captain to approach nearer in order that they might inspect and photograph it. The Portia, therefore, was steered close to the towering sides of the mighty berg, whose highest pinnacles glistened several hundred feet above the sea. Then the unexpected happened. There was an explosion like the shock of a volcanic eruption, and the mighty berg was riven in sunder. One of the pieces split apart, grew topheavy, and toppled over, its base far under water catching the Portia and lifting her high and dry some ten or twelve feet above the sea. The mighty overturning of the berg created enormous swells, and these huge waves were the only thing that saved the ship from destruction. The weight of the ship caught on its shelf of ice kept the berg from turning a complete somersault, and a huge swell picked up the vessel and launched her again, stern first, in the sea.—[George Ethelbert Walsh, in Harper's Weekly.

Out of the Question.

"Here is something very elegant," says the salesman, piloting the lady through the display of beds. "This is our latest design in twin beds, and is one of the most popular things we sell. I would suggest that you cannot do better than to buy them."

"Twin beds?" replies the lady. "They are pretty, but—but we haven't twins!"—[Chicago Post.
